"THE VIKING'S SKULL"

ONCE upon a time there was a Viking with a genuine Viking love of blood and horrors. Now, this old primitive chanced to kill a man, dig out his skull for a drinking cup, and serve wine in it to the murdered man's daughter. That the fair lady used her bodkin to good effect and slew her noble lord upon the spot only improves our appetite.

When we read that the ancient legend has been resuscitated and worked out on modern and up-to-date lines, we may rest assured that a whole bookful, as well as a whole skullful, of horrors awaits our supping. John R. Carling's story, "The Viking's Skull," (Little, Brown & Co.,) in its new century dress, has many little attractive furbishings in the shape of archaeology, physiology, and hypnoticologies.

The heroine may not be so tall and fair as the ancient Viking maid, but she is perfectly capable in the matter of bodkins, tonsorially and psychologically speaking. She deftly squeezes the villain's last drop of confession into the metaphorical and literal skull. Then, when she has restored the hero to his rightful possessions and established his right to an honorable descent, (unless, to be sure, you are squeamish as to Vikings,) then does the self-effacing heroine betake herself to a delightfully bookish oblivion, all for fear her true lover, who had never quite understood her before, might chance to find out she was not a bad character after all. In common with most book heroines, she gets her satisfaction in cheating the hero of his chance of showing the noble art of gratitude. Our sneaking suspicion is that the love of appreciation counts rather more in real human nature; but, after all, that is neither here nor there in elucidating the mystery of the skull. Whose skull, did we say, it really was? But pshaw! We are not telling tales out of school.

The Household Lawyer.

The new edition of "Everybody's Law Book," by J. Alexander Koones, LL. B., of the New York Bar, which the Hitchcock Publishing Company is bringing out, is fully revised, enlarged, and brought down to date. It deals with legal rights and remedies, business forms, American law, the "Law of the Family," differences in some of the laws of the States of the Union, summaries of State statutes, legal "forms," terms, and phrases, &c. The volume appears in two styles of binding—library and "law."

TWO FICTION SUCCESSES.

The Man from America

By Mrs. Henry De La Pasture.
$1.50

A delightful story of agreeable people, laid amid the most pleasant surroundings. There is no villain, and the characters are not led through hazardous and thrilling adventures. The character-drawing is excellent, the situations amusing and the atmosphere of the story is of the kind that leaves a good feeling.

Peter's Mother

By Mrs. Henry De La Pasture.
Author of "The Man from America"
Fifth Edition. $1.50

The story hinges upon the love of Peter's Mother for her son, "a bear and a cub," and her beautiful love for John Crewys, a strong, splendid man. It is a piece of good literature—altogether one of the very best novels of the year.

Mr. Bindloss takes us into the open air. In Henry Alton of Somasco Ranch he has drawn a character to awaken compassion and profound admiration.

A romance that shows the hand of a born novelist envelops the girl who crossed unwillingly Alton's path and found her aristocratic standards put to shame before the nice code of the rancher.

SILAS STRONG
Emperor of the Woods

Irving Bacheller's new novel has all the freshness of his first great success—"EBEN HOLDEN." Its bearing on a great problem, its humanity and simplicity suggest Uncle Tom's Cabin. Silas Strong, the "one-word man," is among the most unique and loveable characters in fiction. He is a droll, amusing and heroic figure. Equally irresistible are:

Sinth, his sister.
Socky and Sue } two quaint children, and Zeb, the bear-dog, with a cross-eye and a serious countenance, but a most cheerful disposition.

Chatwit
The Man-talk Bird

Philip Verrill Mighels, author of "Bruvver Jim's Baby," has written another story of the West, wholly out of the rut of conventional fiction. Chatwit is a magpie who learns "man-talk" while in captivity and escapes to the wilds to astonish birds and beasts alike with his weird accomplishment.

"An ingenious story of wild animal life. It is a tale that increases interest in wild creatures by bringing us into close touch with them."—Boston Herald.

Their Husbands' Wives

This is the initial volume of HARPERS NOVELETTES edited by W. D. Howells and H. M. Alden. Each of the novelettes is by a well known writer, and, as the title subtly indicates, bears on an interesting phase of married life. It contains novelettes by Mark Twain, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Abby Meguire Roach, Emery Pottle, George Hibbard and Grace Ellery Channing.

"This first volume with its even excellence has established at once a high standard for the series."—Brooklyn Times.

The Rise Of American Nationality

Volume 13 of the American Nation (the Harper's great 27-volume history) is now published. It is by Dr. Kendric Charles Babcock, president of the University of Arizona. The War of 1812 is the chief topic treated.

SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS

THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, MARCH 31, 1906.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

NEXT Saturday, April 7, the Spring announcement number of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW will be published. The most important and most valuable feature of this special number is always the classified list of Spring books, a list restricted to the publications of the first half of the year, and including books already in circulation as well as many more still in the press. This list, carefully compiled and intelligently classified, has been found most useful by book sellers and book buyers alike all over the country. Alone it gives a special value to the number of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW in which it appears, and together with the many columns of the publishers' own announcements, which this enlarged number invariably contains, it forms a reference catalogue of the new books of the season not obtainable elsewhere in so complete and convenient a shape. But the Spring announcement number, coming at a period of great activity in the publishing business, when noteworthy new books are rapidly produced, naturally, with the increase of space at the editor's disposal, contains a larger number than usual of reviews by expert writers in various departments of literature. Among the contributors to next week's number will be Mr. James Huneker, who will write in appreciation of Mr. Arthur Symons, reviewing that distinguished English author's latest book; Prof. Brander Matthews, who will have an article on "Some New Editions of Old Plays," including those of Robert Greene and Beaumont and Fletcher; Mr. Bliss Carman, whose subject will be "Henry Holt as a Novelist"; Miss Florence Wilkinson, Mr. Edward Cary, Mrs. Nancy Huston Banks, Mr. H. W. Boynton, Mr. Montgomery Schuyler, and Mr. Richard Aldrich. Besides these special contributions there will be the usual full list of contents, short reviews of books of the hour, editorial comment, correspondence, and the news of the book world at home and abroad.

THE uproar in England at the prospect of the famous Bodleian First Folio of Shakespeare crossing the Atlantic, to find an abiding place in some American institution of art or literature, is natural enough. It is not so much that the Bodleian now needs a First Folio. It has one—such as it is. But the thought of treasure after treasure being carried away to the land of the uncouth is dispiriting to the cultured Briton; wherefore a strong effort is making to keep this particular treasure where it belongs. It is one of the earliest copies, perhaps the first, certainly the best, of the Heminge and Condell book that came from the press. It was sent to the Bodleian at Oxford, and for generations was there, chained to a table. Then it disappeared. One of the librarians exercising his prerogative had sold it, with other useless volumes, for money to buy new books. He had a splendid new Third Folio, with a lot more plays than were contained in the First Folio, and he never dreamed that so much value would ever be attached to the first edition of the plays of so unlearned a writer as William Shakespeare. A short while ago the volume, which had passed through many hands, was rediscovered in the public gaze, and the librarian of the Bodleian tried to secure it. But he was informed that the owner had been offered $15,000 for it—by a reprehensible American millionaire—and that he would not part with it for a smaller sum. Hinc illae lachrymae.

AMERICAN millionaires have long had a fondness for copies of the First Folio. An American lady, now deceased, used to give private lectures in the larger cities on Shakespeare and related subjects, and one of her discourses was upon the publication of the First Folio, its history, its enormous literary value, its merits and its imperfections. Of course she spoke also of the enormous commercial value attached in these days to a true copy of the Folio. A year after delivering this interesting lecture in one of the populous Western cities, she returned to that place to learn that the wealthy husband of one of the ladies in her literary class had bought a copy of the First Folio, and desired her to inspect it. She dined that evening with the family, in solemn state, and after dinner there was a solemn procession to the library, where the much-prized volume was ceremoniously produced. The lady gasped when she saw it, but her natural wit saved her, and she recalled the tactful remark Dr. Phillips Brooks always used at a christening, "Well, this is a baby!" She adapted it. "Well," she exclaimed, "this is a First Folio!" Yet it was nothing of the sort, but an octavo lithographic reproduction of a photographic fac simile. What the happy millionaire had paid for it, no one ever knew, but its market price would not have exceeded $2.50.

MR. OSCAR WEGELIN, compiler of "Early American Plays," "Early American Poetry," and other bibliographical works, has appreciably increased the measure of his service to students of American literature by his "List of the Separate Writings of William Gilmore Simms of South Carolina." This was handsomely printed at the Literary Collector Press, and is published by the author at 29 West Forty-second Street, this city. The edition is limited to 110 copies. Mr. Wegelin places Simms second only to Cooper in the list of American novelists, and names "Guy Rivers," "Mellichampe," "The Yemassee," and "The Kinsmen" as the best of his novels. Simms was born in Charleston in 1806, and lived until 1870. His first writings were in verse. Mr. Wegelin enumerates nine titles of poetical productions (though one of these is doubtful) recorded before the appearance of "Martin Faber" in 1833. "Guy Rivers" was published in 1834, "The Yemassee: A Romance of Carolina," and "The Partisan" in 1835. Works better known to the voracious reader of this hour, we fancy, are "Beauchampe," 1842, "The Forayers," 1855, and "Eutaw," 1856. Simms was also a biographer, an essayist, a dramatist, something of a Shakespearean scholar, and a political pamphleteer.

WORKS of popular theology multiply apace. No matter how antique the theology is, and some recently promulgated theories were already aged in the early centuries of the Christian era, such books have many readers. Cast in the form of fiction they are always popular. "A Common Sense Hell" (Dillingham) is a book with an alluring title, if an audacious one, which is sure to have prodigious success, equal perhaps to that of the "Letters of a Self-Made Millionaire to His Son," though the appeal is somewhat different. Arthur Richard Rose is the name of the author, and he dedicates his book to Theodore Roosevelt, because that distinguished gentleman has skill and takes joy "in stripping off the husk, while preserving the kernel, of anything whose kernel is worth preserving, and whose husk obscures that worth." The book contains a series of letters between a father and son. The son, at college, desires to be a minister of the Gospel, and asks the advice of his parent, who is no churchgoer, but who turns out to be an adept in ingenious and fluent homiletic argument. In the end the son resolves to be a minister any way, and, presumably, to preach his father's doctrine.

THE burning at Oxford, not in the university precincts, but by the librarian of the Oxford Union Society, of the two novels of Guy Thorne (Mr. Ranger Gull) seems to have been something of a joke. Yet, joke or no joke, the books are gone from the library shelves, and, as no explanation of the matter that is at all explanatory is forthcoming, the world is left to wonder why the thing was done. Was it due to a feeling that such very ordinary fiction ought never to have had the public sanction of a Bishop of the Church of England? Or was it feared that the discussion of religious topics in the books was not of the kind to benefit the multitude? No matter—Mr. Ranger Gull and his books will benefit hugely by the splendid advertisement. The placing of the famous books of Mark Twain, "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer," on the restricted list of the Brooklyn Library, however, is not likely to increase the popularity of those delightful tales. They were already as popular as good books well can be. Some folks read them through every year—and they are worth it.

MR. JESSE BENEDICT CARTER'S new book, called "The Religion of Numa, and Other Essays on the Religion of Ancient Rome," (Macmillan,) involves some interesting excursions in the bypaths of classical learning. Mr. Carter divides Roman history, arbitrarily, of course, but conveniently, into five epochs, those of the legendary kings and the semi-historical kings, the first half of the republic, the last half of the republic, and the beginning of the empire, with the renaissance of religion under Augustus. He acknowledges indebtedness to Mr. W. Warde Fowler's "Roman Festivals," to which he modestly hopes his little book may serve as "a simple introduction," and to Georg Wissowa's "Religion und Cultus der Römer," Mr. Carter having been a pupil of Wissowa. But this little book has plenty of new ideas and good ones. The author rejects, of course, the "Indo-Germanic" theory and some of the other beliefs of the "comparative philology" of the nineteenth century. The days of the usurpation of "comparative philology" are over. He shows that the animism and ancestor worship of the early Romans are not to be so easily accounted for. His chapter on the growth and development of the many gods of early Rome, from the simple and serviceable few of the hut-dwellers, is particularly illuminative and readable.

THE John Lane Company puts forward a timely reprint of "The Mountain Lovers," by Fiona Macleod, now known to be the late William Sharp. This was originally published in 1895, the year after "Pharais" first made the name of Fiona Macleod known, and the same year as "The Sin-Eater." This tale of Oona and Nial the Soulless, of the shepherds and the Cailliach, of Sorcha and Alan, of love and madness, and the mystery of the hills, is a beautifully harmonious and significant combination of English and Celtic words. A better one could not have been chosen for the use of readers who do not yet know Fiona Macleod, and desire to know something of the quality of the writings put forward under that pseudonym, which have been lately so much talked about.

THE book reviewers should take comfort. There are not so many books, after all. The Secretary of the International Bibliographical Institute in Brussels reports that since the invention of printing 13,063,000 books have been published. Of these 20.46 per cent. only have been literary, a classification which, presumably, includes poetry and fiction. Thirteen million books in all languages in something less than 500 years is not so many, being only a mere bagatelle of 26,000 a year, of which fewer than half, surely, were printed in the English language. We have no means of knowing how the Brussels statistics were compiled.

A NEW edition of the romances of the once widely celebrated G. P. R. James is coming from the presses of the A. L. Burt Company of this city. At hand are two volumes, neatly bound in green cloth, with spirited illustrations on calendered paper. They are "Darnley: A Romance of the Times of Henry VIII. and Cardinal Wolsey," and "Richelieu: A Story of the Reign of Louis XIII." The last-named has one extraordinary feature, for a romance by James. It does not begin with a "solitary horseman." On the contrary, one must read two and a half pages without encountering any horsemen at all, and then there are four of them all at once. But "Darnley" is in the good old manner. "On the morning of the twenty-fourth day of March, 1520, a traveler was seen riding in the small ragged crossroad," &c. So it begins. It has been said many times that James's romantic narratives are better in their way than the stories of the late romantic revival. That may not be true. They are not masterworks of literature. But they used to be stirring books to read, and we have no doubt that many readers of the young generation will like them.

War and the People.

"The Arbiter in Council" is the title of an anonymous volume which The Macmillan Company is publishing. It is a series of arguments on war—its causes and consequences, its relation to the duel, political economy, and Christianity. The "principal author," "The Arbiter," as the anonymous editor calls him, was a well-known English Member of Parliament and an intimate friend of Cobden and Bright. He resigned from Parliament in 1885, because he was "disappointed" by Gladstone's second administration, and from then on gave up his life to "study and philanthropy." The present book is the result of a "conference," called by the "Arbiter." Besides himself and the editor there were six others who attended this "conference," and thus the chapel, the church, the law, the city, the army, and the navy, were represented and their relations to war discussed. The names are all fictitious, at the request of their owners. Brief biographical notes on the six men in the volume are provided in the editor's introduction.

Poems and a Novel.

It is reported that Rex E. Beach's new novel, "The Spoilers," scheduled to leave the Harper press on April 4, has already in advance of publication gone into a large third edition. The volume of poems by Louise Morgan Sill, "In Sun or Shade," already announced, appears on the same date, and is interesting not only because books of serious verse are now so rarely ventured by any but those publishers who make a cult of the budding muse, but because of the unusual average of lyrical quality maintained by Mrs. Sill in her already somewhat numerous occasional pieces contributed to magazines. Her book contains many of these occasional pieces and some new matter.

◆

Gordon Holmes.

Gordon Holmes, whoever he may be, appears to be in greater favor as a teller of light mystery tales than as a writer of detective stories. His publisher announces that his latest book, "The Arncliffe Puzzle," in the few weeks it has been out, has far outdistanced the sales of his earlier story, "A Mysterious Disappearance," which was one of the favorites last year.

NEWS OF THE BOOK WORLD ABROAD.

LONDON, March 30.—John Lane will publish this Spring a book by Walter Frewen Lord, entitled "The Mirror of the Century." It is a study of the great Victorian novelists as they reflect changes in the social life of the nineteenth century. John Murray will publish next week the long-expected work about Elizabeth Montague, the "queen of the bluestockings," by Mrs. Montague's great-grandniece, Emily J. Climenson.

⁂

THE Macmillans announce a new study of the Tobas, an isolated tribe of the Niligri hills, whose peculiar characteristics have excited great interest in the minds of ethnologists. Sir George Newnes will publish a series of illustrated volumes dealing with the great art galleries of Europe.

⁂

W. C. MACKENZIE has written, in a compact form, a complete history of the Scottish Highlands, in which he undertakes to trace the various stages of the social, economic, religious, and political development of the Highland people, down to the present day. Archibald Marshall has just completed a novel called "Richard Baldock," which Messrs. Alston Rivers & Co. will publish.

⁂

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO. announce a new volume of sermons by Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Suffragan Bishop of Stepney. Fisher Unwin will publish in April "Religious Songs of Connacht," by Dr. Douglas Hyde, the noted authority on Irish literature.

STIRRING TALES OF ADVENTURE.

ANDY ADAMS, whose "Log of a Cowboy" won such well-deserved recognition as an account of the vanished life of the Western cattleman as it really was, is the author of a new series of sketches of the same life just published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. with the title "Cattle Brands." The merit of Mr. Adams's work lies not at all in any literary skill of wording or presentation. To tell the truth, his campfire stories are often in the present volume as prolix and involved as the common run of real stories told by real men by real campfires. The fact remains that both the manner and the matter are somehow characteristic. If the reader misses the picturesque epithets and the theatrical attitudes of the cowboy of the stage and of the romances of Mr. Alfred Henry Lewis, if he finds the yarns somewhat tame on the whole, and the cattlemen not so ready as he had thought with gun or retort, he has the comfort of feeling that the author's very lack of the practiced storymaker's imagination, of his art of dramatic climax, telling dialogue, and romantic suggestion, is a guarantee of a certain faithfulness to what he has seen and known.

Mr. Adams is so far from inventing endings, indeed, that many of his anecdotes simply "frazzle out," if one may use that expression in a dignified literary publication; and some of the sketches, like that called "Drifting North," for instance, are no more than hashes of reminiscent talk. On the other hand "Seigerman's Per Cent" tells with superfluous circumstance how three scamps from the range lived all Winter at the expense of a German hotel keeper with political ambitions; and "Bad Medicine" relates the adventures of an "outfit" upon the march with a poor relation of a patent medicine millionaire in charge as foreman. There's humor of a rude frontiersman type in both of these yarns, as again in the story of "The Double Trail."

This last is supposed to be a romance told to a tenderfoot in the old Cherokee Strip, and narrates the circumstances of the passing of one "outfit" by another and more ambitious "outfit." Each was in charge of a drove of some thousands of cattle, and there were words and shootings—even killings. Another sketch tells stories of the famous Texas Rangers, and another is all about the college young man who went West and got the fever of the plains so upon him that he could never return to his old life. On the whole, of course, the new book will seem to most readers too much like an echo of the "Log of a Cowboy" to allow of its producing the same effect of sincerity.

MR. LLOYD OSBOURNE'S nine stories of the South Sea Islands ("Wild Justice," Appleton) are told with a Kiplingesque vigor, and well illustrate their title. All are eminently readable—not overweighted with tragedy, as is the wont of tales that deal with the remote regions of the earth. The slurs upon missionaries are, however, both unjust and cheap. Heroic self-sacrifice can go no further than in such lives as those of the Patons of the New Hebrides, nor are those who offer themselves upon the altar of a high ideal mostly fools. Mr. Osbourne's sailors and natives are excellent. He has succeeded in giving to the former that touch of childlikeness which the roughest of seafaring men seem never wholly to lose. He makes equally evident the moral astigmatism so often a marked characteristic of these children of the sea. There is such an unmistakable wild flavor to the Kanakas that we take for granted they are not less true to life. It is a sort of by-product of the stories that they emphasize the debasing effect upon the average white man of contact with the inferior races.

That the South Sea Islands are convenient places of refuge for men who have "done something" is a new aspect in which to regard them, but this fact is the pivotal point of more than one of Mr. Osbourne's stories—though it seems the strong hand of the law is likely to clutch the culprit even in such retreats.

The book well preserves the languorous tropical atmosphere of these most foreign of foreign parts. The fascination of the unusual pervades its pages. Of some of the tales the motif is too trivial to command interest, but all are written in a crisp, vivacious style and possess peculiar value from the fact of the author's intimate knowledge of the scenes and people he portrays.

A GOOD story for boys is Herbert Strang's "Brown of Moukden," (Putnams.) It is an exciting narrative, reciting the adventures of an English youth—Jack Brown—the son of a British merchant doing business in Moukden at the outbreak of the recent war between Russia and Japan. Mr. Strang is a bold and vigorous story teller, not without a fund of general knowledge—which many bold and ingenuous story tellers dispense with—and a considerable command both of the King's own speech and of the pidgin English of the East. The elder Brown being arrested and spirited away by Russians, at the instigation of a wicked Pole who is a rival contractor of supplies, his son Jack is by the authorities shipped off to Europe. However, resolved to find his father, he escapes from the train at Harbin and smuggles himself into Vladivostok, where he gets the paternal securities aboard a British ship. Then he journeys through Manchuria disguised as a Chinaman, falls among the famous Chunchuses, and becomes one of the band of Mr. Ah, an old man of deep learning and many wise saws, also a most capable bandit chief.

Jack Brown himself becomes a bandit chief under Mr. Ah, and has some tremendous fights with the Russians, some of whom he captures in a spectacular manner. To be sure, his most spectacular achievement is the capture of a train on the Siberian Railway, and the running of this train for hundreds of miles through a hostile country, blowing up bridges behind him, cutting telegraph wires, and at the last leading a pursuing train (over a part of the road he has had no time to wreck) a fearful chase with throttles wide, safety valve screwed down, and the engine swaying and rocking as it pounds over the rails.

By way of a change from this tremendous rôle Jack appears another time in Moukden—still searching for his father—and by way of promoting concealment of his identity serves a German war correspondent as servant—carries his camera for him and goes with him to view the great battle of Liao Yang. Mr. Strang makes very good broad fun of Herr Schwab's dialect, of his pomposities, of his commercial spirit, of his reverence for the Kaiser, and of his conduct under fire. Eventually Jack penetrates to the dread island of Sakhalin itself and rescues thence two prisoners—not, of course, without more adventures worthy of Ulysses. The Russians get scant favor in the story, and the Japanese hardly appear; but the Chinese brigands get a deal of credit for courage and virtue—tempered by barbarity—but still virtue. There is a pretty girl in the book, too, who hides Jack in a hollow tree and misleads the Cossacks who are hot upon his tracks. Enough said.

The School World.

The boys of Public School No. 79, 42 First Street, have begun the publication of The School World, and its first number lies before us. It contains articles by scholars of the school, but besides them an article by Dr. Billings, Director of the New York Public Library, on the relation between libraries and schools—an important article of interest to all educators and to most librarians; and another by the chief of the reference department of the Public Library, on reference books. The standard set by The School World's editors is high, but it seems as if the new quarterly would be able to maintain it.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I HAVE read with interest the review of Hardy's "The Dynasts," but when it is said by your reviewer, Mr. H. W. Boynton, that "Mr. Hardy has nothing of the poet in him," I should like to enter the protest of one who holds that Hardy is not only a great master of prose, but also a true poet, with a remarkable body of genuine poetry to his credit. What would you call this, for example, from "The Darkling Thrush"?

"At once a voice that burst among
  The bleak twigs overhead
In a full-hearted evensong
  Of joy illimited;
An aged thrush, frail, gaunt, and small,
  In blast-beruffled plume,
Had chosen thus to fling his soul
  Upon the growing gloom.

"So little cause for carolings
  Of such ecstatic sound
Was written on terrestrial things
  Afar or nigh around,
That I could think there trembled through
  His happy good-night air
Some blessed Hope, whereof he knew
  And I was unaware."

Or this, from "The To-Be Forgotten":

"I heard a small sad sound,
And stood awhile amid the tombs around:
'Wherefore, old friends,' said I, 'are ye distrest,
Now screened from life's unrest?'

"O not at being here;
But that our future second death is drear;
When, with the living, memory of us numbs,
And blank oblivion comes.

"We here, as yet, each day
Are blest with dear recall; as yet alway
In some soul hold a loved continuance Of shape and voice and glance.'

"But what has been will be—
First memory, then oblivion's turbid sea.
* * * We see our bourne,
And seeing it we mourn."

We may agree that "The Dynasts" is not a great work—"that noble poetry is noble matter and manner"—and that this is "one of the elementary principles of criticism;" but what shall be said of the critic who, after reading "Poems of the Past and the Present," or "Wessex Poems," proclaims "Hardy has nothing of the poet in him!"

There was once such a one who, having troubled himself only about the errors of a poem, was given a sack of unwinnowed wheat and bidden to pick out the chaff for his pains.

Father Tabb and Poe.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

My friend Mr. Halsey of The Literary Digest writes that Funk & Wagnalls have revised their Poe edition, which is now, he thinks, correct. In justice to the publishers and to myself I would ask you to make this statement public, so as to undo the mischief of my fun. Mr. Markham, I learn, is only responsible for the preface to the edition, but this, I think, should have been stated from the first.

Henry Giles.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I have been much interested in the appreciative articles of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW on the Rev. Henry Giles, who though a writer of marked excellence seems to have passed from the world of literature. In my young days his name was as a household word, and our library was not thought complete without several volumes of his works. One of which I was especially fond was his "Discourses on Life." I remember him well as a lecturer, and after a few words had been spoken one utterly forgot his poor misshapen body in the brilliancy of his intellect and his impassioned eloquence. I believe that a reprint of his works would be one of the best contributions that could be given to the literature of our day.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Your correspondent Robert Waters of West Hoboken asks whether or not "any of your readers and writers are familiar with the writings of that literary master Henry Giles?" I personally know people who remember Mr. Giles perfectly. He was for many years a lecturer, who annually delivered lectures before the Mercantile Library, in its old quarters at Clinton Hall, 5 Beekman Street, the present site of Temple Court. Mr. Giles was an Irishman who never conquered the accent that his early life had fastened to his tongue. He suffered also from a misshapen spine, being a hunchback, somewhat like Marshall P. Wilder. He was a preacher of some Protestant faith—I think the Unitarian. His enunciation was singularly clear and distinct and his delivery was sufficiently animated to keep his audience interested. The essays that Mr. Waters so much admires were probably read by Mr. Giles as lectures before the societies that, according to the fashion of those days, invited him every Winter to "lecture." I heard Emerson lecture before the Mercantile Library on "English Traits" about the time that Dr. Giles was in his prime. It may interest Mr. Waters to know that he is not the first to esteem Dr. Giles as a writer of power and finish.

An Author on His Book.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Space for a few words, please. A great many of the critics have had their say as to "The Struggle"—some have praised and many have denounced. And it is as ridiculous to read the views of the critics as the conclusions which they reach. Give me just a few lines for a few words.

I am not concerned whether or not "The Struggle" comes up to the standard of literature or meets the requirements of the conventional novel—the question is, Does it serve a purpose and point out the evils of these times? Fiction, like any other literature, when written only to entertain does not accomplish the proper purpose. Every piece of fiction that is written should have a purpose, and this should be the real criterion of merit. Have I in "The Struggle" told the story of the mighty contest between the classes and the masses? Have I pointed out the unpardonable civic crimes of this generation? Have I suggested what they will lead to if not corrected? If I have, then I am reasonably satisfied with the result of my efforts. Not only this; the book, from the beginning to the end, is a plea for law and for order—the correcting of these civic crimes and the destruction of vested wrongs, not by revolution, but by the Anglo-Saxon method—law. I fully realize that in order to carry a message of this kind to the great masses of our people you must put it in the form of fiction and the style of a novel, otherwise they would not read it. The long, tedious, abstract discussion is too tiresome. Hence I wrote my message to the people in the form of a novel, introducing the characters and the romance for a purpose—to entertain and to induce the reader to read the message.

And I am willing to await the judgment of the reading public as to the real merits of the works. Its purpose is to present the truth, and truth will justify itself. Whether the work possesses literary merit and the novelette style—that will be for another generation to pass upon; the generation that lives when a work is produced is never competent to pass this final judgment. I have written the message and am willing to abide the opinion of the reading public.

American Girls and English Writers.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I do wish that when English women write of American girls they would invest them with even a small amount of brains. Eleanor in "The Love Affairs of an Expatriate" is almost devoid of brains. She also gives one the impression of living with Dick in London. He must be a large man, since "the room is full of Dick." Elisabeth had best stick to the servant-girl question and her experiences in that line.

NANCY WOOLLCOTT.

"A Premature Socialist."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In your issue of March 17 I see that Mrs. Craigie "thinks well of American reviewers." Having been through the American review mill twice during the past two or three years—and just entering it again—caused me to reflect upon this opinion of Mrs. Craigie.

Perhaps personally I ought not to complain, since I have had some very long and rather thoughtful reviews. But not one reviewer guessed my real reason for writing either "Violina" or "An American Abelard and Heloise." My third literary venture, since my return from Europe, might be called an impromptu one. While reading Ouida's "An Altruist" I said to myself, "Why, here's good material for a play." Not being a playwright myself, I tried to get some one else to do the work. In this I was not successful. Being strongly impressed with the idea that it ought to be done, that now was the accepted time, I sat down and tried to do it myself—without the slightest training in the art of making plays. Besides, during a quarter of a century of married life I was not encouraged to attend theatrical representations, on account of the religious views of my husband. Hence my equipment for this work was exceedingly poor.

However, what I most wanted was to get Socialism before the people in such a way that they might see both sides. In "An Altruist," and, I think I may add, still more in "A Premature Socialist," (Broadway Publishing Company,) a good glimpse of both the bright and dark side of Socialism is given.

I think the book timely, for people are sick unto death of All for Money. We have all been so eager to get money and the things it will procure that many of us have forgotten what we are in this world for—which is, of course, to grow in things lovely and of good report.

Chains Across Rivers.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Mr. Edmund Platt, in your issue of March 10, seems to know much about the chains across the Hudson River, but nothing of other and older chains of the sort. One such may be seen at Paris, outside the Hotel des Invalides, brought home as a trophy by Napoleon Bonapart, but I do not now remember whence. If Mr. Platt will consult Pepys's Diary for the month of June, 1667, 12th to 30th, he will find an interesting account of the "chaine" at Chatham, broken by the Dutch, assisted by an easterly gale and the Spring tides, when they attacked the English fleet at that time. Mr. Pepys goes himself to Chatham on the 30th, where he inspects the "chaine," and there "saw it fast at the end on Upner side of the River; very fast, and borne up upon the severall stages across the River. I went on shore on Upner side to look upon the end of the chaine and cause the link to be measured, and it was six inches and one-fourth in circumference. * * * Several complaints I hear of the Monmouth's coming away too soon from the chaine, where she was placed with two guardships to secure it. * * * Capt. Brookes's running aground with the Sancta Maria which was one of the 3 ships ordered to be sunk to have dammed up the River at the chaine, is mightly cried against and with reason."

George H. Calvert.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Having read with much interest recent letters in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW concerning that gifted essayist and lecturer, Henry Giles, whose lectures I enjoyed hearing when a lad, and whose "Human Life in Shakespeare" has always been one of my literary treasures, I wish to call the attention of Shakespeare students to another Shakespeare scholar whose work ought not to be forgotten. This is George H. Calvert, who published in 1879 "Shakespeare: A Biographic Esthetic Study" that is one of the most delightful and thoughtful essays ever published upon the master. Very brief biographical notices of Calvert will be found in our encyclopedias, the fullest in Appleton's Cyclopedia of American Biography, edition of 1898, edited by John Fiske and James G. Wilson. Mr. Calvert was a descendant of the Lords Baltimore and of Rubens, the painter. He was born in Maryland in 1803, graduated from Harvard, and then studied in Göttingen. Returning to Baltimore, he at one time edited The Baltimore American, but in 1843 removed to Newport, R. I., of which city he was Mayor in 1853, and died there in 1889. He wrote biographies of Rubens, Goethe, Wordsworth, and others, several volumes of essays, and some plays and poems, including two admirable ones upon Joan of Arc. As the Biographical Encyclopedia well says, "He was an original thinker of a philosophical cast of mind, and master of a pure and scholarly style of prose and poetry." His book on Shakespeare should be republished.

Magazines and Their Stories.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The discussion of new books by readers is to me the most interesting page of your interesting paper. I generally want to "talk back," but bide my time, knowing that presently I will be able to say, "Them's my sentiments." "T. R. W.," in March third issue, agrees with my opinion on the "House of Mirth," but I want to condemn especially the use of the magazines for stories that leave a bad taste in your mouth.

One may buy or refuse to buy the books on the market, but when one of the first-class magazines comes into your house you want to be easy in your mind if you see the boys and girls browsing among the magazines. They should contain nothing but wholesome literary food. We have a right to look for articles and stories that will instruct or elevate and refine.

Ivanowski's Success.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I have been interested, perhaps a little inclined to quarrel, with your characterization of the portrait of "Folly" in Edith Rickert's new novel, which you reviewed last Saturday.

You speak of the appearance of the book suffering from "the distressing frontispiece which purports to be a likeness of Folly and an embellishment as well." Did you ever hear the stuffed owl story? A man went into a taxidermist's shop and, gazing about, said: "What's that supposed to be anyway—an owl? Never saw an owl like that; too much round in front; the head is too square; the tail is not at the right angle. The man who stuffed that owl did not know his business." And the owl turned his head slowly and looked at the speaker.

I happen to be in possession of the information that, though Miss Rickert had no communication with Sigismond de Ivanowski, who painted this portrait of Folly, she describes herself as "as much startled when I first looked at the picture as if Folly herself had come into the room." And she adds: "It was exactly my conception of Folly."

As to its artistic merit, I am not inclined to quarrel, though it strikes me as exceptionally good.

A READER.

Bloomfield, N. J., March 29, 1906.

Alfred Noyes and His Writings.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Commenting on the London Bookman's description of Mr. Alfred Noyes, in an editorial note in your issue of March 24, you say that he has not yet secured fame on this side of the Atlantic.

Some of your readers may wish to know more about his work, so I venture to give you a list of his books.

THE LOOM OF YEARS. Grant Richards: 1902.

Extracts from some of the English reviews, as follows: "No ill-wrought line, no overstrained expression, no lapse of melody offends the eye and ear, for Mr. Noyes, of whom we know nothing beyond this book, is a sure and cunning workman, with a fine technical command of his material. * * * Mr. Noyes is a poet. No other word is adequate. 'The Statue' might have been written by Keats."

Extracts from English reviews: "Mr. Noyes so charges it with fascination and terror and kaleidoscopic color that most readers, we dare to promise, will take its ninety pages at a sitting and turn back to read again."

"The fact is that the charm of the verse eludes us when we try to describe it."

The above two books are now out of print, but will probably soon be re-issued by another publisher. Next follows the "Poems," to which you refer—Blackwood's, 1904.

A review in London Bookman, December, 1904, headed "A Major Poet": "Of Mr. Noyes's new book it is impossible to speak in terms that will not appear to those unacquainted with his previous work as extravagant and uncritical eulogy. * * * After a long acquaintance with slim books of thick paper, with wide margins, it is a refreshing novelty to find a poet boldly launching an imposing quarto. Few young poets are so honored by their own publishers, but in this case we cannot doubt the confidence is well deserved."

From a review in Athenaeum, Dec. 16, 1905: "'The Forest of Wild Thyme' is full of real poetry, both of word and thought; * * * It is impossible to speak too highly of the technical excellence of the book—the mastery of metre and the sense of the proper function of words."

Mr. Noyes's new epic poem, "Drake," appearing serially in Blackwood's Magazine, will run through twelve numbers—Parts I.-III. appearing in book form after publication of the May number.

Cleveland, March 28, 1906. P. L.

Poetry and Prose.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I appreciate "E. H. S.'s" effort to help out "A Perplexed Subscriber," but my inquiry was (as I think my letter will clearly show) merely to ascertain if there was any technical difference (that is, in form, not thought or feeling,) between poetry and prose. As to what might be poetic in conception, critics and readers both are likely to differ to the end of time; one man's "pearls" will necessarily be often another man's "pebbles" as long as minds, and even moods, continue to differ.

I, for instance, cannot persuade myself that Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass," (the Apotheosis of Sweat, I should call it,) even if not pretentious, affected, and commonplace, and could be proved to be both "significant" and "fine," would be entitled to be classed as poetry at all. The author usually ignores altogether both rhythm and rhyme; hence I feel tempted to assert that he wrote only "prose," and if even a seer and a sage, was certainly in no true sense a—poet.

But as I am only a mountaineer from the "Over Hills of Ottaray," finding my prose in the corn patch and my poetry in the woodlands, my standard may be an entirely false one. The new Wagnerian school of music, I am told, frankly accepts "Dissonance" as one of its canons; so, too, the new school founded by the "Whitmaniacs" may have banished both rhyme and rhythm to the rural districts, and for "capital poetry" have found a substitute in "capitalized prose."

If the old conventional rules are adhered to, however, even "Thoughts that breathe and words that burn," if expressed in language that altogether ignores both rhyme and rhythm might be "poetic prose," but could hardly be classed as "poetry" at all. But, unlike Mr. Bliss Carman, I cannot claim that I am either a critic or a poet. That is just why I felt the need of that poetic "rule of thumb."

A. M. H.

Port Royal, S. C., March 27, 1906.

II.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Although I have not read what perplexes the "Perplexed Subscriber," I think if he were more occupied with the substance of either poetry or prose, and less with its form, he need not be so perplexed. And also if poetry in any of its aspects or phases of construction or feeling does not appeal to him he has missed the spirit of poetry, and would better pass it by unperplexed, waiting for another cycle to put within him in his riper guise the understanding.

And I think he is quite as ready as many who have made replies to his question, from whom I have gathered that there has been "A Perplexed Subscriber."

LAMBKIN SPHINX.

Bronxville, N. Y., March 28, 1906.

III.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The inquiry of "A Perplexed Subscriber" confirms my opinion that there now exists a school of professional poets, each of whom writes what the others consider "fine." The masses do not appreciate this stuff, neither do ordinary newspaper editors—at least it is never found in such columns as "Poems Worth Reading" in one of your contemporaries. Possibly this may account for the decline in the poetry market, which has recently caused some comment; for if each member of the inner circle receives a complimentary copy of an author's collection of poems, it appears quite probable that there will be no further demand.

BOSTON NOTES.

Two Novels and Some Other New Books—Law Books and Poems.

In the days when all agreeable stimulating liquors were "rum," and all novels not painfully religious were "yellow-covered literature," the writers of tracts were accustomed to ascribe the first downward step of the erring wife to a novel, George Sand's or Bulwer's, as a rule. To-day, if they describe their time correctly, they will show the foolish girl and the tempted wife as recalled to righteousness by seeing themselves reflected in a novel. It is such a novel that Miss Eugenia Brooks Frothingham has written in "The Evasion," (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,) and yet no book written in Boston and about Bostonians could teach its lesson less obviously. For its most conspicuous interest is the relation of two men, one of whom avoids telling the truth which may injure the other, and is taught by years of suffering both for himself and for others that it is not lawful to do evil that good may come, and that a man may not be unjust even to himself and escape paying the price. The wives and their temptations are secondary matters; but each of the three cases set before the reader is an effective warning. The great army of happy folk who need no warning will find its picture of Boston as accurate as the picture of New York in "The House of Mirth."

⁂

In "Kenelm's Desire," by Hughes Cornell, the American reader finds himself not only in a new country, for British Columbia is almost untrodden soil to the novelist, but facing the plain prose of a subject generally presented to him as romance. The heroine, an American girl, is set among half-breeds and quarter-bloods, the descendants of a genuine Indian Princess married to a white man, and she herself is wooed by an educated Indian, who makes his way into the Legislative Assembly of the Province, and in other ways demonstrates that he is something more than the equal of the white men about him. The Princess wears calico, and devotes herself faithfully to her household duties; but she cherishes her ancestral crown as devoutly as any European sovereign; her daughters are proud of her, but their ambitions are those of their husbands, and the third generation, mixed in its motives, is inclined to revert to the faults of the savage. The heroine is a composer and the Indian lover is a poet, and their genius so sets them apart that one forgets their racial difference even as they forget it. Whether when the book is closed and cool reflection comes, it will be possible to believe that they will live happy ever afterward, remains to be seen. In any case, the picture of life in a community abounding in strange conditiions is interesting, and blessing of blessings! the author has not found it necessary to use dialect! Some of the younger girls are fluent in American and British slang, but they do not blend the languages of their ancestors.

⁂

Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., the publishers of "Kenelm's Desire," have two important law books on their Spring list, one intended chiefly for trustees and accountants, the other for lawyers. The former, "The American Law Relating to Interest and Principal," by Mr. Edwin A. Howes, Jr., treats of wasting investments, dividends of shares of stock, the apportionment of loss or profit between principal and interest; the apportionment of current income, the point at which the enjoyment of income begins, and other matter apparently simple, but really difficult, yet necessary to be known by all who would conduct even a small business profitably.

⁂

The latter book, "Centralization and the Law," contains six lectures delivered in Boston University Law School by the Dean, Melville M. Bigelow. They form a part of the instruction now given at the University in extension of ordinary legal education.

⁂

Mr. John Burroughs's "Bird and Bough," the first collection of his magazine poems, will appear not only in ordinary form with a pretty cover, but also in special uncut style, with a paper label, at a price, taking postage into account, hardly higher, an arrangement gratifying to those who buy for rebinding after reading.

⁂

There will also be a special uncut edition of Mr. Alonzo Rothschild's "Lincoln, Master of Men," of only 150 copies. Treating as it does of Lincoln's relations with his three great Secretaries, Seward, Chase, and Stanton; with the two Generals whose personal qualities caused their friends to view him with a certain jealous hostility; of his long rivalry with Douglas, and of his career previous to the Presidential nomination, this book would be far less valuable without its exceptionally complete index and vocabulary, facilitating reference. Its 125 pages of notes and bibliography still further increase its value.

⁂

Mr. Ferris Greenslet's "James Russell Lowell" does not seem entirely satisfactory to English critics. One of them has reproved him for the faulty English of a phrase quoted from Lowell and mistaken for his own, and now he finds himself set down by Mr. Douglas Sladen as "obviously an American, for he falls into the usual American mistake of considering Lowell seriously as a poet." "He was a very ordinary poet," says Mr. Sladen, and adds "his work was inferior to that of numbers of unrecognized Miltons." Thus he proceeds to scarify Harry Francis for having written in the days of his youth that Lowell was a greater poet than Tennyson, who, by the way, was not quite so great when Harry Francis was writing as he afterward became, and declares that such a comparison is like holding a farthing candle against the sun. As a diplomatist Mr. Sladen thinks that Lowell was not at all the equal of John Hay; but he earnestly admires and praises his brave, courageous life as shown in ways of which comparatively little account is made in this country, because in Lowell's time the American man of letters was almost of necessity brave since he could not pursue his career without courage, unless he had a large private fortune.

⁂

A letter just received from Prof. Borden P. Bowne, now making a leisurely journey around the world, is dated Bombay, Feb. 26, and reports him in good health. Mrs. Annie Fields is at South Berwick, Me., visiting Miss Sarah Orne Jewett. Miss Marion Ames Taggart, who has resumed writing after a silence longer than her young friends found agreeable, has now completed a story for girls, to be published by the W. A. Wilde Company early in the Autumn under the title, "Six Girls and Bob."

⁂

This firm also has in preparation "Born to the Blue," by Miss Florence Kimball Russel, the story of a boy whose father, a United States cavalry Captain, was stationed at a frontier post in the old days. At present the readers of "The Little Colonel" series are much interested in the son of a lamented general officer, a newly appointed West Point cadet, whom they know as Randal Walton. It is not difficult to detect his family name in this anagram, and Mrs. Johnston, the author of the series, wrote a pleasant description of his home with its many memorials of his dead father for one of the best books. FICTION ONLY.

Of that kind of story which is a story for the story's sake and in pure singleness of heart drives a coach and four through human nature, the probabilities and recorded facts, this one called "The Corsican Lovers," (New York, B. W. Dodge & Co.,) is a shining example. The author, Charles Felton Pidgin, is an industrious "spieler" of the dime novel style, which, as the judicious know, thrives upon ignorance and by virtue of a trick of catchwords. The catchwords here are chiefly two—Corsica and vendetta. With the first Mr. Pidgin labels the composite region of his imagination, where most of the scenes of his story occur; with the second he calls the spirit of tragic romance to the assistance of his hodge-podge of gyrating puppets. Minor catch words—to each of which a puppet is tacked—are naval lieutenant, bandit, wicked brother, beautiful girl, disinherited heiress, British nobleman, Italian Count, Irish gardener, old mad servitor, and so on. There are also the following extra ingredients: A secret marriage, a duel in the dark, a room in a tower all mirrors, a dungeon with a secret entrance, a mad house, a birthday party tragically interrupted, several shootings in the back and fatal runnings through the body, a British man-of-war, a mysterious will, a flower given by a maid to a man, and a falling of the heroine among thieves—women thieves, who take a fancy to her fine raiment. The hero finds the lady in sad plight and not only wraps her in his cloak but saves her feet from contact with the malarial earth by emulating Sir Walter Raleigh and casting his coat upon the ground for her to stand upon. The book, which is amusing (in its way) is provided with a number of molasses candy drawings of heads.

ALL-ESSAY MAGAZINE.

Further Discussion of the Subject—A Suggestion as to Its Contents.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I AM pleased to learn that my suggestion for the establishment of an "all-essay" magazine has been "taken up rather seriously," and I am mildly sorry, but not in the least surprised, that no one "willing to risk capital in such an undertaking" has as yet announced himself. I hoped that the matter would be taken up seriously, that other readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW would express a favorable opinion of the project, that editorial writers would discuss the matter, and that the public press would interest itself in the matter seriously enough and long enough to attract the attention of a competent publisher with the requisite capital at his command. It is probable that such a magazine would be a success only if put out by a prosperous, energetic, and well-established publishing firm. I have no wish to see any enthusiast for the best in literature invest all his capital in such a venture, and I have no wish to see a project of such importance undertaken without sufficient capital and sufficient practical experience behind it.

A magazine such as I suggest would contain from twelve to fifteen essays of, as a rule, from three to six thousand words in length, but would not exclude essays as short as a thousand words or as long as 10,000 words, if they were of exceptional merit. Poetry of good quality would be used. Short poems such as are commonly accepted by the literary monthlies and longer poems enough to occupy the space of one of the longer prose essays each month, providing such poems could be obtained. There would be no objection to occupying all of this space with one poem if a poem of such length and of sufficient merit were offered. There would be no stories, either short or long, no informative articles, no discussion of current events, no "timely" articles of whatever nature. There would be no jokes, no book reviews, no editorials. For several reasons I believe it would be better to do without illustrations. In the first place, adequate illustrations are expensive. In the second place, the best essays do not need illustrations, and while essays of certain classes, such as those on art subjects, nature subjects, and travel, sometimes make a proper use of illustrations, there is always a tendency to let the text of an illustrated article degenerate to a mere description of the pictures.

I am not in the least pessimistic as to the condition of literature in the United States at the present time. I believe that if we could look at contemporary literature from the proper perspective, unhindered by that prejudice in favor of earlier authors which we have acquired in the schoolroom, we should see that the poets, novelists, essayists, and other writers of to-day are greater, not only in quantity of good work, but in quality of work, than those of any previous era of our history. I believe that both the novel and the short story are forms of high literary value, and in pleading for the essay, and incidentally for the long poem, I have no wish to rail at any form of prose fiction. I contend, however, that the essay and the poem are not only not given in the magazine of to-day the attention which they deserve because of their intrinsic worth as high forms of literature, but not even that attention which the popular appreciation of them demands.

I have been told that, next to the best-selling fiction, publishers consider volumes of good essays as the best literary property, because the demand for such volumes of essays remains constant or even increases for years after the best-selling novels have been forgotten. It is a well-known fact that volumes of short stories, except when written by the most popular authors, do not sell at all. In view of these two facts it seems reasonable to suppose that if magazines devoted exclusively to short stories are phenomenally successful, a magazine devoted to essays, if published by a firm which would afterward issue all of its material in book form, would pay a reasonable interest on the capital invested. I believe that the publication of essays in such a magazine would increase their sale in book form sufficiently to remunerate the publisher, even if the cost of publishing the magazine—that is, the cost of publication less the amount received for subscriptions—were charged to advertising. In such a magazine as I suggest there would be no expense for illustrations, no expense for correspondents investigating this and that in various parts of the earth, and it would not be necessary to pay such exorbitant rates for material as some magazines are credited with paying for a part of their fiction. If an essayist produced material of a grade which would justify a publisher in issuing it in book form on a royalty basis it would be material for which the publisher could afford to pay a slightly higher price in consideration of magazine rights.

Short stories are well enough, and I am willing to admit that it is worth a sane man's while to read a few of the best of the "timely" articles, but there is a noteworthy tendency to specialization in magazine making, and in such specialization it is no more than right that the essay should receive its share of attention. The time is passing when a man expects to have all of his interests catered to in one favorite magazine. We still have magazines that aim to be all sufficient in themselves, but we seldom find an intelligent reader who is satisfied by any one of them. The modern man takes one magazine to keep him in touch with the world of to-day, another to inform him concerning the new developments of his profession or trade, still another that is concerned with the welfare of his chosen religious denomination, another to read in moments of relaxation, another more suited to the tastes of his children, and another that keeps his wife informed of the changing fashions and newly devised methods of cookery; half a dozen magazines, instead of one that attempts to combine all these features in itself. And if the modern man does not yet do this precisely, more and more modern men are doing it, and will continue to do it as long as the advance in intelligence and in wealth continues.

My contention is that there are enough men and women who enjoy the essay, but who do not feel that they can afford to subscribe to all the literary monthlies in the country, for the sake of getting one magazine full of essays, to make an "all-essay" magazine a paying venture. I put the matter on a solid financial basis, but I hope there are some publishers who would be willing to get rich a little less quickly for the sake of the honor which will accrue to the one who first launches and makes a success of a magazine of this nature.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Concerning the suggested "All-Essay Magazine," allow me (with profound literary relish, not unmingled with a modest degree of complacency in my good fortune as the "propoger of the toast") to ask where, in the recent NEW YORK TIMES calendar of American essayists, were the names of Miss Louise Imogen Guiney, happy-hearted and gifted strewer of "Patrins"; Miss Ellen Burns Sherman, scholarly kindler of "Taper Lights," and Mr. Henry Dwight Sedgwick, author of (great) "Essays on Great Authors"?

Unless the brilliant essay game be played fairly there are numerous innocent but sympathetic bystanders who will feel justified in declining to "take an interest."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The all-essay magazine which you are discussing has undoubtedly been a crying need for a long time. I have often wished that statistics could be gathered of the number of American families who subscribe to the better English periodicals because they are tired to death of the so-called popularity of American periodicals. The publishers and editors are woefully behind the times. The people are crying out on all sides for good essays, good literary criticism, good poetry, anything, anything but the cheap novel, which has run its course. I believe an ably edited all-essay magazine with good literary criticism—not reviews of new books, but real literary studies—would have an immediate success. If the cry one hears on all sides and everywhere and from all sorts and conditions of people means anything at all, then the people are clamoring for something better and something solider. There are now published fifteen monthly magazines (doubtless more, but fifteen that I can think of on the spur of the moment) of about the same stamp, covering practically the same ground and dealing in the short story, topics of the day, a political essay or so, and personal or biographical sketches. Magazines like Munsey's, Ainslee's, Appleton's, Lippincott's, Cosmopolitan, Metropolitan, Argosy, Pearson's, Success, Smart Set, Popular, Everybody's—all of these are magazines for people who do not read. Our reading public is not on so high a plane as the reading public of England, nor is there much chance of its becoming so for some time, but we have a large public eagerly waiting for something better than can be got now. The literary study, the sort of essay that Mr. Gosse, Mr. Saintsbury, Miss Louise Imogen Guiney would write, would be inifinitely welcome. The readers and the essayists are ready and clamoring. Where are the publishers and editors?

The Bronte Sisters.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

There is an interest peculiarly fascinating about the Brontës. It recurred to me the other day in taking up a book concerning them. It is not my purpose here to discuss their works. There are those who deprecate their lack of art and somewhat else; others prize them as a touchstone of literary excellence. It may justly be said that they form an unexpected, a strange and significant tour de force. But the interest mentioned is heightened, I fancy, by a certain morbidity and by the tragic, hopeless struggle experienced by every one of the family against compelling facts. And herein—and considering the conditions, I wish to dissent from current estimates and animadversions. I believe Anne should be placed a little higher up, and a more creditable niche given to Branwell.

The wide and deserved attention paid to Charlotte has shadowed the others to a degree; yet I have always admired Emily, the more perhaps because, while less expansive and productive than her sister, she strikes me as being the deeper, the mysterious and high-strung witch of that moorland household. Moreover, and I desire to emphasize this, she adhered loyally, without complaining, to her brother Branwell through all his failings, with a kind of comprehensive human sympathy and reticence that in itself betokens real greatness. And her devotion is reflected in the superiority of her work.

There is something unfair and undigested about hard and fast moral or critical judgments. How little do we know ourselves, much less do we know our fellows; what equipment, natural or acquired, they have for the task of life, what depths they peer into, what difficulties they have to master and overcome, what hills or mountains or heavens to climb! Obviously, marked differences characterize individuals and work out variously. They must necessarily at times run counter to ordinary standards of respectability and success. I confess that I am often absorbed in the careers of those whom the coarse world regards as failures, for they serve relatively important purposes, however subtle and undiscerned. Indignation seldom does much good; it usually leaves behind it a feeling of false notes. Let us have the true notes—the story unvarnished, if it will out; but look on the result dispassionately, consider without prejudice or short-sightedness and graciously report or be silent. Condemn nothing unless you are sure you have the divine vision. And I do not see so much danger in accepting when God accepts.

Emily Brontë and the Deity tolerated Branwell, and I am inclined to back Emily and the Deity against Charlotte, with her almost commonplace moral preachments; against Augustine Birrell, who captiously has "no use for this young man," and Clement K. Shorter, with his conventional denunciation of the brother and weakness for the sisters three. They are all entertaining, admirable critics, only I prefer not to fulminate over the sphinxlike face of man. I prefer the way of Emily and the Deity.

Do Animals Think?

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The great interest in nature books and animal stories is naturally accompanied with a desire to know whether animals think. Philosophers of old have battled with this question, and the moderns have taken it up in a more scientific way, and still it remains unsolved.

Burroughs has done much to forward enlightenment in the matter, but he might have gone further. He might have read in the animals of the higher order the potentialities of what he has discovered. All nature is progressive, and the animal is not a fixity in his nature. He is susceptible of development alike with mankind.

It is a mistake, as Burroughs says, to try to humanize animals. It is better to get in touch with their own natures, their own intelligence, than to try to bend them into human ways.

Get the key to a dog's mind and you can do wonders with him. Is it not a fact that the senses of animals are keener than those of the human species? Then why should not impressions on their brain be proportionably keen and correct?

Mr. Burroughs says: "Self-consciousness is a necessary attribute of thought."

If a horse can distinguish himself from a hitching post he has self-consciousness, which implies the power to discriminate, which latter implies an act of judgment, and an act of judgment implies a thinking and reasoning faculty.

If a person can by expressive looks and signs transfer his thoughts and wishes to an animal's mind, is the animal not obliged to exercise thought in order to understand and interpret the signs? Association and habit may be said to account for this. But when an animal is called upon to do something he never did before, and association and habit are out of the question, and he does the thing intelligently and perfectly, what then?

If some of the higher animals had the faculty of speech and the power of manipulation, as man has, they might, with their keener senses, be capable of doing things that would make some human creatures feel like taking to the woods. It is absurd to suppose, as some people do, that in time a dog will evolve into a man. I do not think a dog would want to be a man if it had the chance. I think that animal development along the lines of its own species would be relatively quicker in its progress than that of man along the line of his own species, because of the truer and keener sense of the animal. Animals are quicker to sense human thoughts and ways than man is to sense animal thoughts and ways. The animal mind may differ in its operation from the human mind and arrive at the same point in a less roundabout way. Animals are imitative and initiative. Cats have greater imitative power than dogs. The question whether the dog learned from the cat to wash his face with his paw is a disputed one. Cats teach their kittens. I have watched the lessons of a mother cat and the efforts of the kitten to get its paw in the right position and follow the motions of the mother. It was not by any means a spontaneous act.

But how did mice learn the trick? They wash their faces and ears in exactly the same way that cats do.

People have not yet learned the way to a dog's mind. Any one who has made a companion of a dog must have often observed his pathetic efforts, without language, to make himself understood. Doubtless he sometimes thinks man a very stupid creature.

The one thing necessary is to understand him as pure dog, with dog intelligence and dog reason, which stand for him in the same relation that man's intelligence and reason stand for the man, and capable of development in the same ratio.

I do not think it is fair for human creatures to lay claim to everything in the line of thought and reason, and deny to the higher animals any share of such attributes.

SPELLING REFORM.

Miss Hildegarde Hawthorne Argues Against "Reformers"—Some Other Views.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

If one of us were to meet an old and cherished friend after a brief absence, and find him with his wrinkles gathered up and tucked away, his erstwhile irregular and rather unaccountable nose architectured into Grecian beauty, his mouth, for so many years delightfully too big, now compressed into a cupid's bow; the history of his years swept away, the impression of his character erased—would we feel like rushing forward with congratulations, or like blowing up all the dermatological parlors and the reckless heads that conceived them?

How are we to love our old friends in this new, this smooth, this correct and easy fashion? Or perhaps we are not supposed to love nowadays. We are here for some other purpose, and are expected to be quick and business-like about it, too. Words are meant for use; why should we care what they look like? The grim Carnegie throws his lumps of gold into the sensible side, and romance, history, and beauty are tipped clean out of the scales.

But there is another aspect to this spelling reform which has not been given a voice. How about the poet? Are half his rhymes to be snatched from him? Where would Pope have been without good and flood, full and dull, own and town, and a hundred more? Picture the dreary outlook to such as endeavor to make their living with rhymes—a prospect none too radiant as it is—when words will not only have to look alike, but to sound alike! No more leaning back on the dear old oughs and aughts and other accommodating chums. There'll be no friendly chuckle henceforth from an unreformed old word as he hitches himself to the end of a line. No. Stiff, respectable, and uncompromising, those thrus and althos and the rest will face down all your blandishments. The old helpful comradeship is over. Oh, Poet of the Reformed Spelling! One may conceive of the Subway, the Horse Show, the Waldorf-Astoria being somehow metamorphosed into the poetry of the future—but think of a poem of reformed words!

HILDEGARDE HAWTHORNE.

Yonkers, N. Y., March 29, 1906.

II.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

What is to be gained by blinking the fact?

American English is not English English, and Americans no more want it to be so than they want themselves and other things American to be English. If only the Englishman could grasp this fact what a deal of misunderstanding and friction would be saved.

The learned American gentlemen composing the committee for the simplification of spelling have something more than fourth form scholarship behind them. We do not yet know definitely their programme or programmes, but it is safe to say that they will not effect, and, being reasonable men, they do not expect to effect, any radical changes in American spelling. It is all a matter of evolution, and in evolution there are no short cuts. If by their efforts they are able to accomplish an infinitesimal advance they should be, and no doubt will be, satisfied.

JAX.

Northampton, Mass., March 26, 1906.

III.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

"An Englishman," writing in your number of March 24, is quite right when he says the question of spelling "can only be decided by English scholars of the highest ability," if by English scholars he means scholars in English, whether residing in England, Scotland, Ireland, the colonies, or the United States. If he means English scholars in the narrower sense, he will doutless admit that the Philological Society of Great Britain comprises all those of the highest ability, including Profs. Skeat, Sayce, Murray, and Sweet.

It will, therefore, interest "An Englishman" to learn that the Philological Society, the highest British authority on the English language, pronounced some years ago in favor of the dropping of many useless letters and of simplifying English spelling to a degree far beyond that now recommended by the "Simplified Spelling Board." We may, therefore, expect that in his next communication he will at least follow the very conservativ program of the Simplified Spelling Board, or probably will go further, as "an Englishman," (and it's greatly to his credit,) and follow the recommendations of the highest authority of his nativ land, spelling "doutfully," "conservativ," "program" as I hav above.

Our friend speaks interestingly of the value of historical spelling as indicating derivation, tho it is difficult to see how the spelling "centre" is any better supported by "centri," "centro," or accusativ "centrum" than by nominativ "centrum." He is a little over-enthusiastic when he suggests that spelling coud be made "to show to the learned the derivation and history of each word in the language." "Bishop," to comply with this, would hav to be written "episcopus" [illegible] history. But is it the learned who need this help? They hav access to far more complete sources of information than is given by any spelling. The ordinary, fairly educated man learns from "An Englishman's" article, or from Dean Trench, that words ending in "our" are immediately from the French, remotely from the Latin. He, therefore, concludes that "emperor" is not from the French, and that "endeavour" and "behaviour" are of French origin; he is in error in each case. In fact, the "historical" and ancient spelling of "endeavor" is "indever."

I must explain that I do not usually employ all the spellings of the (English) Philological Society, but hav done so in this article to meet the exprest views of "An Englishman." They were not adopted by, nor for, "the commercial traveler, [sic], the Chicago butcher, or the uneducated reporter," but by "such men as Prof. Skeat," just as "An Englishman" says they ought to be.

CHARLES E. SPRAGUE.

New York, March 29, 1906.

Books in the Italian Quarter.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

To see the American Italian at home it is necessary to seek him in the vicinity of Mulberry Bend. After pushing through a mass of shoppers, after just barely escaping a collision with a dozen maidens freighted down with bread, after stuffing up your nostrils to keep out the odor of macaroni and cheese, you will be able to reach the vendors of books.

What a large assortment, and nearly all of them published with the intent and purpose of being disposed of at a low figure to the populace! No de luxe editions to be seen here; nothing limited about their circulation; no numbered copies; no deckled edges; but all got up in a common paper or a cheap muslin binding. But these books are not intended for exhibition purposes; they are to be read. A single reading in "Little Italy" does not impair its usefulness; it is passed on to some one else, and as long as the binding lasts on and on it goes.

Hurry to one of the bookstalls. Some old friends greet us. Here is "Quo Vadis," there "Resurrection," a bit beyond "Gil Blas," and right alongside of it is "Decameron." Strain your eyes a mite to catch a glimpse of a "History of the Spanish Inquisition." How strange as a companion should it have a "Guide to Be Holy"! Look again, and you will see "The Sacred Story." Away over to the extreme right is "Joan of Arc." However, judging by the number of copies of "Monti Cristo," this is by far the favorite among the Italians. Of course, all these books are printed in their language. No bookseller's stock would be complete without a dozen or two works on that great subject of love. These little mentors tell them everything about it; and they certainly do desire to know about "amor." Added to these is a large list of novels, exciting enough, and thrilling withal.

Do you hear the cries of the boys who are selling newspapers? And the Italians have several of these journals in New York. Did you notice that one vendor had for sale something like thirty different newspapers—monthlies, weeklies, and dailies—both domestic and foreign? Surely the Italians down there take to periodical reading also.

Too often we observe the filth and dirt in evidence in this street; but there is something more to be seen. Italy's daughters and sons are by birth of a literary temperament, and it is reasonable to allow that some of their native desire is transplanted here. But walk carefully, or you will collide with a load of bread or go pellmell into a hill of eggs, or slip on to a mountain of fish. However, as you at last get out of the path of commerce you see looming up before you the Italian Free Library, where the Sicilians, Neapolitans, Sardinians, and all the others congregate and drink out of the trough of knowledge. Then you are safe to carry on your reflections without further interruption.

About Writing Simply.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Lowell, in one of his essays—which one I do not remember—speaks of having made as a young man the great and startling discovery that to write well is to write simply. The reader quite understands that he holds this discovery to be of the same kind as the one made by Greeley, that "the way to resume is to resume."

The way to resume was to resume, but it required the best financial minds of the day to do it. The way to write well is to write simply, but, alas, to write simply requires something closely akin to genius in the writer. I have been reading Mr. Henry James's "New York Revisited"—also a letter which appeared in a recent issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, and was brought to a close somewhat in this fashion:

"Mr. James may, too, write his beautiful book."

Do any of your contributors think that Mr. James would if he could, or could if he would, write a "beautiful book"? If any of them do think either of these things, would they mind giving a reason for the faith that is in them?

A New Year Book.

A new year book is published by the Macmillan Company. It is "The Writers and Artists' Year Book, 1906," and is a directory for writers, artists, and photographers to dailies, weeklies, and monthlies, and other periodicals. Besides the full name of the journal, its editor, and location, there are given the length of manuscript suitable, the kind and quality of matter acceptable, and style of illustrations employed. There are, too, lists of publishers, literary agents, &c., in Great Britain and America.

What Some Authors Are Doing.

The author of "The Long Day" is lecturing before drawing-room audiences, clubs, and conventions on the conditions prevailing among modern working women in the large cities.

Dr. Arthur H. Smith, author of "Chinese Characteristics" and "Village Life in China," is now visiting America after an absence of eleven years. He is lecturing in various cities on educational matters in the Celestial Empire. Chinese students, he says, would prefer American institutions to others, and he suggests that the indemnity which China is paying the United States be used for establishing scholarships for these students.

Dr. Edmund von Mach, author of "Greek Sculpture, Its Spirit and Principles," was recently elected a member of the New York Authors' Club.

Prof. Philip Van Ness Myers, author of the series of "Myers's Histories," has returned from his trip in the Levant, whither he went for material for his "General History," to be published by Ginn & Company next month. He traveled over the entire old Roman Empire from Britain to Arabia, and got many new pictures for his book. He found that his histories were being used in Constantiople, Smyrna, Beirut, and Damascus.

Arthur Rackham, the well-known English artist who made the pictures for the new Doubleday, Page & Co. "Rip Van Winkle," has taken in hand the illustration of Rudyard Kipling's forthcoming "Puck of Pook's Hill," which the same publishers will bring out in the Fall.

George Barr McCutcheon, author of "Nedra," &c., was in this city this week to consult with his publishers, Dodd, Mead & Co., who are bringing out to-day his story "Cowardice Court," which is illustrated in colors by Harrison Fisher.

Elinor Macartney Lane, whose old-fashioned romance, "All for the Love of a Lady," is down for May publication by the Appletons, has been spending the winter at Asheville, N. C., where she has been working on another novel, to appear in the coming Fall.

Education and "Dynamics."

Another contribution to the list of books on the new educational "theories" has been made by Prof. M. V. O'Shea of the University of Wisconsin, and The Macmillan Company publishes it under the title, "Dynamic Factors in Education." It has been the author's object to show that in the early years of a child's school life, "motor expression" in his teaching is "essential to all learning." He has endeavored to indicate, mainly in outline, "how the requirements of dynamic education can be provided for in all departments of school work." Further, he says in his preface, "I have sought to point out that there is a definite order in which the motor powers develop, and that in our instruction we will achieve the highest success only as we conform quite closely to this order." Later on in his book, the nature and causes of "fatigue" are discussed and the efforts upon mind and body are traced. Besides relating his own experiences in teaching, Prof. O'Shea has summarized the investigations that have been made upon the topics discussed by him. He sums up his conclusions as follows in the last paragraph of the book:

> In arranging the daily programme it should be the aim to have pupils give concentrated attention for brief periods only to the work in hand. One hour of real hard work is worth three of mind-wandering, and it is far more conservative of vital forces. Some account should be taken of the "course of power" in the day, and an effort should be made to get all school work done while the energies are at flood tide. Especial pains should be taken to so arrange the programme that it will not be necessary to hold pupils to their tasks when the waning of their powers leads to relaxed attention, so that they fall into frequent errors, and thus put themselves into an unhappy relation toward their environment.

Tudor Jenks on Scott.

Tudor Jenks's forthcoming volume in the Lives of Great Writers Series, "In the Days of Scott," will be ready for publication by A. S. Barnes & Co. in April.

"Christian Origins."

This volume, being an authorized translation of Otto Pfleiderer's popular German work, is this week appearing simultaneously in London and New York. The American house is B. W. Huebsch.

The Press in the Colonies.

Thomas Whittaker is publishing "The Liberty of the Press in the American Colonies," by Livingston Rowe Schuyler, Instructor in History in the College of the City of New York.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

A. S. LUDLOW, Waukesha, Wis.—In respect to the couplet, "Count that day lost whose slow descending sun, Views from thy hands no worthy action done," it may be worth while to call attention to the fact that Guy de Faur, Lord Pibrac, a distinguished French jurist of the time of Henry III., published during his lifetime a collection of proverb-like quatrains, the thirty-first of which is as follows:

"Jusqu' au cercueil (mon fils) vueilles apprendre,
Et tien perdu le jour qui s'est passe,
Si tu n'y as quelque chose amasse,

This was translated with the rest by Joshua Sylvester some time before the year 1608, when the translation of the quatrains was included in the second quarto edition of his works, in the following form:

"Cease not to learn until thou cease to live;
Think that day lost wherein thou draw'st no letter,
Nor gain'st no lesson that new grace may give
To make thyself learneder, wiser, better."

Notwithstanding the obvious variations, there seems to be little doubt that the couplet was derived from the original French quatrain or from the English version. Both were among the most widely read verses of the respective languages, the quatrains of Pibrac having been for a very long time required to be memorized by the youth of France. Mme. de Maintenon was obliged to learn them by heart, as is related in her memoirs. In Moliere's "Sganarelle," Gorgibus tells his daughter to abandon the wicked writings which are spoiling so many young people.

Les quatrains de Pibrac, et les doctes Tablettes
Du Conseiller Matthieu; l'ouvrage est de valeur,

Later the quatrains—126 in number—were permitted to fall into obscurity in the French, although an elegant reprint of them was issued by M. A. Lemerre at Paris in 1874.

Sylvester's poems met a similar fate, both as to popularity and as to decline thereof. Between 1604 and 1642 there were printed of his collected works four editions in quarto and three in folio. Burton quotes one of the quatrains as translated in the "Anatomy of Melancholy," and some citations from them are still in common use, such as "Enough's a feast," "Virtue's her own reward," &c. But I do not know of any reprint of the whole since the folio of 1641, except a limited edition of Sylvester's works by Grosart about 1880. Southey, in "The Doctor," does a good deal for the rehabilitation of the translator, but "The Doctor" itself is little read at present. Examples of five out of the seven editions of Sylvester above noted—namely, those of 1608, 1611, 1613, 1633, and 1641—are owned here at Waukesha, but they do not appear to be very common in the bookshops.

M. J. MANLEY, Junction City, Kan.—"Mrs. Lofty and I," which you say is anonymous, is found in "Poets and Poetry of Buffalo," credited to Mrs. Gildersleeve.

ANNA ELLIS.—In your issue of March 3, in answer to "D. T. Lawrence," you say "Mrs. Lofty and I" is anonymous. The author is John G. Saxe. He prefaced his recitation of the poem by saying that while he might not "speak his piece as well as some of the budding elocutionists listening to him, at least he had one advantage over us—he knew what the author meant, for he was the author." Can you tell me where I can get a copy of a little song called "To the West" and beginning:

"To the West! to the West! to the land of the free,
Where the mighty Missouri rolls down to the sea"?

It was published over Charles A. Mackay's name by mistake, but it is mine, and I have not even one copy that I can find. I wrote it for my husband to use in an article on Dakota, in 1883.

H. E. B., Orange, N. J.—Answering W. McBride, Rutherford, N. J.: Over forty years ago the verse on a card was pinned to the wall of an office in which I worked, and is as follows:

"It chills my blood to hear the blest Supreme Rudely appealed to on each trifling theme.
Maintain thy rank, vulgarity despise,
To swear is neither brave, polite, nor wise.
You would not swear upon a bed of death;

L. M. CUMMINGS, Hackensack, N. J.—Allow me to correct the quotation made by J. M. Parker in THE REVIEW of Saturday, March 10. The original words were: "Attention, the universe! by kingdoms, right wheel." Unless I am greatly mistaken, the words were by Prof. Morse himself, who, after ticking them from the instrument, handed the strip of paper to Gen. Cummings, who had just been appointed to a new command in the military. Prof. Morse afterward placed the letters underneath the telegraphic dots. The message is still in the possession of Mr. G. F. Cummings of New York, a son of Gen. Cummings.

"There dwells high over Switzerland
A spirit great and still."

They are from a song entitled "The Guardian Genius of the Swiss," by J. H. Tobler. I have them in a book called "Songs of All Nations," published in 1876 by C. M. Cady, and now I presume out of print. There are three verses.

E. G. LEMCKE.—W. L. Sherwood inquires regarding the phrase "To be a good naturalist is to know well one's own parish." May not this be a criticism on or quotation from Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne," a book describing, I believe, the whole natural history of Selborne Parish, Hampshire, England?

F. L. W.—The book about which Mr. Charles N. Chase inquired—"Yazoo, or the Picket Line of Freedom in the South"—was published in 1884 by Richard H Darby, Washington, D. C., is now out of print, but can easily be secured at the old book stores in Washington. I saw several copies there last Summer. A. T. Morgan, the author, was Colonel of the Second Wisconsin Infantry during the civil war, and settled in Mississippi in 1865, after the muster-out of his regiment. At first well received by the Southern whites, he was later cordially disliked by them, and proscribed socially because of his theories about the equality of the races. He put his theories into practice by marrying a negro woman, and was warmly congratulated by Gerrit Smith for thus setting a good example. Morgan, in his book, declares that he never regretted this marriage. Failing at cotton planting, Morgan became a carpet-bag politician. In 1874 he killed the Sheriff of Yazoo County, Miss., and became Sheriff himself. After 1875 he was in the Department of the Interior at Washington until turned out by Secretary Lamar in 1884. He then went to New Mexico, and is still living. Morgan made a good official, it is said, in spite of his predilection for the negroes. His book is a most interesting description of his experiences in the South.

Two friends, one in Baltimore, one in this city, write to say that the book for which "F. A. D." asked is not "Roara Pass." but "R— Pass." One of them vouches for the fact. The point of the information being dependent on the word beginning with R, both correspondents have naturally enough made that practically illegible. But they say that the book is by Erick Mackenzie, and with that information to start from we have made out that the book is "Roua Pass; or, Englishmen in the Highlands." It was published in this country in 1867 by A. K. Loring of Boston in his Railroad Library. It is not in print now. The author's real name was Mrs. Mercy Grogan.

E. R., West Hoboken, N. J.—I should be pleased to get information regarding Pierce Egan, a list of his writings, and where they may be obtained.

Pierce Egan was born in London about 1772, and lived there all his life. He was the first sporting reporter, going all over England to races, prizefights, matches of any kind, and describing them excellently. He married, and at his death in 1849 left a large family, his eldest son, Pierce Egan the younger, being well known as a novelist. His works were: "The Mistress of Royalty," 1814; "Life in London; or, the Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn, Esq., and His Elegant Friend, Corinthian Tom, Accompanied by Bob Logic, the Oxonian, in Their Rambles and Sprees in the Metropolis," 1821-2; "The Fancy Tog's Man vs. Young Sadboy, the Milling Quaker," 1821; "Life and Extraordinary Adventures of S. D. Hayward, Denominated the Modern Macheath," 1822; "Account of the Trial of John Thurtell and Joseph Hunt for the Murder of William Weare," 1824; "Trial of Henry Fauntleroy," 1824; "Pierce Egan's Life in London and Sporting Guide," 1824, (a weekly, later merged with "Bell's Life";) "Life of an Actor," 1824-25; "Anecdotes, Original and Selected, of the Turf, the Chase, the Ring, and the Stage," 1827; "Finish to the Adventures of Tom, Jerry, and Logic," 1828; "Walks Through Bath," 1828; "Trip to Ascot Races," 1828; "The Show Folks," 1831; "Matthew's Comic Annual," 1831; "Pierce Egan's Book of Sports and Mirror of Life," 1832; "The Pilgrims of the Thames in Search of the National," 1838. He had retired from journalism some time before his death.

W. W., Oakwood, Penn.—In his "Researches Into the History of British Dogs" G. R. Jesse quotes from Drayton's tenth Eclogue some pathetic lines on the parting of a shepherd and his "cur," but I cannot find them in any of the "eclogs" of "The Shepheard's Garland." Is any other poem of Drayton's divided into eclogues? Or can you locate the lines, beginning "Poor cur, quoth he—"?

They are in the tenth of the separate "Eglogs," not in "The Shepheard's Garland." It is very difficult to find one of Drayton's poems printed in its entirety; he is represented usually by selections. The Spencer Society of Manchester, England, has printed the "Eglogs," the "Poly-Olbion," and other of his poems, but there seems to be no complete edition.

Mrs. M. J. W., Staten Island—Can you tell me whether the collection of poems called "Children's Garland," by Grace Greenwood, published about 1870, is still in print, by whom it is compiled, and where it can be obtained?

We do not find that "The Children's Garland" was compiled by "Grace Greenwood," (Mrs. Lippincott;) there was one such book published by Nelson about twenty-five years ago, and Coventry Patmore compiled another. You can get these books only by chance.

T. C., New York.—Can you inform me if there was published in this city some twenty to thirty years ago a book or paper called Royal Register, and where I could obtain copies of it?

We find no such book or article recorded. There was a book, "Americans of Royal Descent," published here some ten years ago; this may be what you mean.

A. A. G.—Kindly print in full or inform me as to where I can find the following poems: One is probably entitled "The Patter of the Rain" on a cottage roof while the sleeper is listening to its imaginary music; the second is (although I am not certain) entitled "The Bugle Call," by Mosler, a Californian writer who died about three years ago.

The first is Coates Kinney's "Rain on the Roof," which you will find in Vol. I. of "The World's Best Poetry." The second poem we do not identify.

J. M.—I have an article on Fitz James O'Brien, which I cut from Harper's Weekly in 1862, just after his death. It says: "The writer's own acquaintance with O'Brien dates from his first contributions to Harper's Magazine. The earliest of these that I can now identify appeared in the magazine for November, 1853." This evidently refers to a very singular and powerfully written story called "A Dead Secret," of which no mention is made by Mr. W. M. Winter in his volume of O'Brien's writings published in 1881. Can you tell me if this story was really written by O'Brien; or, if not, who did write it?

The story is not credited to O'Brien in the index to Harper's Magazine, published some thirteen years ago; it is given there without any author's name. Poole omits it entirely from his index. We cannot tell the author's name.

J. H. CRAWFORD—I have a book with this title page: "The Epics of the Ton; or, The Glories of the Great World. A Poem in Two Books." Published anonymously in London in 1807. Halkett & Laing's Dictionary ascribes it to Lady Anne Hamilton. Was the work suppressed? I shall be greatly obliged for any information you can give me concerning the rarity of the book and the circumstances of its publication. Also what is the approximate value of Dauncey's "Compendious History of Portugal," (London, 1661,) and "The School for Wits," by Ralph Wewitzer of the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, (London, 1815)?

The book is not ascribed to her in the Dictionary of National Biography, and one that is generally ascribed to her is in that dictionary declared not to have been written by her. Dauncey's and Wewitzer's books have no value.

M. H. McH.—Does Whitman's "Leaves of Grass" contain all his poems—"The Song of Myself," for instance? Was his private life justified in his works? Did he marry at all? Is it true that Bulwer Lytton and Owen Meredith is or are one person?

"Leaves of Grass" was his first book, published in 1855. The poem "I Celebrate Myself" was not in that book. Whitman's private life was respectable; he never married. Bulwer-Lytton (Edward George Earle Lytton-Bulwer, Edward George Earle Lytton-Bulwer-Lytton, Baron Lytton) was the father of "Owen Meredith," whose real name was Edward Robert Bulwer-Lytton; the son was made Earl.

C. P. P.—How much could I get for a well-preserved copy of The New York Herald dated Wednesday, May 6, 1835? It is a first copy of the first volume of that paper.

You can get just what a person who wants the paper is willing to give. Old newspapers are worth nothing as a rule, unless wanted for some special purpose.

M. S. R. W., Bloomsberg, Penn.—What book is there, published within the last five years, and by whom written, with the title "In the Dark," or something on that order—"When It Was Dark," possibly? Can you give me this information about this book?

Do you mean Hamlin Garland's "Tyranny of the Dark"? It was published by Harper last May. We find no other book that might suit you.

W. J. P., New York—I have a book entitled "Desultory Reminiscences of a Tour through Germany, Switzerland, and France," by an American, Boston, (Ticknor,) 1838. Can you tell me who was the author?

Hezekiah Hartley Wright, a graduate of Harvard in 1831, who died in 1840.

A SCOTCH READER—Could you give me the name of the author of these lines: "In days of old, when knights were bold"?

Frederic E. Weatherley, an English barrister, who also wrote "Nancy Lee" and other popular songs.

I. S.—I have the impression that Kenesaw signifies "Blue Mountain." The old Selma, Rome & Dalton Railroad during the early seventies used to be called "The Blue Mountain Route," and I supposed the term referred to Kenesaw Mountain, which lay to the eastward of the railroad, not far south of Dalton. But I cannot give this on authority and merely submit it for the decision of your expert.

Appeals to Readers.

W. J. B., Brooklyn.—I want to get hold of a story called "The White Bishop." It dealt with two soldiers who had been taken prisoners, I think in the Franco-Prussian war. In the climax they are compelled to draw lots by means of two pieces of a chess set—the white bishop meaning liberty and the other piece death.

W. J., New York.—Where does this quotation originate?

"Yet I scarce hoping to attain that rest
Am from the harbor driven, tempest tost,

WHITEHEAD PHITZ, Salisbury, N. C.—Can you locate for me a poem of faith in which Columbus is imagined as making repeated reply to his fearful companions amid the waste of unknown seas, "Sail on, and on, and on?"

A. M. J., Brooklyn.—Can you tell me the origin of the phrase "the long arm of coincidence?"

INQUIRER.—Where can I get a poem entitled "The Sailor of the Sail?"

THE PUBLISHERS.

"The Cape-to-Cairo Railway"—Another Edition of "The Jungle"—Goldwin Smith's New Book.

NEARER to realization and possibly more prominent in the public eye than even the attempts to bind Siberia with Alaska by rail is that African line, now rapidly approaching completion, which is to connect the Africa of the Mediterranean with the territories of British conquest and enterprise in the extreme south. "The Cape-to-Cairo Route" therefore forms a most important topic in the series "The Railways of the Future," which Lieut. Col. Sir Percy Gironard of the British Royal Engineers is writing for Scribner's Magazine. It will immediately follow Charles M. Pepper's article on "The Pan-American Railway," published in the April number.

McClure, Phillips & Co. have secured the book rights of "A Sailor of Fortune: Being the Life History of B. S. Osbon," which has been appearing serially in Pearson's Magazine. It will come out in the Autumn.

Volume II. of Beaumont and Fletcher in the Cambridge English Classics Series, edited by Arnold Glover and A. R. Waller, is being issued by the Macmillan Company. It contains "The Elder Brother," "The Spanish Curate," "Wit Without Money," "Beggars Bush," "The Humorous Lieutenant," and "The Faithful Shepherdess." It is announced that when the set (ten volumes) shall have been published a companion volume will be issued as a commentary to the entire work. It will have explanatory notes, a glossary, and other supplementary material useful to the student and general reader.

Dodd, Mead & Co. are publishing this week Miss H. A. Guerber's "How to Prepare for Europe." It is a comprehensive work, written in a popular vein. There are chapters on the history of each country, its literature and art, a vocabulary in six languages, bibliographies of history, art, travel, &c., and other material for the European traveler.

Arrangements have been made by McClure, Phillips, & Co. to have brought out in England Washington Gladden's recent volume, "The New Idolatry."

The books for students which the Macmillan Company is issuing include a new "Summary of English History," by Norman L. Frazer, which, with its fifty-three illustrations and twelve maps, is intended to be a vade mecum for the young history student, and "Studies in Roman History," by E. G. Hardy. This includes Mr. Hardy's entire volume on "Christianity and the Roman Government" in its original form, but with the errors corrected and one or two additions to some chapters.

Doubleday, Page & Co. report that they are printing another large edition, consisting of 5,000 copies, of Upton Sinclair's story of Chicago, "The Jungle."

The scene of the new novel by John Luther Long, which the Macmillan Company is shortly to publish, is laid in the land of "Madame Butterfly," and deals with the love story of Lady Hoshiko, Dream-of-a-Star. She is confronted by a marriage with a samurai who is pledged to die at a moment's notice from the Emperor.

Volumes XI. and XII. are about to be added by the Scribners to their Beacon Edition of F. Hopkinson Smith. The books are "At Close Range" and "The Wood Fire in No. 3."

The Western Literary Press of Cincinnati is bringing out this week "How the Bishop Built His College in the Woods," by John James Piatt. It tells of the founding and building of Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, by the first Bishop of that State, Philander Chase. It is the story of a heroic episode in the history of education.

The Macmillan Company announces a "Portrait Biography" of the late English actor, Sir Henry Irving. The portraits will be in color from the brush of Mortimer Menpes. The text is in the hands of the artist's daughter, Dorothy. The volume will be a small 16mo in size.

Moffat, Yard & Co. have nearly ready for publication "In Vanity Fair: A Tale of Frocks and Femininity," by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd. This is not a "fashion book," but provides a description of the atmosphere and environment from which the fashions spring. Mrs. Brainerd shows that the dressmaker of Paris is the adapter of fashions, not the creator, and that the real creator is "the whirlpool of vanity, frivolity, and mad extravagance," centring in the capital of the French.

E. P. Dutton & Co. will bring out the second week in April "Three Men in a Motor Car," by Winthrop E. Scarritt, former President of the Automobile Club of America, for which Mr. and Mrs. Williamson have written the introduction. The book describes a European automobile trip. It also includes hints to devotees of the "sport." On the same day will appear "Robert Browning and Alfred Domett," the volume of letters showing Browning as a friend.

Besides the title story in the new book by Robert Grant, "The Law Breakers," which Charles Scribner's Sons have in press, there are six others—"George and the Dragon," "An Exchange of Courtesies," "The Romance of a Soul," "Against His Judgment," "A Surrender," and "Across the Way." The stories treat of a variety of themes, and are in Judge Grant's characteristic vein of "Unleavened Bread" and "The Undercurrent."

Late in the Spring the Macmillan Company will publish Prof. Goldwin Smith's new book, "A Prayer for Light."

Little, Brown & Co. will issue the first week of next month "The Up-to-Date Waitress," by Janet Mackenzie Hill, author of "Salads, Sandwiches, and Chafing-Dish Dainties," &c. Her book tells of the duties of waitresses, their "personal qualifications," arrangement of the table, the care of a dining room, the serving of food, cutting bread and cold meat, table decorations, &c. There are numerous illustrations.

A new edition of William J. Hopkins's "The Sandman: More Farm Stories," is being prepared by L. C. Page & Co. Mr. Hopkins's "Sandman" books have been included in the New York school and kindergarten libraries.

"John Frane" is the title chosen for Frederick Palmer's new story which Charles Scribner's Sons are to publish. It is a "tale of four," two heroes and two heroines. This novel, by the author of "The Vagabond," is said to be a "story for one sitting." It will have illustrations by Alonzo Kimball.

Moffat, Yard & Co. will shortly send out reproductions in colors and carbon of W. L. Taylor's new painting, "The Nativity." The artist is said to combine the divine with the human element in the picture, and not, as has usually been done, particularly by the early painters, to sacrifice the human and natural for the supernatural. The picture by Mr. Taylor, it is stated, is a simple, elegant interpretation of the Bible story.

A new translation and commentary on "The Theaetetus and Philebus of Plato" has been made by H. F. Carlill, M. A., formerly of Trinity College, Cambridge, England. It forms the first volume in the New Classical Library, edited by Dr. Emil Reich, and published in this country by the Macmillan Company. Other volumes to follow will be "Plutarch's Lives," by W. R. Frazer; Plato, Herodotus, Tacitus, &c., each being newly translated and explained. Full explanatory notes have been provided, and the edition is appearing in handy, small 12mo volumes, bound in pliable cloth.

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. report that "The Life That Counts," by Samuel V. Cole, President of Wheaton Seminary, has been well received, and that a private person has ordered 1,500 copies of the book.

The new edition of Sidney McCall's "Truth Dexter," which will come from Little, Brown & Co. April 21, will have eight full-page illustrations in tint from paintings by Alice Barber Stephens.

"Six Stars," Nelson Lloyd's new book, which is to appear in the very near future with the imprint of Charles Scribner's Sons, is also the name of the village in which are the scenes. The author portrays life in a rural community in the Juniata Valley, in Pennsylvania. The book is full of quaint humor and funny episodes. The numerous illustrations include sketches by A. B. Frost, Howard Pyle, Albert Levering, Fletcher C. Ransom, and H. C. Peck.

The amateur gardener may expect before the Summer a volume from the Scribners bearing the title, "The Seasons in a Flower Garden," from the pen of Louise Shelton. It has been divided into two parts, the first being a guide to flowering plants from April to November. Miss Shelton gives directions for plans, planting, soil, &c., the chapters arranged according to the months. Part II. contains general information on the culture of flowers.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out a new edition of the oration of "Demosthenes Against Midias," edited by Prof. William Watson Goodwin of Harvard University. The notes are critical and explanatory. Following a statement of the argument and a brief historical introduction, in the appendix is an account of certain matters with which the oration is concerned.

About the middle of next month Moffat, Yard & Co. will bring out "The Invisible Bond," a new novel by Eleanor Talbot Kinkead. It is a very long story, being only forty pages briefer than Mrs. Wharton's "House of Mirth." The frontispiece follows a new plan. It represents the two principal female characters in the book, reproduced on opposite pages in full color, from paintings by C. Allan Gilbert. The significance of each type is signified by the colored remarques under the proper pictures of a lily and a rose.

Some Definite Dates Ahead.

April 6 will finally mark the publication by D. Appleton & Co. of Molly Elliot Seawell's new novel of modern French life, "The Chateau of Montplaisir," and Arthur Henry Vesey's "The Castle of Lies." These publishers, by the way, report the second large edition of Robert Barr's latest detective story, "The Triumphs of Eugene Valmont," and new printings of Maxwell Gray's "The Great Refusal," George Moore's "The Lake," Maartens Maartens's "The Healers," and Major Seaman's "The Real Triumph of Japan."

Next Saturday, McClure, Phillips & Co. will bring out Ellis Parker Butler's humorous tale, "Pigs is Pigs," and O. Henry's "The Four Million." This volume contains twenty-five stories that deal with New York life, from the Battery to the Bronx, and Coney Island to the Bowery, East and West Sides, the Tenderloin and Park Row. Altogether it presents a vivid picture of the "real" New York of 1905.

On April 10, Mrs. Mary Stewart Cutting's new volume of "More Stories of Married Life" will appear with the McClure-Phillips imprint, together with William Allen White's "In Our Town." The latter deals with life in a Kansas farming town. The story is told by one of the characters, the editor of the town's leading daily. It is said to suggest Barrie's "Window in Thrums," by the form in which the book is cast and its humor.

MARCH

PAGES IN WAITING.

SOME recollection is probably had of the cruise organized by the well-known sportsman, Mr. E. C. Benedict, for investigating the sources of the supply of Brazilian rubber. It was made last Winter by the steam yacht Virginia around the West Indies and a thousand miles up the Amazon River. A description of the cruise and its achievements has now been written and the book will be published by E. P. Dutton & Co. next week. "Ten Thousand Miles in a Yacht" is the title of the volume.

A Millionaire on the Amazon.

Its author is Richard Arthur, a well-known magazine writer, who has contributed to English as well as American periodicals. He was a member of the party, and his story is introduced by a "characteristic" paper from another of the party, W. M. Ivins, the Republican candidate in the late New York Mayoralty election.

An attractive part of the forthcoming book, it is said, is the illustrations, of which there are nearly 200. They show many views of the Amazon country and other places visited by the yacht. As may be expected, many parts of Mr. Arthur's story deal with the india-rubber supply and trade. The book will appeal to a variety of readers—the "general" reader, the business man, the traveler, &c.

Bishop Potter's Book of Reminiscences.

"Bishops and Archbishops," the volume of recollections of the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church, by the Right Rev. Henry C. Potter of this city, will be published by the Putnams in a fortnight. In no sense, the author writes in his preface, do the reminiscences "presume to be biographies. In no light can they be read as embodying the graver material of history. But they will furnish some of those sidelights by means of which individuality in human portraiture may be detected, and in the often lighter and more playful quality of which are recognized or recalled those more endearing characteristics which make men widely remembered and genuinely beloved."

The volume was suggested to Bishop Potter on Decoration Day three years ago, when, returning home after the dinner given by Whitelaw Reid to St. Gaudens, (whose statue of Sherman was unveiled that day,) he regretted the fact that the reminiscences exchanged that evening of Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and others would never be put on paper. But, the author writes, "I had not gone a great way in this pharisaic judgment of my fellows, when I was seized with the memory of official relations of my own" with the House of Bishops, with which he first became connected at the end of 1866, when he was elected Secretary.

Following the description of the House of Bishops at the time of his introduction to it, Bishop Potter describes its then Presiding Bishop, the Right Rev. Benjamin Bosworth Smith. The chapters succeeding deal with the Right Rev. Dr. William Rollinson Whittingham, Bishop of Maryland; Bishops John Williams of Connecticut, sometime Presiding Bishop; Manton Eastburn of Massachusetts, Thomas March Clark of Rhode Island, Arthur Cleveland Coxe of Western New York, Joseph P. B. Wilmer of Louisiana, and others.

The "Fayre" Land of Wessex.

This part of the County of Dorsetshire, in England, is described in the new color book which the Macmillan Company is now publishing. The text, by Clive Holland, is accompanied by seventy-five colored illustrations from paintings by Walter Tyndale and a map. Mr. Holland speaks as follows of Wessex:

> By some strange chance the term Wessex, as denoting that portion of Southern and Southwestern England which, in Saxon times, formed the kingdom of the West Saxons, almost disappeared from the language and lost significance, becoming a mere historical term. It was left to the genius of a Wessex-born novelist and poet, Thomas Hardy, to revive the name in 1874, and by such reincarnation to arouse a keen and ever, though slowly, increasing interest in the "fayre land of Wessex," its people, and its scenery.

It is this portion of England that offers a "variety" of life, character, and scenery which is "all too rare" to-day. According to Mr. Holland, "in its peaceful vales it is still possible to forget the town, the fret and fume of city life. What more can a modern pilgrim of the thoughtful type desire, when this same quietude is wedded to beauty and much of old-world simplicity?"

The chapters describe different towns, old and new, of Wessex, Wessex in British, Roman, and Norman times, and, in mediaeval, Georgian, and Stuart periods, the history and romance of Dorchester, the capital of Wessex, the story of the famous stronghold, known as Corfe Castle, some Wessex types, the seasons in Wessex, and so on, closing with some of the villages in Hardy's novels. The pictures show some of the most interesting and beautiful parts of Wessex.

Material for the Season.

Gardens and gardening are given much attention just now, and, among the forthcoming books on the subject are to be "Notes from Nature's Garden," by Frances A. Bardswell, and "Market Gardening," while the May number of The Century Magazine will be devoted almost entirely to gardens.

The volume of "Notes from Nature's Garden" will be published by Longmans, Green & Co. in April. It is by the author of "The Book of Town and Window Gardening," &c. The thirty-two illustrations from photographs of animals, birds, flowers, gardens, &c., are accompanied by "notes" on the seasons (into which the volume has been divided) and their characteristics.

"Market Gardening" is the latest in the John Lane Company's series of Handbooks of Practical Gardening. It reviews the different stages of a market gardening business, reveals the notable defects and suggests new methods and remedies for dealing with these defects, and treats in detail of the problems arising from the selection of land, labor difficulties, crops, packing, preparing produce for sale, &c. The illustrations are from photographs and drawings.

Prominent among the contributions to the forthcoming Century will be the account of "An Ancient Garden" at Sharon, Conn., which was "sketched in" at the close of the Revolution, by Helen Evertson Smith; the description by Frances Duncan of "The Gardens of Cornish," a quaint New Hampshire town; a brief sketch by Francis E. Leupp of "Washington's Old Garden at Mount Vernon," and a paper on how to make the garden effective and artistic, "The Architectural Treatment of a Small Garden." There will also be a study in effects, by George W. Cable, entitled "Where to Plant What," while "The Training of the Human Plant" is an article by Luther Burbank, and Prof. Bailey of Cornell, in his paper, "Why Do Boys Leave the Farm?" will give some facts from young men leaving the farm. As usual, the number will be profusely illustrated from photographs and drawings.

Franklin's Writings, Vol. V.

This new volume in Albert Henry Smyth's edition of "The Writings of Benjamin Franklin," which The Macmillan Company publishes, deals with Franklin's sojourn in London from 1767 to 1772. It contains, for the most part, his letters during those years, principally on political and scientific matters. There are, in addition, the "Remarks and Facts Concerning American Paper Money," reprinted from Goddard's Pennsylvania Chronicle in 1767; a paper dated Paris, September, 1767, on "Lightning, and the Method [now used in America] of Securing Buildings and Persons from Its Mischievous Effects"; letters to The London Chronicle on "The Causes of the American Discontents Before 1768," "Smuggling," the proposed "vigorous" measures in America, and other matters; a scheme for a new alphabet and reformed mode of spelling; the preface to "Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania"; Franklin's answers to the queries of Strahan respecting affairs in America, and the queries; the "Craven Street Gazette"; a letter to The London Packet on "Toleration in Old England and New England," and other papers. There are also letters from some of Franklin's correspondents, including Samuel Cooper, Du Pont de Nemours, Thomas Livezey, and the well-known scientist and author, Joseph Etienne Betthier. Among the illustrations are some reproductions of photographs of a statuette of Franklin from life made by Nini, now in France.

A New Hymn Book.

"Church Hymns and Tunes," the title of the latest hymn book which is about to come from A. S. Barnes & Co., has been compiled and edited by the Rev. Dr. Herbert B. Turner and William F. Biddle. The selections include hymns by authors belonging to almost every branch of the Christian Church, and, in order to make a standard work, the compilers have examined a large number of ancient and modern books on the subject, and taken out the "best" that was in them. The many new tunes in the book are "from the latest and best work of acknowledged leaders in English ecclesiastical music."

There are 644 hymns on morning and evening, the Trinity, death, Christ, salvation, penitence, the Church, the year, love, warfare, etc. Among the authors are the Rev. Horatius Bonar, Phoebe Cary, Cowper, the Rev. John Ellerton, Bishop Heber, Wesley, etc. The composers include Handel, Gounod, Weber, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Prof. H. A. Parker, W. H. Monk, Lowell Mason, Dr. J. B. Dykes, and others.

A number of indices have been provided—an index of first lines, of chants and responses, an alphabetical index of tunes, metrical index of tunes, and indices of authors and composers, with the dates of their births and deaths.

Mayor Johnson.

"Tom Johnson, Mayor of Cleveland," will be the subject of an article to appear in the next issue of Appletons' Booklovers' Magazine from the pen of David Graham Phillips. It will be the first of a series of studies "of a real man by a real man."

The Caribou.

Ernest Thompson Seton's "animal" contribution to the next Scribner's Magazine will be on "The Caribou and His Kindred," for which he has made many drawings and camera pictures.

It differs from Baedeker and other guide books in many important points.

1. It has suggestive articles on how to travel; how to fit oneself for a European trip; what to read in preparation; the peculiar customs of each country the traveller ought to know in advance. NOT IN BAEDEKER.
2. It has bibliographies of history, art, travel and fiction, chronological tables; lists of painters, sculptors, architects and musicians and their works. NOT IN BAEDEKER.
3. It has historical sketches of each country and many illustrations of works of art and architecture. NOT IN BAEDEKER.

As a condensed history of Europe it is intensely interesting.

Travellers will find it a necessity in their preparations, and will make it a constant companion on their journey.

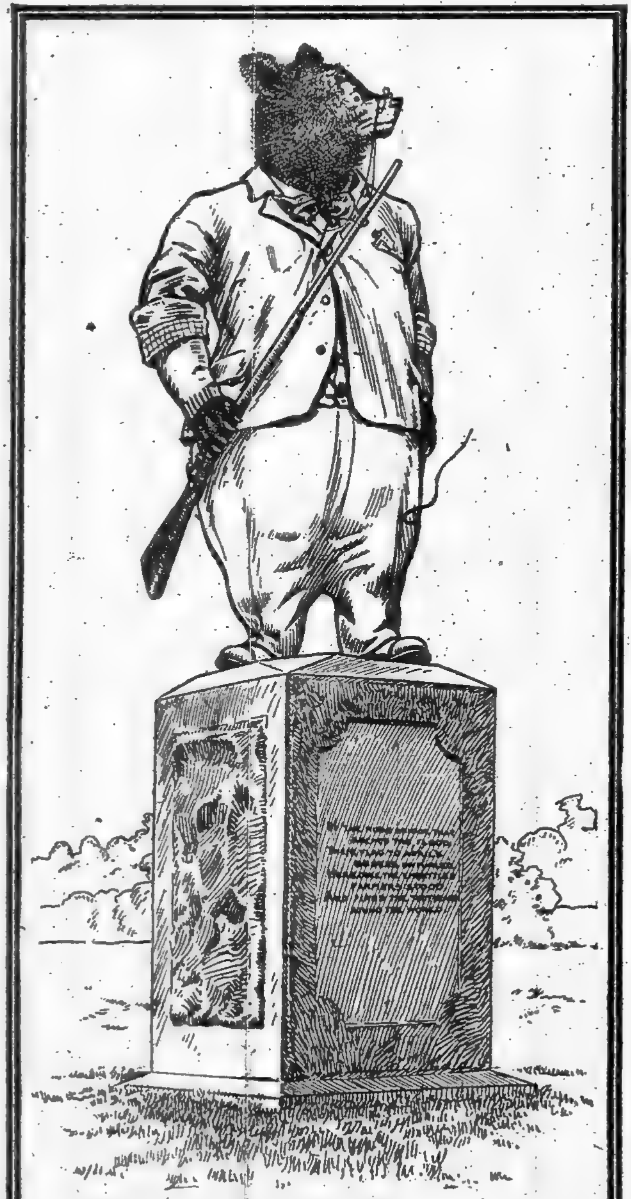
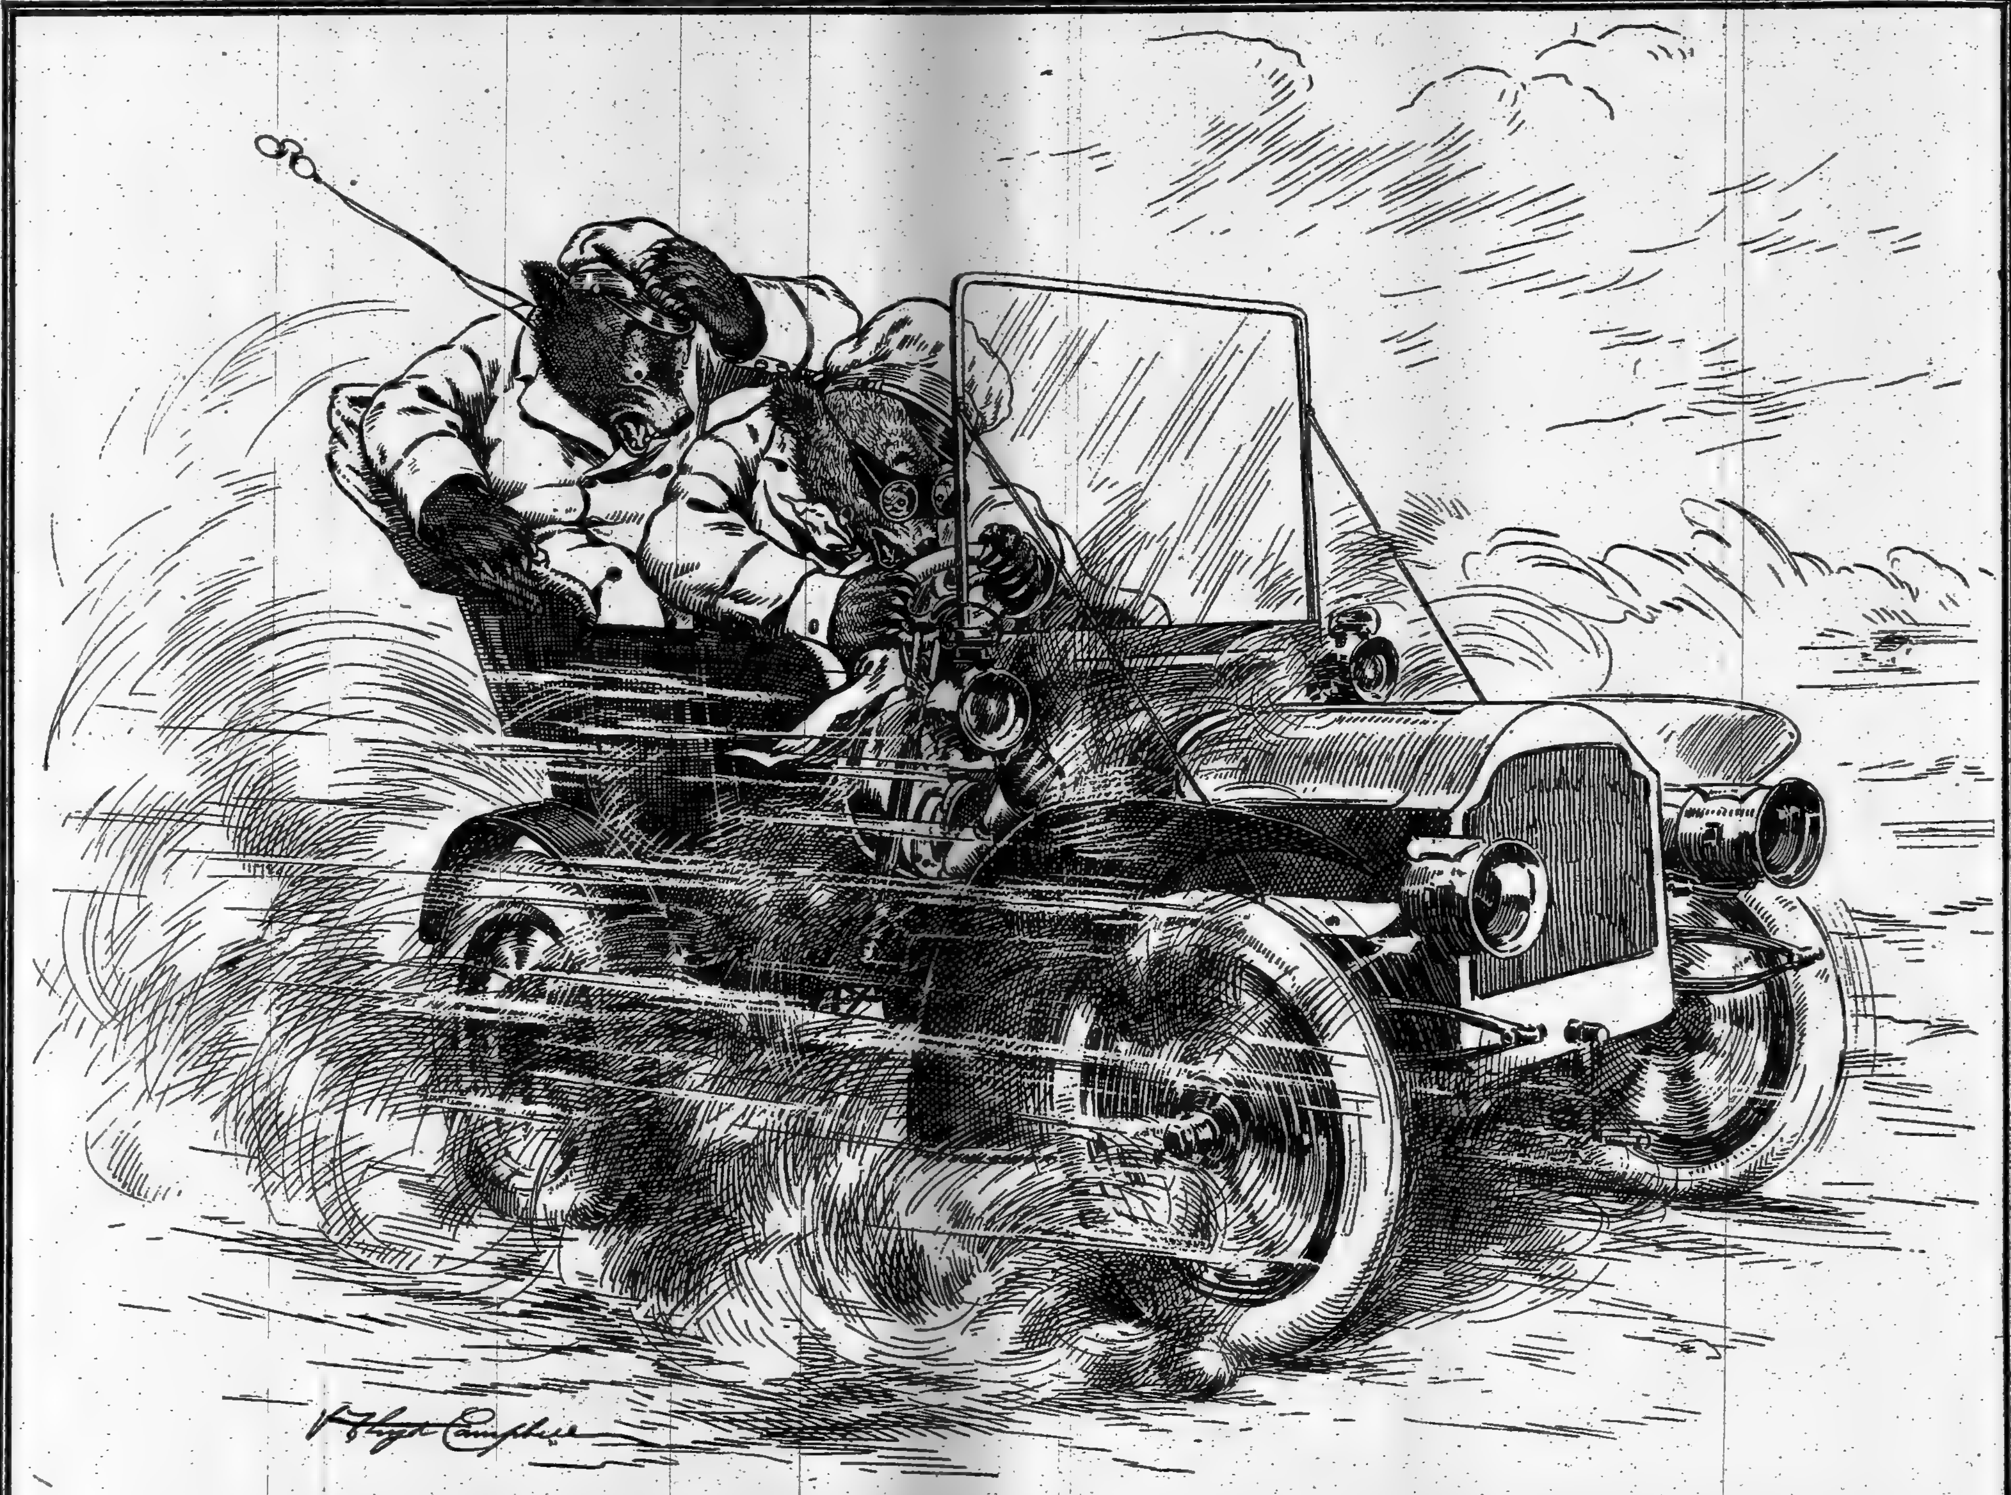
XIII. THE BEARS TAKE AN AUTOMOBILE RIDE

The bears had spent some strenuous days
In catching up with modern ways;
But of all the hours they ever spent
On railroad train or in mountain tent,
Or seeing sights since East they'd come,
Or riding bronchos, going some,
Or in balloons on a stormy lake,
Or having picnics of cream and cake,
Or riding rapids in a punt,
Or climbing mountains game to hunt,
Or teaching school or trying to make
A farmer's bull some medicine take,
Or having dinners in a dining car,
This ride to Concord was best by far.

They hired an auto of latest style,
With record one hundred and thirty mile
(From Holyoke to Marblehead;
At least that's what the agent said)



"I'd like to stand up there alone
Like that minute man on that block of stone."

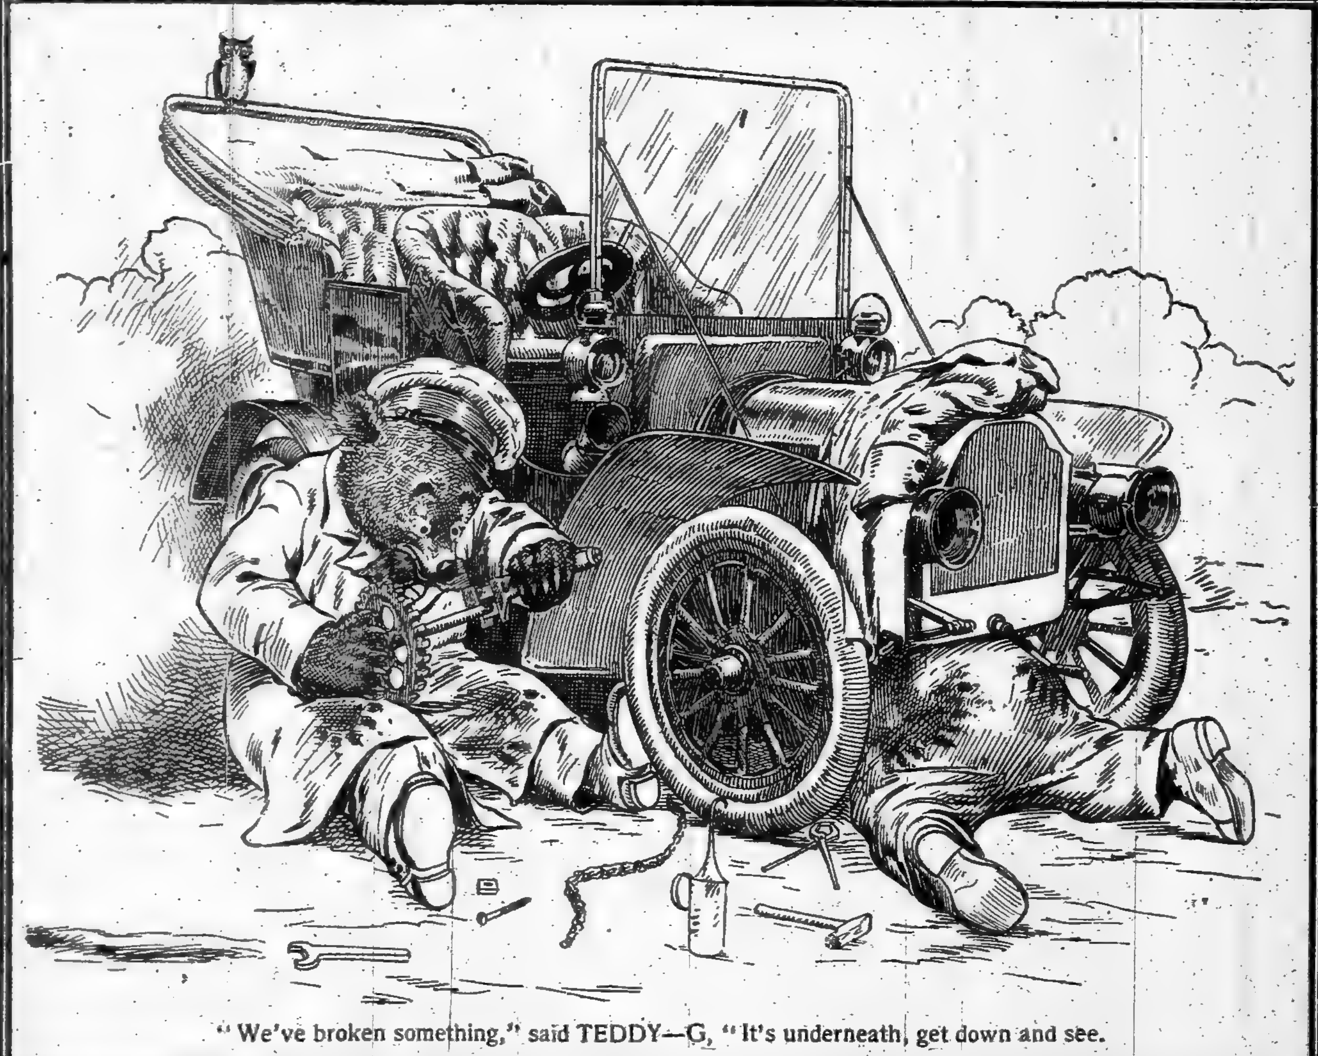


"TEDDY—G said he would chauffeur be and run the car like sixty-three; while TEDDY—B said folks would find him following pretty close behind."

In ninety minutes and seconds six
Without a stop or a thing to fix,
The bears were shown the works inside,
And how to steer and how to ride,
And what to do to climb a hill,
And how to start or stop at will,
And the horn to blow and the way to back
When there's danger forward on the track.
TEDDY—G said he would chauffeur be,
And run the car like sixty-three;
While TEDDY—B said folks would find
Him following pretty close behind.

They started off like millionaires,
With cash to burn and free from cares,
Down Beacon Street and across Back Bay,
And over a bridge and on the way
Through Cambridge town by the famous Elm,
With TEDDY—G still at the helm.
They stopped awhile at Auburn Mount
To view the monuments and count
The names of authors widely known,
Carved in history and in stone.
At a famous grave they picked some green
To wear in memory of "Evangeline,"
And to carry home to their mountain bower
To remind them of "The Children's Hour."

And off again on a country road,
The auto carried its happy load;
Up hill and down and slow or quick,
They seemed to know the auto trick;
Passed trolley cars and loads of hay,
And delivery wagons on their way,
And schools let out for a half hour's fun,
Till they reached the town of Lexington,
Where down the street with speed and dash
They rounded up without a smash.



"We've broken something," said TEDDY—G, "It's underneath, get down and see."

The bears read history for an hour
In the Hancock House and Belfry Tower.
On monuments and tablets here
They learned the stories of Paul Revere,
And Captain Parker and his patriots brave
Who tried to make King George behave.
Then off again on lively run
To see the home of Emerson.

Said TEDDY—B, on Concord green,
When they had all the places seen,
"I'd like to stand up there alone
Like that minute man on that block of stone,
In soldier pose, without a laugh,
And have you take my photograph."
The man of bronze was lifted down
Without a kick or word or frown;
Placed on the grass and made to stand
Where folks who passed could shake his hand,
While TEDDY—B in the soldier's place,
With gun in hand and upturned face
Looked like a statue in a book

They started back at half-past two
And said they'd run the auto through
From Concord town to Auburn Mount
As quick as any clock could count.
In half a minute they hit a pace
Like an auto in a challenge race;
But something snapped and TEDDY—B
Went over head out front to see
Why TEDDY—G stopped up so quick
And made him do a hand-spring trick,
And land in mud, a pretty mess,
While the auto groaned and breathed distress.

"We've broken something," said TEDDY—G,
"It's underneath, get down and see."
"Get down yourself," said TEDDY—B,
"I'm all the way down, you bet," said he,
"But there's nothing broken in me, I know;
That mud I struck was soft as dough."
But down they got and looked below,
And back and front and high and low,
And twisted bolt and unfastened screen
And got their hands all gasoline.

And told the bears they mustn't fool
With lighted pipes and gasoline
Or they'd blow up the old machine.
The lad knew autos like a book;
He told the bears just where to look
And what to do and how to start
When things inside have come apart.
They thanked the boy and said 'twould do;
And off they went like seventy-two.

Their speed increased at every grade,
And doubled up each turn they made,
And gained each time the horn they blew,
Till they went so fast, they simply flew.
TEDDY—G tried hard to slow the speed,
But he couldn't make the levers heed;
Each thing he pulled made the wheels go round
So fast they hardly touched the ground.
There was nothing left for him to do
But simply steer and see it through,
While TEDDY—B on the seat behind
Gave him directions of every kind.

Dogs and chickens and boys at play
Climbed up on fences to clear the way;
While teams and cars turned left and right,
TEDDY—B was brave and held the wheel,
And kept his nerve like a man of steel,
And steered the auto safe and sound
Till he ran it into a bank of ground
On Boston Common with a stop so quick
That both bears did their tumble trick
And landed clear across a street
And hit the walk at a policeman's feet.

"Do you know the law?" the policeman said;
But TEDDY—G just shook his head;
While TEDDY—B said "We may be green;
But the thing to fine is this old machine."
They argued points to prove their case
And told the officer face to face
That this ride of theirs was a record run
And they didn't like to be pinched for fun.
But all their talk was of no avail;
They were taken off to Boston jail
And given a cell and locked up tight
And told to stay there for the night.

MRS. STORER GIVES ROOSEVELT'S LETTER

Written While He Was Governor, Urging Mgr. Ireland's Claims.

IT WAS FOR RAMPOLLA'S EYE

Pointed Out that, Bigoted Opponents of Catholicism Desired Reaction Within the Church.

VIENNA, March 31.—Mrs. Bellamy Storer, wife of the retiring American Ambassador, has reconsidered her decision to maintain complete silence in regard to the controversy over her husband's recall. In the course of an interview to-day she said:

"After consultation, and following the advice of many of our friends, particularly that of the Marquis de Reverseaux de Rouvray, the French Ambassador, I have decided formally to deny that I ever abused a letter of President Roosevelt, as has been asserted. The President has never written me on the subject of Archbishop Ireland, except in a letter last December upon another subject.

"Mr. Roosevelt, when Governor of New York, wrote me a letter in 1900, to which the report presumably alludes. This letter was written to me so that I might show it to Cardinal Rampolla, then Papal Secretary of State, in order to convince the Vatican of the friendly attitude of prominent Americans toward Archbishop Ireland's policy. It was all done to help our Government in its relations with the Philippines. I sent Cardinal Rampolla a copy of only half of the letter, because the other half was purely personal. That is all I wish to say about the matter.

"Neither my husband nor myself is going to indulge in recriminations against the President. We will wait and see what the authorities at Washington think right to publish about the matter. If they publish their reasons for the recall of Mr. Storer we have many proofs of the right being on our side."

Gov. Roosevelt's Letter.

The letter of Mr. Roosevelt, dated in 1900, is as follows:

"I have just received your letter. I need not say what a pleasure it would be for me to do anything for Archbishop Ireland. You know how high a regard I have always felt for him. He represents the type of Catholicism which, in my opinion, must prevail in the United States if the Catholic Church is to attain its full measure of power and usefulness with our people and our form of Government.

"I absolutely agree with what Judge Taft says to you in his letter of March 20 with relation to that part of this problem which affects the Philippines, but the problem as a whole affects the United States as a whole. A reactionary or in any way anti-American spirit in ecclesiastical affairs would in America, in the long run, result in disaster, just as certainly as a similar course in political affairs.

"I may add that the bigoted opponents of Catholicism are those most anxious to see triumph within the ranks of Catholicism this reactionary spirit and the throwing out of men who have shown broad liberalism and Americanism in their policy.

"Of course, I do not feel justified in interfering in any way, directly or indirectly, in the matter at the Vatican, but it is only fair in response to your letter that I should write you fully and frankly of my great appreciation of Archbishop Ireland, and of my firm conviction that the real future of the Catholic Church in America rests with those who, in the main, work along his lines.

"You may be interested to know of the large percentage of Catholics, without exception men standing as high in capacity as in integrity, whom I have placed on various important commissions in this State.

"So much for that part of my letter that is in direct answer to the main part of yours. I do not know whether it will be of any assistance or not, but I hope so. I need not tell you that it is a pleasure to write it or to do anything else you desire me to do if it is in my power.

"You must have a very hard time in Madrid, and I earnestly hope that the signal devotion to the good of the country which you and Bellamy have shown will result in its proper reward and in your being transferred in the not distant future to Rome, or, better still, Paris. * * *

"With love to Bellamy,

"Faithfully yours,

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

The letter also contained a reference to Mr. Roosevelt's efforts to avoid the nomination for the Vice Presidency.

Mr. Storer was much improved to-day. His physicians have recommended the Carlsbad cure, but Mr. and Mrs. Storer have resolved not to leave Vienna before June.

Many members of the aristocratic and diplomatic circles are paying visits to Mr. and Mrs. Storer. Among the callers to-day were Princess Radziwill, Count von Kuefstein, and M. Ghika, the Roumanian Minister.

THINK IT JUSTIFIES STORER.

Friends in Washington Say President's Letter Vindicates Him.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The letter given out by Mrs. Bellamy Storer created much interest here. The discovery that President Roosevelt had been interested in the cause of what is called the "Progressive" faction in the Catholic Church was not especially surprising, for he has always shown much interest in Archbishop Ireland, and other representatives of that party; but that his interest should have taken him so far as to lead him to bring the matter to the attention of Cardinal Rampolla and the Vatican was surprising to many.

Mr. Storer's friends here are disposed to take the view that this letter justifies the Ambassador in the action for which he was removed, namely, for assuring Catholics abroad that the President was on Archbishop Ireland's side. Mr. Roosevelt was not President at the time the letter was written, but Mr. Storer's friends say hat it shows clearly that the Ambassador did not misstae Mr. Roosevel's views.

The unusual punishment inflicted on the Ambassador, they say, was remarkable in view of the fact that Mr. Storer did not exaggerate the President's views. Mr. Storer was not merely removed—he was treated in a manner so summary as to be without precedent. The Austrian Government was notified that he had been removed, and was then asked to recognize a Chargé d'Affaires until Mr. Storer's successor could get to Vienna.

The fact that the Storers had been assuring Catholics abroad that the President was on Archbishop Ireland's side was communicated to Mr. Roosevelt by influential Catholics in this country who are not friendly to the ambitions and purposes of Archbishop Ireland. The summary treatment of Mr. Storer followed almost immediately.

A DENIAL BY IRELAND.

He Says That His Present Visit to Rome Is Purely Personal.

ROME, March 31.—Archbishop Ireland is most annoyed about the reports in the United States concerning his visit to Rome. He said to-day:

"I came here simply for my regular visit ad limina. It is especially untrue that I am acting as the representative of the American Government in the settlement of Philippine affairs with the Vatican. My work here is purely personal and has no public significance whatsoever."

NEW HOTEL FOR NEWPORT.

New Yorkers Will Build on Site of Old Ocean House.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, March 31.—Newport is assured of a new Summer hotel, to be ready for use for the season of 1907. Announcement was made to-day that ground would be broken for it not later than June 1, 1906.

The hotel, the plans for which have been drawn by Armstrong & Joyner of New York, will be built on the site of the old Ocean House, on Bellevue Avenue, which was burned eight years ago.

The new house is to be known as Prince George Inn. It will be three and a half stories high, and of brick. It will have a dining room 150 by 46 feet, with separate tea and breakfast rooms, be elaborately furnished and equipped with thoroughly up-to-date improvements, including a swimming pool 80 by 42 feet, and special arrangements for brokers' reports and private business, with a large garage built in connection with the hotel on the Freebody Street side of the property.

E. Maitland Armstrong of the firm of Armstrong & Joyner, architects, said last night that he could not yet announce the names of the men who are backing the Prince George Inn building project.

"Several New York gentlemen are interested in this proposition," he said, "and the construction of the new hotel is now certain. It is to cost in the neighborhood of $500,000, and more than that amount has already been subscribed for the work, which is to begin at once."

SCARED BY RICH DAIRYMEN.

Morristown Milkmen Fear Millionaires May Destroy Their Business.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., March 31.—With Dr. D. Hunter McAlpin, Rudolph Kissel, and H. McK. Twombly peddling milk from their dairies, the local milkmen are much concerned for their future, fearing that the millionaire dairymen may drive them to the wall. For some time Mr. Twombly and Mr. Kissel have enjoyed a monopoly in the milk business among their own set until Dr. McAlpin decided a few days ago to start a milk route.

The fact that these three millionaires have the finest dairies in New Jersey, and are not particular about the price obtained for their product so long as new customers are secured, has forced the local milkmen into forming a Milkmen's Association for mutual protection.

"It looks as if milk would flow like honey," said one of the dealers to-day. "But what con you do when millionaires back up the cows."

Mr. Twombly's dairies are situated near Madison, and are called the Florham Farms. Those of Mr. Kissel are known as the Inamere Farms, while Mr. McAlpin calls his dairy the Brooklawn.

WATER FOR STATEN ISLAND.

Bill to Secure It in Jersey to be Favorably Reported.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, March 31.—It looks as if Mayor McClellan's leter to Dov. Stokes, asking that Staten Island be permitted to draw a water supply—temporarily, at least—from the New Jersey watershed is to be productive of results.

The bill now under consideration authorizes the taking to Staten Island of 10,000,000 gallons of water per day in pipes under the Kill von Kull till the close of the year 1922. Much opposition has developed to the bill owing to the report that the water company entered into contracts with the owners of many lines of steamers that came to New York Harbor to furnish their ships with all the water they need.

Notwithstanding this the Senate and House Judiciary Committees have agreed to report the act for passage.

It is made the duty of the State Geologist to see that the water company does not take more than 10,000,000 gallons per day.

TO PUNISH FREIGHT FRAUDS.

Evidence Gathered in New York Sufficient for Indictments.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—As a result of the investigation in New York City by the Inter-State Commerce Commission of alleged under-billing and misdescription of goods by various shippers, it was stated at the offices of the commission to-day that the present intention is to certify the cases to the Department of Justice for criminal proceedings with the view of bringing about indictments.

This action, however, will be deferred until after the commission has conducted further hearings in other cities. At present it is contemplated by the commission to examine certain witnesses in Buffalo and Philadelphia, where it is said frauds of equal if not greater magnitude than those alleged to have been committed in New York and vicinity have been perpetrated. These latter hearings will be conducted some time in April.

A member of the commission said to-day that it was the determination of the commission, so far as possible to break up the practice and that it was their belief that this could be done only through criminal action.

500,000 MINERS QUIT; OWNERS GIVING WAY

Independent Operators Making Terms with Their Men.

A STAMPEDE, SAYS MITCHELL

Chief Battle of the War Expected in Illinois—Workers Ordered to Refrain from Violence.

Special to The New York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., March 31.—The great coal strike is on. It began this afternoon when more than half a million miners throughout the United States laid down their tools under orders not to resume work until their demands are satisfied.

It is estimated to-night that one-fifth of this number will return to their places by the end of next week. They will go back under district contracts wherever operators agree to pay wages on the basis of the 1903 mining scale and conditions.

Already the first break in the ranks of the operators has been reported to the National headquarters of the United Mine Workers here. The first reports of this nature came from Southern Indiana, where it was asserted that more than 6,000 of the 17,000 miners in the State have been asked by their employers to return on their own conditions.

Later encouraging telegrams were received from Iowa, where the operators and bituminous miners of that State are holding a convention, and from Michigan, where the operators are reported to be considering the granting of the wage demands.

The weakening on the operators' side, however, was reported generally among the independent mine owners. No indication appeared to warrant the claim that the big operators who are members of the State associations were yielding any ground.

Another important development was the posting of notices in several of the non-union fields, notably in West Virginia, announcing increases in wages. This is expected to lure thousands of union strikers to these districts, and may cripple to some extent the fight which President Mitchell is planning.

President Mitchell feels confident that a stampede will begin early next week among the operators. The first signs of a break, he declares, will come in Ohio and Western Pennsylvania, where the big mines of the Pittsburg Coal Company will be running under a double force by the end of next week.

Illinois is regarded as the field where the chief battle of the great industrial war will be fought. The determination of operations in that State is firmer than elsewhere because of special grievances against conditions imposed by the miners' organization. Matched on the other side of the struggle, too, is the strongest branch of the United Mine Workers, with nearly $1,000,000 in its treasury.

Reports to the effect that the operators in the non-union Irwin field of Central Pennsylvania have given an advance to their miners, and that the big Berwind-White Company, a Pennsylvania Railroad concern, had taken the same step, were shown to President Mitchell to-day.

"I have nothing to say," he remarked with a smile, "except that over 50 per cent. of the bituminous tonnage is ready to sign on our terms immediately."

All day President Mitchell was closeted in the office of the United Mine Workers with the National Executive Board. In the meeting plans for the conduct of the strike were discussed.

A long debate ensued over the most important of the problems to be considered, viz.: The question of how many men should be allowed to remain at work in order to protect the property at the mines. It was decided not to order out the engineers, firemen, or pump men. In addition a certain number of mine laborers probably will be permitted to remain at their posts for emergency. Any attempt on the part of an operator, however, to start his mining operations will result in the order to all of the employes at that mine to stop work at once.

The second important order issued by the National Executive Board consisted in instructions to district officials to guard against violence, rioting, or the destruction of property by strikers. Either to-morrow or Monday a general proclamation may be sent out appealing to the men to observe peace and requiring to remain as much as possible in their homes.

When Mr. Robbins signs the miners' scale it means that 20,000 miners in Western Pennsylvania, 8,000 in the Hocking Valley of Ohio, and 1,000 in Illinois will resume work. The miners' officials expect next to bring the big important operators in Western Pennsylvania into line. There are several companies in this field in competition with the Pittsburg Coal Company, which employ each from 500 to 4,000 miners.

Operators whose mines adjoin those of the Pittsburg Coal Company in the Hocking Valley are counted upon to weaken shortly. Here, however, are the great coal interests of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., known under the name of the Sunday Creek Coal Company, and the President of which is John H. Winder, who was the official Chairman of the bituminous operators during the conference recently closed in Indianapolis.

ANTHRACITE MINERS QUIT.

Indications That Scale Committee's Order Will Be Obeyed.

PHILADELPHIA, March 31.—When the mineworkers in the anthracite field finished their week's work at noon to-day there was every indication that the order of the Scale Committee of the United Mine Workers of America suspending operations pending the result of next Tuesday's conference with the operators would be generally obeyed. Reports from every district received here to-night are to the effect that the large majority of mineworkers intend to remain away from the workings until further instructions are received from President Mitchell and the members of the Scale Committee.

In the lower field, comprising the col-

FIGHT IN FRONT OF WALDORF.

Brokers Saportas and Ritchey Both Make Charge of Assault.

Two brokers met in front of the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday afternoon. Each said that the other had bumped into him; undiplomatic language was used, blows were exchanged, and then both were taken to the Tenderloin Station on mutual charges of assault. The two prisoners said they were Arnold C. Saportas, with offices at 15 Wall Street and residence at 42 East Twenty-eighth Street, and Daniel Ritchey of the Broztell Hotel, 3 East Twenty-seventh Street.

Mr. Ritchey said that he had noticed Mr. Saportas, who was accompanied by his wife, walking down Fifth Avenue from Thirty-ninth Street bumping into nearly everybody he passed. Near the Waldorf, he went on, Mr. Saportas had bumped into him. Mr. Saportas told the Sergeant that Mr. Ritchey, on the contrary, had bumped into him. At any rate, there had been a fight.

Mrs. Saportas first offered her $160,000 home in Westchester as bail for her husband, and that being refused she offered the furniture in the home at 42 East Twenty-eighth Street. Frank Brobst, proprietor of the Brostell, declared that the hotel was worth $900,000, and the Sergeant thought that was enough for Mr. Ritchey's bail.

The two brokers walked up Thirtieth Street in Indian file. They did not bump into each other again.

HORSE SAVED A CHILD.

Dragged Her from the Morris Canal, Her Mother Says.

According to a story told to the Jersey City police yesterday by Mrs. John Patrino of 315 Pamrapo Avenue, her three-year-old daughter Anna was saved from drowning by a horse named Charley, which is owned by her husband. The house and stable are near the Morris Canal, and Anna is in the habit of playing on the canal bank.

The horse, which was a pet of the child, was running up and down the field, when Mrs. Patrino saw the child topple over into the water. She ran screaming to the canal, but before she reached it, she says, Charley had siezed the child's dress with his teeth and tragged her to safety. As the mother reached them Charley set the child gently at her feet.

When Patrino heard his wife's statement he said Charley should have a padded stall and an extra feed of oats every day of his life. The police were inclined to doubt Mrs. Patrino's story, but it was corroborated by two of her neighbors.

A SUSPECTED FILIBUSTER.

Schooner from Philadelphia May Be Carrying Cartridges to Domingo.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Minister Dawson at Santo Domingo has been instructed by the State Department to look out for the American schooner Livonia, from Philadelphia for Sanches, which is supposed to be carrying a large quantity of Mauser cartridges for revolutionists.

Mr. Joubert, the Santo Domingan Minister, said to-day that the Livonia was under strong suspicion, but he was unable to give any information as to what revolutionary party was to get the ammunition.

It is unlikely that the Livonia will be able to land her cargo at Sanches or elsewhere without the knowledge of the officers on American gunboats, who are keeping a sharp watch for contraband shipments.

PHILADELPHIA, March 31.—The Livonia is commanded by Capt. Tower. She cleared from here on March 6 for Santo Domingo. The schooner was cleared by W. F. Hagar & Co., coal shippers, and was loaded with 450 tons of soft coal.

FIGHT FOR EUSTIS BOY ENDS.

Compromise Between Mrs. Josef Hofmann and Her Former Husband.

In the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, yesterday announcement was made that the trouble between Mrs. Marie Clarice Eustis Hofmann, wife of Josef Hofmann, the pianist, and her former husband, George Peabody Eustis, over the possession of their ten-year-old son had been settled out of court. Justice Sutherland signed an order dismissing the contempt proceedings brought by Mrs. Hofmann because Eustis had taken the child from her care. It was said that the father and mother had reached an agreement over the child, but it was not stated what this agreement was.

By the terms of the divorce granted several years ago, the child was to spend part of each week with the mother and the remainder with the father. Eustis, however, brought the child here from Genao, and Mrs. Hofmann followed at once from Paris, instituting proceedings for the recovery of the boy.

SHEEDY A PASHA NOW.

Former Devotee of Chance May Wear Three Tails If He Likes.

Pasha Patrick F. Sheedy, who was booked as plain Herr Sheedy, arrived for a brief visit on the Hamburg-American liner Amerika yesterday afternoon. The Pasha said that the handle to his name was a gift from his old friend and comrade, the Sultan of Morocco, and that he was a Pasha of the "three-tail" rank, Pashas in Morocco, being graded according to the number of horsetails they are permitted to wear. The highest number allowed is three.

The Pasha said that he bought while away a canvas by one of the Italian masters that was 650 years old, and that represented the marriage of St. Catherine.

The picture he left in Paris. He has not decided when he will dispose of it. Rais Uli, he said, sold it to him. Where Rais Uli got it is in doubt.

Coal Strike Closes Steel Plant.

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., March 31.—The Republic Steel Company suspended operations to-day with the announcement that the suspension is due to the impending coal strike. The plant uses 500 cars of anthracite coal a month and employs 1,500 men.

Shut-Down on Newspaper Reports.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., March 31.—The four coal mines here closed to-night for an indefinite period. The 950 miners quit work on newspaper reports, no official orders having been received by them.

PROMOTION FOR BARNES, WHOM TILLMAN BERATED

Had Woman Ejected from White House; to be Postmaster.

MERRITT GETS NEW PLACE

Present Postmaster at Washington to be Made Collector at Niagara—Platt Not Consulted.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—President Roosevelt surprised the capital this afternoon by announcing that he would appoint Benjamin F. Barnes as Postmaster of Washington, to succeed John A. Merritt of New York. Mr. Merritt, who for several years has been Postmaster here, has been chosen for Collector of the Port of Niagara, succeeding the late Major James Low.

Mr. Barnes is at present assistant secretary to the President. Only a short time ago he figured extensively in the newspapers for having ordered the forcible ejection from the White House of Mrs. Minor Morris, a Washington woman who had called to see the President. What attracted attention to the case was not the ejection itself, but the violence with which it was performed.

Mrs. Morris, who had been talking to Barnes in an ordinary conversational tone, and with no indications of excitement, so far as the spectators observed, was seized by two policemen and dragged by the arms out of the building and across the asphalt walk in front of the White House, a distance corresponding to that of two ordinary city blocks. During a part of the journey a negro carried her by the feet. Her dress was torn and trampled.

She was locked up on a charge of disorderly conduct, and when it was learned that she would be released on that charge a policeman, a relative of Barnes's, was sent to the House of Detention to prefer a charge of insanity against her so that she would have to be held. She was held accordingly until two physicians had examined her and pronounced her sane. He was denounced by Mrs. Morris, by various newspapers, and by Mr. Tillman in the Senate.

The appointment of Barnes to be Postmaster so so soon after this incident has created endless talk here. It is taken to be the President's way of expresing confidence in Barnes and repaying him for the pain he suffered as a result of the newspaper criticisms of his course.

Mr. Barnes, who is 37 years old, has been a resident of Washington for eighteen years. He was appointed to a place in the Post Office Department from New Jersey and served altogether about seven years there. In January, 1898, he was transferred to the White House, as a stenographer. He was promoted to executive clerk July 1, 1898, and was made assistant secretary to the President May 1, 1900. In April, 1902, he was reappointed assistant secretary by the President. Mr. Barnes is a graduate of the Law Department of Georgetown University. He is a close friend of Postmaster General Cortelyou.

Mr. Merritt, as a New Yorker, got his place as Postmaster on the recommendation of Senator Platt, but his appointment to his new place was announced as the result of a conference between the President and Representative Wadsworth. The incident is curious as illustrating how completely Mr. Platt has dropped out of public life. Even after his retirement from the leadership of the Republican Party in New York, when State matters no longer occupied his time, he gave considerable attention to Federal patronage.

NATURE'S PACKING PLANT.

Salton Sea Freezes, Salt Gathers—And There You Are.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The recent extreme cold weather in the southwestern part of the United States has produced one extremely curious result: The Salton Sea, which is produced by the overflow of the Colorado River into a depression in Southern California, has been frozen over to a great depth. The Southern Pacific Railroad, which has been greatly embarrassed by the flooding of its tracks occasioned by the rising of the water, has moved its tracks to the ice, and is now running over the surface.

The water of the lake being salt, it has, in freezing, deposited upon the surface quantities of salt, which, by the action of the desert winds, has collected in windrows upon the ice. This has given rise to a new industry, or rather to the revival of an old industry. Thousands of cattle have been driven to this neighborhood from the great ranges to the north and south, and the business of slaughtering and meat packing is being carried on upon an enormous scale, the salt and ice for the purpose being right at hand. How long this will last is of course problematical.

In the meantime the good people of Imperial on the sea are greatly enjoying their skating, a pastime which they have not enjoyed since the founding of the town until this date.

FLORIDA VISITORS IN WRECK.

Eight Passengers Hurt and Porter Killed Near Macon, Ga.

Special to The New York Times.

MACON, Ga., March 31.—The Chicago & Florida limited southbound train, running over the Southern Railway, was wrecked this afternoon at Holton, a few miles north of this place. A negro porter named Smith was killed, and Baggage Master Phillips was probably fatally injured. Eight passengers whose names have not yet been made public were brought to Macon and put in a hospital for treatment. The railway officials announce that none of the passengers is seriously injured.

The wreck was caused by the tearing loose of the trucks of the baggage car while the train, which was behind time, was running fifty miles an hour. The baggage and combination car were torn to pieces and the fragments scattered along the track.

ANOTHER GERMAN REVERSE.

Hottentots Ambush a Detachment and Kill an Officer and Ten Men.

BERLIN, March 31.—The Hottentots in German Southwest Africa have surprised a German detachment, consisting of an officer and sixteen men.

The officer and ten men were killed, four men were wounded, and one man is missing.

Only one man escaped.

GIRLS VENTURE INTO FLOOD.

Their Buggy Is Overturned and One Is Drowned.

Special to The New York Times.

BRISTOL, Tenn., March 31.—Miss Laura J. Kenney, seventeen years old, was drowned at the family home at Blair while she and a girl friend were trying to drive across a swollen stream.

When the girls neared the middle of the stream they became fearful and started to turn back. The buggy overturned and both were thrown out. Miss Kenney's companion was saved.

OHIO STANDARD OIL CHANGE.

Kentucky Company to Cease to Do Business in the States.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 31.—Semi-official announcement was made here today that the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky this afternoon would cease to do business in Ohio, and that the business and the valuable property in this State would be taken over by the Standard Oil Company of Ohio Monday morning.

The Standard Oil Company of Kentucky is capitalized at $1,000,000. Its headquarters are in Cincinnati, while those of the Ohio company are here.

SAFE BLOWERS GET $5,000.

Descend Upon Connecticut Town and Rob the Post Office.

BRIDGEWATER, Conn., March 31.—Burglars entered the Post Office here early to-day and got away with about $5,000 in money and stamps. They blew open the safe, which is in the general store of C. N. Hatch, the Postmaster.

The men pried open a window at the rear with crowbars which they stole from the blacksmith's shop near by, and after wrapping the safe in half a dozen horse blankets taken from Mr. Hatch's stock, blew it open. They then stole a horse and wagon from Mr. Hatch's stable, and, it was learned to-day, drove to Brookfield, seven miles distant, and boarded the 6:40 train for Bridgeport.

SUBPOENAS FOR PACKERS.

Cites Them to Appear at Trial of the Corporations in September.

CHICAGO, March 31.—The Government of the United States to-day, through District Attorney Morrison, caused the issue of twelve subpoenas for as many men who are prominent in the packing industry. The subpoenas cite the men to appear at the trial of the packing corporations which is set for Sept. 10.

The men for whom subpoenas were issued are J. Ogden Armour, Arthur Meeker, C. T. Armour, P. A. Valentine, S. A. McRoberts, L. A. Carton, Edward F. Swift, C. F. Swift, D. E. Hartwell, A. H. Veeder, Robert McManus, and Arthur Evans.

SHIP NAMED FOR PRESIDENT.

The Theodore Roosevelt, Fast Steamer, Is Launched at Toledo.

TOLEDO, Ohio, March 31.—The Theodore Roosevelt, believed to be the fastest passenger steamer on the great lakes, was launched to-day at the yards of the Toledo Shipbuilding Company. Miss Genevieve Mott of Chicago broke the bottle of wine over the bow. The Theodore Roosevelt will ply between Chicago and Michigan City.

The launching was followed by a banquet, and a telegram of greeting was sent to President Roosevelt.

OHIO'S PLEA FOR RATHBONE.

Legislature Asks Congress to Take Up Cuban Postal Scandal.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, March 31.—The House to-day by a vote of 70 to 4 passed the Senate joint resolution asking Congress to investigate the charges against Estes G. Rathbone, in connection with the Cuban postal scandals.

Mr. Billingsted (Dem.) said that Rathbone was prosecuted, not to punish the guilty, but to shield them.

SHOOTS WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

Lawyer, Afflicted with Nervous Trouble, Attempts Double Murder.

GREENSBURG, Penn., March 31.—J. A. C. Ruffner, a lawyer, who has been afflicted with nervous trouble, to-day fatally shot his wife and seriously wounded his daughter. He fled to the woods, but was caught later and is now in jail.

On account of Ruffner's nervous condition arrangements had been made to take him to a sanitarium. Excusing himself to the officers who called for him, he went into his wife's room and, drawing a pistol, fired three shots into her body. The daughter was wounded in endeavoring to protect her mother.

LONG RETREAT OF A NUN.

Sister Mary Emmanuel, Prioress of the Branch of the Dominican Cloistered Nuns of Newark, will to-day take the first view of the world she has had in twenty-one years. She will start from St. Dominick's Convent, at Thirteenth Avenue and Tenth Street, at the head of a party of seven nuns to found another house of the order in Detroit.

Mother Mary Emmanuel helped to found the first convent of the order in this country—which is the one in Newark—twenty-six years ago. The local branch belongs to what is known as the Second Order of St. Dominick. The nuns, on leaving the world, renounce all earthly possessions and relations, never eat meat, and devote their lives to prayer and fasting. Though the departing prioress is more than fifty, it is said that she looks like a woman of thirty.

Servants in the residence of Richard T. Wilson, Jr., father-in-law of Cornelius Vanderbilt, at 722 Fifth Avenue, discovered a blaze in a bedroom on the fourth floor yesterday afternoon. When the firemen arrived they were able to extinguish the flames without using the hose. The burning woodwork in the room was cut away, the damage amounting to [illegible]. None of Mr. Wilson's family was in the house when the fire was discovered.

EARL GREY RETURNS FRANKLIN PORTRAIT

PILGRIMS CHEER THE NEWS

A Notable Speech by Secretary Root—Earl Grey Says Annexation of Canada Is Impossible.

Earl Grey, Governor General of Canada, was the guest of the Pilgrims' Society at the Waldorf-Astoria last night. Four hundred Pilgrims greeted him. Morris K. Jesup, who presided, in his introductory remarks, said that he had never seen such a distinguished assembly of men and women.

When Joseph H. Choate, ex-Ambassador to Great Britain, was called upon to propose the health of the guest of the evening, he presented the Pilgrims as "the 400 of New York and forty others from Philadelphia, Boston, Great Britain, and other outlying parts of the world."

The harmony that exists between the United States and Great Britain and her colonies was the keynote of the speeches made by Earl Grey, Mr. Choate, Elihu Root, Secretary of State; Gen. Horace Porter, and others.

The climax of the enthusiastic greeting to Canada's Governor General came when Mr. Choate referred to the graceful act which Earl Grey had performed in recognition of the bi-centenary of Benjamin Franklin's birth. Earl Grey's great grandfather, Gen. Sir Charles Grey, one of the British commanders in the American Revolution, occupied, with other Generals, Franklin's house in Philadelphia in the Winter of 1777. When Gen. Grey, who was the first Lord Grey, left, he carried off a fine picture of Franklin. It has ornamented the Northumberland castle of the Greys for 130 years.

The American celebration of the 200th anniversary of Franklin's birth impelled the Govenor General to offer the painting to the American people through President Roosevelt, and it is now on its way from England to Washington.

Earl Grey told the Pilgrims that his reason for restoring the picture was that genius and character were the common possessions of mankind, and that England felt that she shared Franklin with the United States.

After Mr. Choate had finished his speech and the guest's health had been drunk standing Mr. Jesup said:

"It is never too late to correct a mistake; I propose the health of the President and the King."

The toast was drunk to the music of the National airs of the two countries, successively, while the flags of Great Britain, the United States, and Canada were waved by 400 hands. Robert Odgen then proposed three cheers for the President and the King. They were given with a splendid will.

Mr. Choate, in assuming the post of toastmaster, said:

"The pleasing duty has been assigned me to propose the health of our distinguished guest, Earl Grey. I hope that Lord Grey knows and appreciates who these gentlemen are of whom I am thus made the mouthpiece. These, Lord Grey are the four hundred, [laughter,] with a sprinkling of about forty more from Philadelphia, Great Britain, Boston, and the other outlying parts of the world. [Laughter.]

"We welcome Lord Grey in the first place on public grounds, because he is the fitting personal representative of his august sovereign the King of England, who, ever since he came among us as a comely youth, in 1859 or 1860, has been a steadfast friend of the United States. [Applause.] And since his accession to the throne he has lost no opportunity to manifest his good-will to our country, its Government, and its people, and if we fail to welcome his personal representative we should indeed be guilty of great neglect and ingratitude.

"In the presence of the Secretary of State, I speak with bated breath, [laughter,] but as I no longer live under his instructions [laughter] or by his will [laughter] I can for the first time in many years enjoy the great privilege of being without a master [laughter] and saying exactly what I think, [laughter.]

"I now do feel that this great Dominion of Canada is a nation with which we not only ought to be at perpetual peace, but that all possible questions remaining unadjusted between us should be settled as soon as possible. [Applause.]

"She is not only our nearest neighbor, but our most spirited and ambitious rival, and her prosperity is advancing with leaps and bounds quite as vigorous as our own. It was well said by her distinguished Prime Minister recently that while by the concession of all mankind the nineteenth century belonged to the United States the twentieth century so far belonged to Canada.

"She is certainly beginning to show it. The development of her vast resources of every possible description and the opening of wonderful agricultural lands constitute a marvel. They say that those lands are so rich that seed planted by morning offers a harvest by night. [Laughter.]

"And this is turning thousands of our fellow-citizens from the border in exchange for those who are attracted to the United States from Canada by our own inducements. I shall not say upon which side the balance rests, but I shall leave that for Lord Grey. [Laughter.] She is likely to become very soon not only formidable, but a very successful competitor, and if she goes on she will soon be able to feed the mother country without any help from us, and we shall have to find other markets for our surplus products.

"The United States and Canada, however, have one civilization, one law, one hope, one aspiration which pervades the people on both sides of the boundary, and ought certainly to settle all our differences, for no matter how slight such differences are, there is danger at every moment that they be magnified into something of importance.

Mr. Choate then referred to the action of Lord Grey's great-grandfather in taking the picture of Franklin from the latter's home in Philadelphia in Revolutionary times and the generous offer of the guest of the evening to restore the painting to the United States, after it had been kept in his ancestral home in Northumberland for 130 years. The picture is to go to Philadelphia, if possible, in time for the celebration in honor of Franklin there this month.

Secretary Root was vigorously applauded when he arose to speak.

"It is an opportunity which I highly appreciate officially, to speak here to-night upon the toast 'International Commerce,'" he declared. "I am glad to welcome Lord Grey for himself, because before he was Governor General of Canada I knew him as a fitting representative of the continuous development in the old home of our race, of those qualities the possession, of which we most admire in our fathers and the possession of which is the assurance of our continued prosperity and greatness.

"The traditional policy of the United States forbids alliances with other countries, but every lawyer knows and every man of affairs knows that the signature and the seal upon a contract is of little value unless the character and the purpose of the contract is sincere.

EARL GREY'S SPEECH.

Earl Grey's speech was as follows:

"I am aware that this magnificent banquet is the eloquent expression of your desire to emphasize and if possible promote the good relations already existing between the United Kingdom, the self-governing nations of the British Empire, and the United States. That same desire also possesses and completely fills my heart.

King Edward Our Friend.

"I thank Mr. Choate and you for the generous welcome with which you have received me, but I recognize that the distinguished compliment you have paid me is not a compliment to me personally, but a compliment which, out of the fullness of the heart, you are glad to pay Canada, your nearest neighbor, and the most powerful of the self-governing nations which brings strength to the British Crown—and I also recognize that the banquet is also in some degree an expression of the feelings you entertain toward his Majesty, King Edward, whose representative I have the honor to be for a term in Canada, and who is loved and revered and honored here on this side of the Atlantic because he is known, as Queen Victoria was known before him, as the true and constant friend of America.

"It has been my great good fortune to make the personal acquaintance of your President, and I can assure you that the magnificent traits of character he is constantly displaying are as greatly admired and appreciated throughout the British Empire as they are by you at home. It has also been my good fortune to be admitted by Mr. Choate, during his brilliant term in England, into the coveted privilege of his friendship.

"The services he has rendered to the English-speaking peoples on both sides of the Atlantic by his efforts to increase their knowledge of each other and consequently their affection for each other, have been made the subject of frequent remark and have endeared him to the heart of every Englishman, and, I believe, every American as well.

Lauds Hay and Lowell.

"Gentlemen, it has also been my good fortune to know personally among the eminent men whom you have intrusted with the high responsibility of representing your Nation in England Mr. Lowell and Mr. Hay. If these gentlemen are a true average type of the American people I have only one regret, and that is that I cannot know them all.

"The kindness which I have experienced during the several happy visits I have paid to America confirms that regret. I paid my first visit to America many years ago. A universally beloved American gentleman, Mr. Ward, then lived in London. In London society he was known as 'Uncle Sam.' He heard I was coming here, and the trouble he took to insure the success of my visit could only be excelled, if possible, by the kind trouble which Mr. Choate and others have shown in their desire that I and all my party should enjoy our present visit.

"Well, when I thanked 'Uncle Sam' for his wonderful and delightful kindness, which, coming straight from his big, kind heart, warmed one like the blessed sunshine itself, he said: 'Young man, instead of your thanking me, my thanks are due to you. When you are as old as I am you will understand the greatest pleasure that life can afford is to show children the pantomime.'

"Gentlemen, I have paid repeated visits to the United States since, and on every occasion I have experienced all the feelings of anticipated and expectant delight that filled my heart when 'Uncle Sam' gave me a ticket for the pantomime, and whenever the curtain has gone down upon my visits I have returned home with only one feeling—that the joy of realization had equaled the pleasure of my high anticipation.

"Mr. Choate has referred in a manner that I much appreciate to my restoration to you of the picture which for 130 years has been the most honored and most interesting possession of my English home. Why do I restore the picture? Because I love the American people, because my sense of equity tells me that there are higher laws than the law of possession, and because I believe that neither England nor America can fulfill their high mission to themselves or to the world unless we approach the consideration of every problem affecting our relation to each other not from the narrow, selfish, and provincial standpoint of what America and England can each of them do for themselves alone, but from the higher standpoint of what we all can do for England, America, and the world.

"Coming, as I do, from Canada, may I tell you what I know you will be glad to hear? We have safely embarked our national ship on the ocean of enormous developments, and in order to enable us to realize as quickly as possible the magnificent destiny that awaits us, we hope you will allow us to continue to draw largely on your friendly and powerful assistance.

Calls Annexation Impossible.

"Mr. Choate chaffed us the other day at Ottawa with that kindly humor in which he so pre-eminently excels, for the modesty which has caused every Canadian, from the Prime Minister to the youngest enfranchised citizen of the Dominion, to believe that if the nineteenth century belonged to the United States the twentieth century belongs to Canada. Yes, gentlemen, this is the stimulating faith of the people whom I represent. Any idea of the possible annexation of Canada by the United States is scouted by us as an impossibility as great as you would regard the annexation of the United States by Canada.

"All we want is to know each other better than we do, and to help each other as much as we can. If Canada can at any time help the United States in any direction which will improve the conditions of life for your people, she will consider it a blessed privilege to be allowed, to render that assistance, and I feel sure that the people of the United States will also be only too glad to assist us in our struggle toward the realization of high ideals, and toward the attainment of a National character distinguished by the fulness with which the principles of fair play, freedom, and duty shall be applied by the people of Canada to the various occupations of their lives.

"Given on both sides of our boundary a continuation of the present unreserved and ungrudging respect for each other's just and legitimate rights, a heartfelt and chivalrous desire to promote each other's interests, and to meet each other's requests in the fullest degree consistent with the maintenance of our self-respect, and we shall continue to advance hand in hand and shoulder to shoulder along the path of common development, and toward the attainment of a common ideal.

The Anglo-Saxon Mission.

"To those of us who believe that in the coming solidarity and unification of the Anglo-Saxon race lie the future peace and hope of the world, the signs of the times are most encouraging.

"The forces of the world are slowly but steadily drifting in this direction. The peoples of the United Kingdom, of the self-governing nations of the British Empire and of the United States are joint trustees for the protection and expansion of that Anglo-Saxon civilization which carries in its development the hope of future peace and the realization of the highest ideals attainable on earth. Every year our joint responsibility to mankind and to future ages, for the way in which we now administer our sacred trust, grows in fullness and importance.

"There are several questions outstanding between the Dominion of Canada and the United States, which have been left open too long, and which call for settlement. Both Governments desire to take advantage of the opportunity which the present feeling of amity between the two countries affords, and I am persuaded that the hearts of the two people on both sides of the frontier will be glad when their respective Governments have given effect to their desires.

"It is the proud mission of the Anglo-Saxon race to maintain in advance the cause of civilization throughout the world. England thankfully recognizes your desire to co-operate with her in this beneficial work, and the knowledge that the Stars and Stripes and the flag of England stand in the gateways of the world, as on these walls, their varing colors draped together, fold within fold, as the joint emblems of freedom, righteousness and duty, make us all proud, first, that we have a big duty to perform to the world, and, second, that so long as we are true to each other and to ourselves, we shall have the strength as well as the will to accomplish the noble purpose of our joint and splendid destiny."

ENVOY TO KING'S WEDDING.

F. W. Whitridge to be Special Ambassador at Alfonso's Nuptials.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—President Roosevelt has appointed Frederick W. Whitridge of New York City Special Ambassador to represent the United States at the wedding of the King of Spain.

Mr. Whitridge is a lawyer, with offices at 59 Wall Street. He was born in New Bedford, Mass., and is 54 years old. He was educated at Amherst College and the Columbia Law School. He was admitted to the bar in 1879. His residence is at 16 East Eleventh Street.

He is President of the Washington County Railway Company, a Director of the Niagara Development Company, the Cataract Construction Company, and of the Chicago Terminal Elevator Company. He is a member of the following clubs: University, Metropolitan, Knickerbocker, Reform, City, Down Town, Players, Century, and Westchester County.

AUTOMOBILING IN THE MUD.

Asa Goddard Finds Poor Roads Coming from Boston.

Asa Goddard, a Director of the American Automobile Association and who has charge of the special Touring Bureau started last year by the association, arrived in this city last night after a severe automobile trip from Boston.

"I wanted to see what the roads were like under unfavorable conditions," said Mr. Goddard, "and I know now more than I would have imagined before. The macadam roads in Massachusetts were, for the most part, superior to this in Connecticut. In the latter State the macadam roads were badly worn, in many places filled with muddy ruts and dangerous holes. I did not look for ideal touring conditions after the recent rains, but good roads, if built well, should always afford better traveling that was the case in many sections of the route from Boston to this city. Between Hartford and Thomasville my machine sunk so deep in a clay mud hole that I had to call a nearby farmer, and with the aid of strong planks pry the wheel out of the mud. About ten miles above Bridgeport a tire blew uot, which was my only accident. I ran into Bridgeport on a flat tire and there got a new one."

Mr. Goddard left Boston Friday morning, reaching Springfield at 2:15 o'clock that day, and then, meeting poorer roads, did not arrive in Hartford until 7:30 in the evening. He left Hartford at 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning and ran to Port Chester and then cut across the country to the Maxwell factory at Tarrytown, where his car was left for minor repairs. Mr. Goddard went to his home in Worcester last night, but he will start for Cleveland to-morrow, where he is to spend some time in touring Ohio and other Western States in the interests of the good roads movement.

Mr. Goddard will present an exhaustive report of the condition of the roads from Boston to New York to the Directors of the American Automobile Association at their regular meeting this week, and efforts will be made to secure improvements wherever needed.

FATAL FRENCH STRIKE RIOT.

39,000 Miners Parading the Coal Region—Troops Suffer Severely.

PARIS, March 31.—The miners' strike in the coal fields in the North has again assumed serious proportions. There were many riotous scenes last night and to-day, and the cavalry repeatedly charged the strikers, injuring a number of them. The troops also suffered severely.

The strikers, estimated to number 39,000, divided into bands of from 500 to 2,000 men, are parading the region and threatening workmen who refuse to join them. They have sought several times to drive the cavalry into barbed wire entanglements.

The most serious affray to-day occurred near Lens, where a mob besieged the house of Jules Carron, who had refused to quit work. On appearing in his doorway Carron was pelted with stones, whereupon he fired a shotgun into the crowd, wounding a striker named Botel, who later died. The mob, which numbered 2,000 strikers, then sought to capture and lynch Carron.

Two squadrons of hussars attempted to convey Carron to a place of safety, and a fierce battle between the strikers and troops resulted. Carron was removed to the jail at Bethune. Many persons on both sides were injured.

The strike is the result of long standing grievances of the miners, but the disaster at Courrières was the immediate cause of the outbreak. Meetings held by miners after the explosion denounced the absence of safety devices in the mines, and the movement was gradually augmented until a general strike was declared.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The month just closed was characterized by much unsettled, disagreeable weather, with frequent alternations from fair to foul, an abundance of rain, and unusually low temperatures on the average. It was especially cold in the interior valleys, the Northwest, and the Rocky Mountain region.

A period of cold, stormy weather set in over the Rocky Mountains and plateau regions on March 9, and continued almost uninterruptedly until March 20. Heavy snow fell in the Middle Rocky Mountain region, and numerous snowslides occurred.

At the termination of this period a wave of low temperatures with killing frosts swept over the Southern States.

Heavy rains in the South caused flood stages in the rivers and streams of that region, but no serious floods occurred in the Northern rivers, although as the month closes a warning has been issued for a fifty-foot stage in the Ohio at Cincinnati on April 1, a stage of 48 or 49 feet at Cairo on April 5 or 6, and stages above the danger line in the Mississippi between Cairo and Memphis within the next eight or ten days.

Although the rain in Eastern districts has ceased, the weather is still cloudy with temperatures much below the seasonal average east of the Mississippi. To the westward warmer, fair weather prevails.

Higher temperatures are indicated in Eastern districts Monday night or Tuesday.

Winds along the Middle Atlantic Coast will be brisk northwest, diminishing; South Atlantic Coast, fresh west to northwest; Gulf Coast, light and variable; Lake Michigan, variable, becoming south and fresh.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York and New England—Fair and cold Sunday and Monday; warmer Tuesday; brisk northwest winds diminishing.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	47	44	4 P. M.	67	40
6 A. M.	46	43	6 P. M.	65	39
9 A. M.	53	42	9 P. M.	60	37
12 M.	63	44	12 P. M.	56	35

This thermometer is 108 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 40; for the corresponding date last year it was 57; average on the corresponding date for the last twenty-five years, 41.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 42; at 8 P. M. it was 38. Maximum temperature, 46 degrees at 2:30 P. M.; minimum, 35 degrees at 10:35 P. M. Humidity, 80 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 66 per cent. at 6 P. M.

500,000 MINERS QUIT; OWNERS GIVING WAY

lieries in Schuylkill County, some indecision on the part of the men is reported, and the impression prevails that sufficient mineworkers will return to work on Monday to permit the operation, short-handed, of a number of the collieries. But the fact that in the vicinity of Mahanoy City and Shamokin hundreds of men failed to report for duty to-day is regarded as evidence that there will be a complete suspension of mining throughout the entire anthracite territory.

The men left the mines to-day as usual, making no demonstration at any of the workings. During the afternoon many of the miners in the various towns congregated to discuss the situation, but there was no disorder.

The lead taken yesterday by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company in posting notices announcing the continuation of the strike commission's award for the ensuing three years was followed to a large extent to-day by other operators, especially in the Northern field. At Scranton officials of the companies whose operations are located in the Lackawanna and Wyoming districts held conferences for the purpose of discussing the situation. It was decided to keep all the mines in readiness for operation should the men ignore the Scale Committee's order, but none of the participants in the conferences was able to report a sufficient number of men to operate any one colliery.

The most important feature of to-day's developments in this city was a conference between A. J. Cassatt, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and George F. Baer, President of the Reading Company, in the latter's office. Shortly after the departure of President Cassatt, W. G. Brown, Secretary of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, was summoned by Mr. Baer. Most of the statistics bearing on the mining operations of the Reading Company are compiled under the direction of Mr. Brown. Neither Mr. Baer nor Mr. Cassatt would discuss the object of their conference. President Baer stated, however, that the Reading Company would probably keep its collieries open on Monday in order to give any miners who so desired a chance to go to work.

Mr. Baer stated also that it was the intention of the Reading Company to continue the existing coal prices. He said the company would make every effort to discourage speculation on the part of the retail dealers, and declared that the charging of exorbitant prices by retailers would result in the cutting off of their supply. The stock of coal on hand, he said, in the event of a strike will be judiciously distributed, special attention to be given to municipalities, institutions, and industrial establishments.

While complete reports of the anthracite operations for the month of March have not yet been compiled, it is believed the production will break all records. The Reading Company's output is expected to reach 1,100,000 tons, which would indicate a total production of 5,500,000 tons.

In this city coal prices were advanced 25 and 50 cents a ton. All domestic sizes brought $7 a ton, and pea coal brought as much as $6 in some cases.

PITTSBURG MINERS SULLEN.

In Ugly Mood Despite the Advance That Averts a Strike.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 31.—Patrick Dolan, the deposed President of the mine workers, almost created a riot this afternoon at the session of the district convention of the miners when he returned from Indianapolis and tried to take charge of the convention. He was persuaded by friends to leave, but declares that he will preside at the meeting next Tuesday under the protection of the court.

The miners are in an ugly mood, in spite of the fact that the Pittsburg district will have no strike.

F. L. Robbins of the Pittsburg Coal Company, who returned from Indianapolis this morning, declares that every mine of the Pittsburg Coal Company will be in operation on Tuesday under the new scale, granting an increase of 5.55 per cent. The miners always lay off on April 1, or the day after, when April falls on Sunday, and that led to the rumor that the miners would not return to work under the new scale.

Mr. Robbins issued the following statement:

"The action of the miners' convention yesterday shows that the conservative element is increasing. Their good judgment averted a threatened great industrial strike. All the mines in the Pittsburg district will be operated. This alone is one-third of the total capacity of the central competitive district. In addition there will be a substantial minority of the mines in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois put into operation, so that fully 50 per cent. of the production will continue."

JOHNSTOWN, Penn., March 31.—Notices were posted to-day at the mines of the Berwind-White and the Stienman Coal Companies that they will pay the 1903 scale to the miners.

SHARON, Penn., March 31.—Announcement was made to-day that the operators of the Mercer-Butler coal district will grant the advance of 5 per cent., and there will be no strike. About 3,000 men will be affected.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 31.—Coal miners and operators of Western Kentucky to-day agreed on a wage scale and there will be no strike in District 23. The agreement is for the 1903 scale.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 31.—At a joint session of Iowa Mine Workers and operators to-day, scale committees were appointed to meet in Des Moines next Tuesday to agree upon the wage scale for the next two years. The action means that the 1903 scale probably will be accepted by the operators of Iowa.

DUNNE SURE OF VICTORY.

Chicago Mayor Says Municipal Ownership Will Triumph.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 31.—Mayor Dunne made a statement late this afternoon evincing his hopes for the success of his measure looking to immediate municipal ownership. He said:

"Municipal ownership will win another great victory at the polls on Tuesday next. The ballot propositions, I am convinced, will carry by at least five to one. In the City Council we will secure a material accession to the ranks of those Aldermen who have fought valiantly during the last months for municipal ownership and operation."

Daly Beat Cure in Balk-Line Game.

Maurice Daly turned the tables on Louis Cure, the French billiardist, last night, in the former's academy, playing a string of 300 points at eighteen-inch balk line—two counts in balk, against 288 points for the Frenchman. Daly finished with an average of 13 24-22, and a hihg run of 59. Cure's average was 13 15-21, and his best run 87. In the afternoon contest Cure easily outplayed Daly manoeuvering the ivory balls with a delicate stroke, and averaging 27 3-11 for a 300-point string. His high run was 72. Daly only counted 37 carroms, being left poor positions from which he could make no count.

ADVANCE IN COAL HERE EXPLAINED BY DEALERS

Demands of Consumers Prevented Large Accumulations.

THE YARDS AGAIN BESIEGED

Soft Coal Operators Expect to Get a New Market for Small Steam Sizes.

J. Samuel Smoot, Commissioner of the Coal Merchants' Association of New York, gave reasons for the advance in the price of coal in this city yesterday. He denied that the advance was caused by a desire to take advantage of the public merely because of the coal strike. He explained that there was no way of accurately determining the amount of coal stored in and about New York, but said that the following estimate was probably correct:

Total amount of coal stored in Manhattan, the Bronx, and Brooklyn, 450,000 tons.

Annual consumption in Manhattan and the Bronx, 7,000,000 tons.

Weekly consumption under normal conditions in Manhattan and the Bronx in Winter, 180,000 tons.

Weekly consumption, normal, in Summer in Manhattan and the Bronx, 90,000 tons.

The formal statement given out by Mr. Smoot explaining the advance in prices was as follows:

The reasons why we advanced the prices are: First—That the dealers had for several weeks been trying to make what provision they could to take care of their customers in the event of a strike, but owing to the wide publicity of the threatened strike the consumers were equally alert and had been heavy buyers, thereby making it impossible for the dealers to accumulate any great amount of coal.

Second—That freight rates had been more than doubled; besides a great deal of the coal they had been able to get loaded was not in their pockets or yards, but was being carried in boats which had been loaded in some cases for weeks at from $4 to $8 a day demurrage, according to the size of the boat. It will thus be seen that it cost about a cent a ton per day to carry coal in boats, so that if a boat of coal is afloat for two months it will increase its cost 60 cents a ton, not to say anything about the interest on the money, insurance, &c.

Then again, while the companies have not advanced their prices, we have been entirely unable to get an adequate supply, thereby compelling us even thus early to go outside and buy quantities of independent coal at a higher price in our effort to keep our trade supplied, much of which is greatly inferior to that of the companies' regular shipments.

The above statement was amplied by another coal dealer at the coal merchants' headquarters, who stated that while the coal operators had not advanced their prices of coal, it had not been possible for the last few weeks to get the household sizes, needed so much. With the supply lessened, as he explained, and the retail demand increasing because of the strike scare, it had become imperative to raise the prices.

The coal yards were again besieged yesterday with intending buyers. The advance in prices did not check them. They all seemed to harbor the suspicion that the prices would go much higher still and that it was wise to buy now. These men were quite persuasive in their arguments, which ran rather monotonously like this:

"I have been buying coal right along here. If you take care of me now I will stick to you."

These customers, as on the day before, received only a normal supply. They were told flatly that they would not be allowed to lay up a Winter supply.

"We are taking care of our customers," said Joseph Gordon, whose yards are at Thirty-eighth Street and the East River, "but we are not giving them more than they need for immediate use. The wholesale dealers are refusing to give us any price. They are disinclined to sell us coal at all, and say they want to hold off until they positively know whether the strike will materialize or not.

"I sold my regular customers coal at the old price to-day. New customers I charged the new price. We make agreements at the beginning of a season to sell our customers coal at so much per ton, and it was not worth wrangling with them for one day. We only restrained them as regards amount. We would not sell them big lots."

The general impression among the retail coal dealers yesterday seemed to be that the strike would take place, but that it would be of short duration.

It was learned that the soft coal operators expect to be able to get a new market for soft coal when the anthracite strike is in progress, as there will, from present appearances, be no general soft coal strike, and soft coal has always been a competitor of the steam sizes of anthracite. The latter being, under ordinary circumstances, cheaper than soft coal, is always in demand, but the strike will make it scarce.

Since the last anthracite strike, however, the facilities at the washeries for getting small steam sizes from the culm heaps, which were at one time considered valueless, have been greatly increased. Unskilled labor is used at the washeries, and the operators, it was said last evening, intend to keep the washeries running to their full capacity while the strike lasts. The greater part of the small steam sizes, however, is produced only while mining is going on.

A statement was authorized yesterday by the anthracite operators' committee of seven, in reply to Mitchell's assertions that the bituminous miners are better paid than the anthracite miners. The statement says in part:

The last report of the Secretary of Internal Affairs of the State of Pennsylvania contains the facts as to both industries for the year 1904. Omitting in the case of the anthracite industry the class of "employes in the breakers," because there is no corresponding class of employes in the bituminous industry, the figures are as follows:

	Anthracite.	Bituminous.
Average number of days worked	231	188
Number employed:
Total	136,445	93,114
Men—Miners	38,084	70,635
Men—Miners' laborers	31,172	....
Men—Inside men	36,774	12,842
Men—Outside men	29,961	8,642
Boys	474	995

The comparison of annual earnings may be expressed as follows:

Class of Labor.	Anthracite.	Bituminous.	Excess of Earnings.	Percentage.
Miners	$684.78	$418.15	$266.63	63.75
Inside men	780.58	492.15	288.43	58
Outside men	541.62	475.36	66.26	13
Boys (average inside and outside)	241.31	165.99	75.32	45

The average earnings of the anthracite miners, therefore, exceed those of the bituminous miners by 63.75 per cent., and the average earnings of all classes of anthracite workers exceed those of all classes of bituminous workers by about 30 per cent.

Under these circumstances there is no ground for the anthracite workers to claim that their compensation is inadequate.

As the Civic Federation was instrumental in bringing the miners and operators together before the last strike, though it did not succeed in averting the strike, there was some curiosity yesterday as to what the Civic Federation may do this time. It was stated unofficially at the headquarters of the Civic Federation last evening that the coal situation has not reached a stage which justifies its interference.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 31.—The price of hard coal was advanced $1 here to-day, the article now selling at $7.50 a ton.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 31.—The retail coal dealers of this city to-day raised the price on all grades of coal 50 cents a ton. They claim that this is done for the protection of the public, so that wealthy buyers will not step in and take all they have on hand.

PHILADELPHIA, March 31.—Coal prices were advanced 25 and 50 cents a ton here to-day. Domestic sizes sold for not less than $7 a ton, and in some cases $6 was demanded and received for pea coal.

CHICAGO, March 31.—The price of the various grades of soft coal rose 75 cents a ton to-day.

PRESIDENT'S RATE BILL AMENDMENT ENDORSED

TO GO TO SENATE TO-MORROW

Restricts the Courts in Acting on Rates—Pledge of 29 Republican Votes Made.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Friends of the Hepburn Railroad Rate bill, in conference with President Roosevelt, at the White House to-day, agreed upon an amendment providing specifically for judicial review of orders of the Inter-State Commerce Commission. This amendment will be presented on Monday by Senator Long, a pronounced opponent of any amendment which would permit the railroads to obtain a review of a character amounting to a retrial of the merits of the commission's order.

Senators Allison, Cullom, Dolliver, Clapp, and Long; Attorney Genreal Moody, and Inter-State Commerce Commissioners Knapp and Prouty were called to the White House late this afternoon. Soon after they assembled the President submitted the court review amendment that was afterward indorsed by all present. Several of the conferrees previously had seen the draft, but its authorship was not disclosed.

The President announced that he had decided upon the meeting because he desired to ascertain the present state of feeling in Congress regarding a judicial review feature in the legislation. It was made clear that he had not changed his views regarding the pending bill, and similar stands were taken by the others. The President thought, however, that in deference to the large number of Senators who honestly believed that the bill without such a feature would be unconstitutional, it should be amended if that could be done without a surrender of the purposes of the legislation.

He believed the amendment which he read would accomplish the result. It proposed to strike out the paragraph at the bottom of Page 14 of the bill and insert as a part of Section 16 the following:

"That all orders of the commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time as shall be prescribed by the commission, and shall continue for such period of time, not exceeding two years, as shall be prescribed in the order of the commission, unless sooner set aside by the commission or suspended or set aside in a suit brought against the commission in the Circuit Court of the United States, sitting as a court of equity for the district wherein any carrier, plaintiff in said suit, has its principal operating office, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Circuit Courts of the United States to hear and determine in any such suit whether the order complained of was beyond the authority of the commission or in violation of the rights of the carrier secured by the Constitution."

Discussion of the amendment continued for an hour or more. It was carefully analyzed to ascertain whether under its terms an order of the commission lowering a rate could be delayed in taking effect. Attorney General Moody and other lawyers pointed out that the discretion of the commission is absolute. Without specifically declaring against restraining orders, they said the amendment would make it extremely doubtful whether a court would attempt to interfere with an order except in the manner provided.

When the President asked whether an amendment of that character would be adopted by the Senate, the Senators present said they thought they could promise twenty-nine Republican votes for it, and there is little doubt that practically the entire minority would support it.

It was agreed that the amendment should be offered as soon as possible. Senator Long had given notice that he would address the Senate on Monday and therefore he was chosen to offer it and speak upon it. He will say that it meets the demands of those who have opposed the pending bill, on the ground that without a provision for judicial review the measure is unconstitutional, and that it is satisfactory to the real friends of the bill.

The amendment will provide for a restricted review, not for the broad review contended for by Senator Knox. It will restrict the appellants to the rights given them under the Constitution. It has been contended all along by friends of the Hepburn bill that amendment was not necessary for this purpose, as the Constitution covered the question of confiscation; but this amendment will be introduced for the purpose of satisfying those who contend that without some court review provision the bill will be declared unconstitutional.

The courts will be permitted only to ascertain whether the commission in making a rate has followed the rate law, but cannot go into the entire case on its merits.

TWO APRIL WEDDINGS.

The wedding of Miss Ella de Ruyter, a daughter of the late John de Ruyter, and a descendant of Admiral de Ruyter, and Augustus Drum Porter, formerly of Philadelphia, but now of New York, is set for 2:30 o'clock on April 16. The ceremony will take place at the residence of Miss de Ruyter's sister, Mrs. Moses Taylor Campbell, at 31 East Seventy-seventh Street. Relatives and intimate friends only will be asked to the ceremony, which will be followed by a small reception. The Rev. Dr. George Houghton will perform the ceremony. Miss de Ruyter will have no attendants. Mr. Porter's best man will be Thomas J. Doane of Philadelphia. After the honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Porter will live at 604 Park Avenue, Miss de Ruyter's present residence.

The wedding of Miss Margaret Mynderse to Alfred Huger will take place April 17, at 4:30 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelmus Mynderse, on Joralemon Street, Brooklyn. The Bishop of Long Island will officiate. The bridesmaids will include Miss Mary Douglas Bosworth and Miss Christina Whitehouse of New York, Miss Caroline Huger of South Carolina, and the Misses Marie L. Abbott, Caroline Squibb, and Alice Dalol of Brooklyn. will be the maid of honor. Rutledge Parker of Charleston is to be best man, and the ushers are to be George H. Turner of New York, Frank R. Blair of Boston, James Chestnut of Charleston, Norman J. Gould of Seneca Falls, Thomas S. Chalmers of Chicago, and W. Mynderse Rice of Auburn.

A TERRIBLE WINTER AT SEA.

Although last Winter was remarkable for its mildness ashore, conditions on the seven seas have been exactly the reverse, the losses to the underwriters through disasters to ships aggregating several millions during the last four monhs.

Speaking of the losses at sea, A. A. Raven, President of the Boar dof New York Underwriters, said yesterday:

"The Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company, of which I am President, has had an unprecedentedly large number of losses this last Winter, especially during the last two months. I think, however, the English companies have been hit harder than any others, and perhaps the Germans next. There are only a few distinctively American companies, but they've all suffered severely."

The figures of the underwriters indicate a loss of about $4,000,000 for the Winter of 1905-06. The lumber carriers have been the heaviest losers, and next to them come the coal carriers. One of the veteran steamship men who discussed the stormy times at sea was Capt. Publicover of the steamship Earl of Aberdeen, who lost his deckload while crossing the Bay of Fundy in a gale the first of last month.

"The average landsman," said Capt. Publicover, "has no idea what this Winter has been at sea. It's not only the hardships which officers and crews have suffered, but look at the losses of cargo and the damage to hulls and rigging. Why, the whole coast, from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to New York, is lined with floating lumber, spars, rigging, and wreckage. If the flotsam and jetsam from Marblehead to Montauk alone could be gathered up and sold for junk it would make a man rich."

BASEBALL BOYCOTT THREAT.

Newark Unions Are Making Trouble About Pitcher Carrick.

Newark trades unions have demanded the cancellation of the contract made by Manager Burnham of the Newark baseball team, with William Carrick, who has just signed as pitcher.

President Frank Freeman of the Buffers' Union, says that if Carrick is allowed to play in Newark there will be trouble and that the Metal Polishers and Platers' Unions will back him up.

Carrich was originally a member of the local union in Cleveland. The members of his craft not only flocked to the games in which he played, but as bodies, made handsome gifts to him. During a strike of the buffers and polishers in Chicago, he was charged, while still affiliated with the union, with having received $100 per month from the Manufacturers' Association of bosses. President Freemen says that he made no response when cited for trial before the Chicago union.

If Manager Burnham insists upon retaining Carrick, the Essex Trades Assembly, representing all the labor organizations in the county, will be asked to declare a boycot against all the games he plays in.

No Kisses for English Smokers.

The Rev. W. Mayo of Bristol informed the annual meeting of the British Anti-Tobacco and Anti-Narcotic League, at Manchester, that 600 girls in his city have resolved to "have nothing to do" with boys who smoke.

This announcement was received with considerable enthusiasm, and it was remarked as singular that a city which is the home of one of the greatest tobacco firms should also be the pioneer in the anti-cigarette movement. The Bristol girls who have joined the movement range in age from 16 to 19.

Another report from Bristol indicates that the boys have taken the situation seriously, for one youngster alone has pledged 550 of his comrades not to smoke. —London Mail.

The Truesdale Committee Found Waste and Bad Management.

ADVISES GENERAL OVERTURN

Some Officials Must Be Made to Repay, the Report Declares—More Criticisms to Come.

The report of the Truesdale Investigating Committee to the Trustees of the Mutual Life was made public yesterday. Among its most striking passages are these:

"The real purpose of the company's organization—namely, to furnish to its members absolutely safe insurance at the lowest possible cost, seems to have given place to the ambition for power and influence in the business and financial world."

"It is difficult to resist the conclusion that the policy of the management in giving preference to the deferred dividend payment form of insurance was deliberately formed and carefully carried out in furtherance of its ambitious financial schemes. In any event it seems to have worked out in harmony with the latter and to have greatly promoted them."

In the two utterances quoted above the committee admits the justice of the basic criticism passed against the Mutual so far as the old administration was concerned by the Armstrong Legislative Committee and other outside investigators of the insurance situation. The report is a pamphlet of twenty-three printed pages, and severely condemns the McCurdy administration so far as the executive officers are concerned.

With but a few exceptions the Truesdale Committee goes no further in placing the responsibility for the general policy and its resultant acts of which it so bitterly complains. The work of the Finance Committee—composed of the men to whom President McCurdy was wont to refer as the "inner circle"—it declares was handled with "skill and ability, coupled with excellent judgment." The Truesdale Committee serves notice, however, that there are "certain transactions" in the financial department that it believes not to be "above criticism." These it proposes to deal with in a later report.

Passed the Fields Vouchers.

The Committee on Expenditures does not come off so well as the Finance Committee, for the Truesdale investigators are disposed to recognize that there is an individual responsibility upon the members for the expenses that the committee passed by a formal signing of vouchers. The members of this committee in the last few years have been Robert Oliphant, Chairman; James C. Holden, and Charles E. Miller. Practically all the vouchers used in the supply department by Andrew C. Fields went through the hands of the Expenditures Committee, and in the suit now pending against Richard A. McCurdy he is charged with responsibility for $600,000, devoted to the maintenance of a "confidential legal fund," the vouchers for which all bear the name of the Expenditures Committee's Chairman.

The other committees of the board, including the Agency Committee, which is charged in the by-laws with "a general supervision" of the agency affairs, are let off in the report with a negative sort of responsibility. Henry H. Rogers is the ranking member of the Agency Committee, and on it with him are Julien T. Davies, now General Solicitor of the company; Adrian Iselin, Jr., William H. Truesdale, the Chairman of the Investigating Committee, and Dumont Clarke.

It is understood that one of the allegations in the answer to be made in the suits over some of the extortionate agency contracts will be that Mr. Davies, as ex-President McCurdy's personal legal adviser, was cognizant of the terms of all of these contracts when they were made. The members of the Finance Committee have been in recent years George F. Baker, Charles R. Henderson, George G. Haven, Augustus G. Juilliard, Adrian Iselin, Jr., and James N. Jarvie.

Blamed for Bad Management.

Several new lines of action looking to the recovery of money improperly diverted from the company are suggested in the Truesdale Committee's report, particularly do former Vice Presidents Grannis and Gillette come in for condemnation on account of promiscuous signing of vouchers, while it is charged that Second Vice President Isaac F. Lloyd performed few other duties than keeping the minutes of the board and of the Finance Committee. At the door of Third Vice President John A. Fonda the report lays the responsibility of loose and careless methods in the management of the company's office buildings, which it deems "almost inconceivable."

Particularly are the unduly low rents singled out for criticism in this direction, but the report does not specify by whom these favorable rents were enjoyed and contains no recommendation of further investigation on this line, such as the Frick Committee in the Equitable put under way, with a view to ascertaining if any Trustees or officers of the company were personally enjoying these special favors or reaping indirect benefits through ownership of stock in subsidiary companies with which the improvident leases in the Equitable building were made.

In the Mutual Life Building are quartered the United States Mortgage and Trust Company, the Guaranty Trust Company, the Morton Trust Company, and the National Safe Deposit Company, in all of which the Mutual itself as well as various of its officers and Trustees have been interested, and in addition to this certain of the Trustees who have been members of the "inner circle" have occupied offices in the building for their private business. The offices of the law firm of which Julien T. Davies is the head adjoined those of the legal department of the Mutual Life.

An echo of the disclosures about the extravagance of the McCurdy administration comes in the finding of the committee, that in the years 1903 and 1904, $90,000 was spent in Paris for the purchase of furniture for Richard A. McCurdy's private suite of offices on the eighth floor of the building. These offices have always been screened from the gaze of the public. When Mr. McCurdy was on the witness stand and was asked about the report that he had a $12,000 rug beneath his desk, a $6,000 desk on top of the rug, and a $1,000 arm chair to sit in, he denied them. The offices have now been dismantled and are to be rented for business purposes.

To Let Policy Holders Vote.

One feature of the Truesdale Committee's report which attracted considerable attention yesterday was the suggestion at the outset that a scheme be worked out giving to the policy holders the opportunity to adopt some method of voting for Trustees. The committee recommended that a special committee of five Trustees be appointed for the early consideration of this matter. How this can be done in the face of the Armstrong Committee's bill, already passed, prescribing a definite method of electing trustees in mutual companies, insurance men did not attempt to suggest yesterday.

The report goes on with a declaration for a general executive reorganization of the company, re-counting the indefiniteness of the duties of the various Vice Presidents and Secretaries under the old regime and concluding that the entire working organization is far behind the times. A special report on the scheme of reorganization will be made to the Board as soon as completed. Next the report takes up the work of committees, and has this to say about the Finance and the Agency Committees:

> The Committee on Finance has been by far the most active and industrious of any. It has held meetings as often as once a week, which its members have attended with regularity. Those affairs of the company which have come under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee have been handled with skill and ability coupled with excellent judgment. The high character of the investments of the company bear ample testimony to this fact. There are certain transactions in the financial department of the company, however, which have occurred in the last ten years, involving the relations of the company and some of its Trustees and officials with outside financial corporations in which the company is interested, as also a certain other class of transactions which your committee believes are not above criticism and which will be fully dealt with in a later report.
>
> The Committee on Expenditure appears to have been an active one, but its duties seem to have been performed in a very perfunctory, superficial way. It has met regularly and has apparently approved for payment certain of, but by no means all, the expenditures of the company and reported same from time to time to the board, giving the aggregate total of each expenditure as classified in the company's accounts, but not showing the nature or character of the expenditure in any particular whatever.
>
> Your committee believes that certain expenditures of the company in recent years, which have been so gravely criticised, should not have been approved and passed by the Committee on Expenditures, as has been done, but that the attention of the board should have been specifically callled to them, to the end that proper action might be taken by the latter correcting some of the practices that have been in vogue.

Only Perfunctory Work.

Upon the Committees on Insurance, Agency, and Auditing, the criticism is passed that their work has been only of a perfunctory character.

In making its declaration that the proper function of an insurance company has been lost sight of through the ambition of the past management to operate in the realm of high finance, the Committe says:

> This company, and those who have actively participated in its management during the past forty years, have much reason to be proud of its record and achievements. Its strength and influence have grown and spread steadily until it is to-day one of the greatest institutions of the kind in the world; in some respects the greatest. It is only the more deeply to be regretted, in view of its record and standing, that some of those in charge of its affairs should have permitted unworthy ambitions and methods to have gradually taken possession of and finally controlled their policy and led them to do or authorize done many things which were wrong in principle and which at length brought dishonor and disgrace upon themselves, and have discredited the company in the eyes of its policy holders and the world generally, to an extent from which it cannot fully recover for some years.
> Our investigations thus far lead us to believe that the troubles which have befallen the Mutual Life Company can all be more or less directly traced to the ambition of its management to equal or excel all others in the amount of insurance it should write and maintain, furthered by its other and possibly controlling desire to be one of the great financial powers of this country. The real purpose of the company's organization, viz.: to furnish to its members absolutely safe insurance at the lowest possible cost, seems to have given place to this ambition for power and influence in the business and financial world.

The committee criticises the methods which it says have put the home business of the company on a wasteful and improvident basis of cost, and have rendered the company's foreign business so unprofitable that steps are now under way looking to its discontinuance in all foreign countries except possibly Great Britain, Canada, Holland, Belgium, Mexico, and France. These criticisms are based on the facts which became known in the investigation by the Armstrong Committee.

Competition One Cause.

Recognizing the fierceness of the competition which has existed among the great companies here, as one important cause of the undue expense, the Truesdale investigators note that the three great New York companies nevertheless were able to unite to prevent hostile legislation and to obtain the kind of supervision by State Departments that their administrations desired. It suggests that the same spirit of co-operation might be equally well invoked in bringing about reforms in business practices and furnishing insurance on a more businesslike basis.

To this end the committee expresses its approval of the limitation of $150,000,000 a year set by the Armstrong Committee bills for the new business of companies the size of the Mutual, and expresses no doubt that the Mutual will be able to flourish under the restriction with a great saving to its policy holders in the matter of expense.

Deferred dividends the Truesdale Committee terms "a mongrel type of insurance in which the investment and speculative features are prominent." It admits the virtual deception of the policy holders by means of the "adapted illustrations" and other devices used by agents to get business of this nature. Its report continues:

> The management of the company has seemed to highly favor this form of policy, evidently for the reason that it virtually suspended for periods varying from five to twenty years the distribution of the net earnings of the company in the form of dividends on its policies among the holders thereof. A large accumulation of surplus or net earnings has resulted, shown on the company's balance sheet as "Contingent Guaranty Fund."
>
> It is difficult to resist the conclusion that the policy of the management in giving preference to the "deferred dividend payment" form of insurance was deliberately formed and carefully carried out in furtherance of its ambitious financial schemes. In any event it seems to have worked out in harmony with the latter, and to have very greatly promoted them.
>
> The situation created was simply this: A large fund was steadily accumulated from premiums and investments, the returns from which for ultimate distribution also aggregated large sums annually. No regular annual accounting was required or made to the beneficiaries of the latter; such accounting was to be made in future at the end of varying periods, with no check or opportunity for comparison of results year by year or between different companies.
>
> Such a situation is inherently weak and dangerous to all concerned, and is undoubtedly directly responsible for many of the troubles which have befallen this company and those identified with its management.
>
> Your committee is in entire accord with the "Legislative Investigating Committee" as respects its recommendation that the writing of "deferred dividend payment" policies be discontinued and prohibited for the future. This, however, not to affect such contracts already made, further than that regular annual computations of dividends accruing to the latter shall be regularly made and set apart, to be ultimately paid as required by their terms. Report of the dividends so allotted and the basis thereof to be reported to the State Insurance Commission each year. In this further recommendation your committee also concurs.

Its Allied Trust Companies.

The report reviews the acquisition by the Mutual directly and through its "offices" of "two trust companies" without enumerating them, and refers similarly to the close relations established with these and other institutions of a like nature through the acquisition of stock by the Mutual and some of its officers and trustees. It notes the general run of the deposits that are maintained in nearly all of these institutions and the low rates of interest paid. Recognizing the correctness of the argument that the investments in bank and trust company stock have been very profitable to the Mutual Life, the Truesdale investigators continue:

> Your committee is most reluctant to question, much less criticise, the policy of the management of this branch of the company's operations, in view of the satisfactory results shown therefrom. It feels impelled, however, in considering this particular subject, to raise the broad question of whether a life insurance company, which under the provisions of its charter cannot directly engage in such general financial undertakings, should be permitted to do so by indirection in manner pursued by this company through its interests as a stockholder, controlling or otherwise, in various banks, trust companies, &c., in manner indicated. The committee is of the opinion it should not.
> The company must at all times keep substantial cash balances to its credit in banking institutions of standing, although, in the opinion of this committee, these have in the past been maintained at much higher figures than necessary, and to the company's manifest disadvantage in some respects. The cash balances in banks should be reduced, and current rates of interest allowed the company on its bank balances.

The committees expresses as its opinion that the holdings of the Mutual in any of the subsidiary companies should not exceed 10 per cent. of the total outstanding stock of any of such companies, and records its regret that the Armstrong Committee should have recommended to the Legislature that stock investments of all kinds should be prohibited to insurance companies.

In the matter of syndicates, however, the Truesdale Committee rejects the theory that such participations enable a company to get its securities at "rock bottom" prices. It therefore coincides with the ideas of pending legislation that the company should not engage in any more syndicate operations; that its officers should not be interested in syndicates of any kind, and that its Trustees, in so far as they conduct the financial operations of the company, should not be interested in any syndicate from which at any time they might have occasion to purchase securities for the Mutual.

Amazed by Official Indifference.

Under the head of improper expenditures, exclusive of the improvident agency contracts and excessive salaries, the Truesdale Committee says that it is "amazed at the indifference regarding these shown by those officials of the company who were also Trustees and also by other of the Trustees who were in a position to know of them, and who with knowledge thereof approved or countenanced them. For illustration, the committee mentions the "confidential legal fund" to which reference has been made, and it says:

> While your committee does not believe the Chairman or any member of said committee personally benefited by these transactions, nevertheless they have placed themselves in position to be responsible for the same, or at least the Chairman certainly has done so, and your committee therefore recommends that this matter be referred to the President with power to take such action, under advice of counsel, to secure an accounting and restitution of the moneys so disbursed as is found possible.
>
> The committee strongly urges an immediate reorganization of the Committee on Expenditures, both as to personnel and methods.
>
> The Vice Presidents of the Company, who were also Trustees, had personal knowledge of and formally approved numerous large disbursements, among them those immediately referred to above and others of like, questionable character. They had long been connected with the company; they were very familiar with its business and operations, and by reason thereof had, from time to time, been advanced to the high and responsible positions occupied, and were paid large salaries in return for their experience and services.
>
> They certainly have fallen far short of doing their duty in knowingly permitting such transactions without earnest and repeated protest to the officials and Board of Trustees. In the opinion of your committee these officials and several others holding responsible positions in the company's service cannot longer serve the company's interests in the several positions they have held, and should retire therefrom.

The Truesdale Committee says that it is advised that the disbursements of the company's funds for political or campaign purposes were unlawful, and that recovery can be had from the officers and Trustees who were responsible for these payments. It notes that the President has already consulted counsel in regard to such recoveries.

Still Hunting for Fields.

Referring to Andrew C. Fields, from whom the Truesdale Committee says no proper accounting has ever been had, the committee announces that it will soon be informed by its accountants what the disbursements that Fields has made have aggregated during the last five years. The committee has detectives still searching for Fields, but it says that it has not been able to locate him. It is understood that there is a possibility that an indictment against him will be sought so as to insure his appearance here when his whereabouts may have been discovered.

By reason of the unsatisfactory returns from the operation of the company's office buildings, the Truesdale Committee finds that in the last eight years the assets of the company have been written down to the extent of about $9,000,000. Of the management of the home office building and the $90,000 set of furniture for ex-President McCurdy's office, the report says:

> The examinations made into the management of the company's general office building in this city reavealed a very bad condition of affairs. It seemed almost inconceivable that such loose, careless methods as were shown to exist could possibly have been permitted under the very eyes of the numerous high-salaried officials occupying these offices.
>
> Rents were lower than charged in other surrounding property of the same character, and the cost of maintaining and operating the building was unduly high. The low net returns so freely criticised, as before stated, resulted directly and wholly from the absence of ordinary business ability in managing the property.
>
> The committee promptly brought this matter to the attention of the officials of the company, who have reorganized the staff in charge of this building and taken other steps which will increase the income from it and effect economies. These combined will soon show much better results. Great extravagance has been shown in a variety of ways in connection with the construction, repairs, and refurnishing the general offices of the company.
>
> The books show that in the years 1903 and 1904 $90,000 was expended in Paris in the purchase of furniture for the President's suite of offices. This particular purchase seems to have been made through the company's Paris general agency. The bills covering same were paid through this agency and credited to it without being presented to and approved by the Committees on Expenditures and Audit.
>
> It seems to the committee some recourse should be had on behalf of the company to recover from whomever was responsible for such a piece of extravagance, and that legal advice should be taken to ascertain whether same can be had.

The report declares finally for a general readjustment of salaries throughout the company, remarking that there are many inequalities resulting from the present automatic salary scheme which President McCurdy described with some detail on the witness stand that ought to be adjusted. The committee is unable at this time to report in full as to the work of its accountants, which is still in an incomplete stage.

TO PRESS REBATING CHARGES.

District Attorney in Boston Gets Proof Collected by Lawson.

BOSTON, March 31.—The Grand Jury of Suffolk County will be called upon to investigate the charges that rebates have been granted in this county by the New York Life and Mutual Insurance Companies, according to an announcement made to-day at the office of District Attorney John B. Moran.

Mr. Moran's decision to act was reached after a two hours' conference with Thomas W. Lawson, who, on March 21, brought the charges of rebating to the attention of Attorney General Malone, Insurance Commissioner Cutting, and District Attorney Moran.

Mr. Lawson expressed a desire yesterday to withdraw the charges. In explanation he said that "the present system of conducting the life insurance business makes it possible at all times to shunt any detected crimes onto the backs of agent canvassers." The District Attorney declined to permit the withdrawal and summoned Mr. Lawson to his office, and got the evidence which the latter had collected.

"The evidence already in my possession," the District Attorney said, "is sufficient to convict the agents involved, but whether or not I can trace the rebates directly back to the company remains to be determined."

JORDAN TO STAY AWAY.

Will Tell Nothing About $600,000 Equitable Note, He Says.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Ga., March 31.—Thomas D. Jordan, former Controller of the Equitable Life, arrived here last night accompanied by Mrs. Jordan, and they are stopping with T. M. Fitzpatrick, who is an uncle of the wife of Jordan's son. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan came in the night and they have kept within doors all day, refusing to see newspaper men. Mr. Fitzpatrick late this afternoon gave out the following as coming from Mr. Jordan:

"I am here in Washington because it suits me to come here and visit my friend, Mr. Fitzpatrick. I am not going back to New York at present and I do not know when I shall return. That is my own business. When I do return, however, I shall give no information in regard to that $600,000 note, as that is a business matter. James W. Alexander is my friend, and if I knew anything that would injure him I would keep it to myself. I do not see why so much publicity should be given to my movements."

NEW YORK LIFE'S DILEMMA.

Liable if it Does or Doesn't Publish Russian Policy Holders.

The New York Life Insurance Company sent out a statement yesterday saying that its counsel in Russia had advised it that if, as required by the Armstrong Committee, it published the list of its Russian policy holders among others, it would violate the penal code of Russia, whereas if it complies with the Russian code, and did not publish all of the policy holders, it would be committing a misdemeanor in this State.

The statement says that the company has intimation that the same situation may exist in other countries of Europe, and fears that "a grave international question" may be involved.

> In addition to the probable violation of the statutes of Russia and possibly of other European countries there are other grave reasons why the names and addresses of the insured should not be published broadcast. A man's life insurance is always a private matter, and frequently a matter which he desires to keep secret. He may have family reasons or business reasons—perfectly valid reasons, too, why he does not want the world to know that he is insured. This proposed law seriously invades private rights, and it will very likely subject the companies to a large amount of litigation, aside from the danger of the violation of penal statutes which will follow if the law is passed as it stands.

It was said yesterday by a lawyer who was familiar with the negotiations preceding the admission of the American companies into Russia, on their present basis, that the section now complained of was inserted in the Penal Code of that empire at the wish of the American companies concerned in the negotiations.

Dawson, the Actuary, at Ottawa.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, March 31.—Mr. Dawson, the actuary who figured in the insurance investigation in New York, reached here to-day and put himself in communication with the Canadian Insurance Commission and the Government counsel who is conducting the inquiry.

TURNEY SAYS HE STOLE FOR FIVE OR SIX YEARS

He Refuses to Tell What He Did with the $34,000.

DETECTIVES QUESTION WOMAN

Prisoner Says Friends Have Deserted, but He's Sure His Wife Will Stand by Him.

Following a consultation at the District Attorney's office between President Albert H. Curtis and Cashier Edward Wise of the National Bank of North America and Assistant District Attorney Pinchot, in the case of James A. Turney, the defaulting note teller of the bank, it was announced yesterday afternoon that a formal complaint against Turney would be presented to Magistrate Moss on Monday morning.

The complaint will hold that Turney's peculations, aggregating $34,000 or more, have covered several years. It is expected that Turney's lawyers will waive examination and Mr. Pinchot will then present the case to the Grand Jury.

The developments of the day, as a whole, indicated that the bank's money had disappeared in comparatively small sums. Pinkerton detectives said that Turney had from time to time given money to one and perhaps two or three women, and following this theory yesterday afternoon they cross-examined a woman who was well acquainted with the prisoner. The result of their questioning was not announced.

Turney talked to reporters yesterday in the Tombs. He denied a story that he had been an acquaintance of Ruth Rogers, who committed suicide in a flat in West Eighty-fourth Street on March 11. He said he had never heard of the woman.

The police of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station were asked by the Pinkerton Agency and the bank officials to examine Turney's locker in the Twenty-second Regiment Armory. Turney was until recently a Captain in the Twenty-second. The police opened the locker and found many letters from women. Turney was asked yesterday about the letters.

"They are eight or nine years old," he declared, "and there is nothing in them that is dishonorable. I am surprised that the regimental authorities should have allowed the police to go through my personal effects in this way."

Turney was questioned concerning a woman whose gas bill was addressed to him at the bank. He said that she is a respectable person who owns considerable property. "I have been administering her business affairs for years," Turney declared, "and this bill came to me as her representative. My wife knows about her."

"One of the bank officials says that you took $34,000 in a lump sum?" was suggested.

"That would have been impossible," replied Turney, "any one familiar with banking affairs knows that. The officials all know that the irregularities have extended over a period of five or six years."

Turney was asked how he had spent the money, but declined to answer. There was bitterness in his voice when he replied to a question as to how many of his friends had been to see him.

"None of them has been here," he said. "Plenty of money brings a man plenty of friends. When he has nothing they desert him. But I have one friend—my wife. She'll stand by me till the last."

Major Frank Keck of the Twenty-second Regiment, who represents Turney in a will case now pending, called on the prisoner yesterday. He said he did not care to represent Turney in a criminal case because he only handled civil suits.

Vice President Lee of the Bank of North America said that none of the letters found in Turney's locker indicated any wrongdoing.

"We believe that a woman in the case got a part of the funds stolen by Turney," continued Mr. Lee. "We know the woman's name, but it cannot be made public at this time."

MOROCCO CONFERENCE ENDS WITH AGREEMENT

Accord on All Points—Protocol to be Drawn Up at Once.

POLICE PLAN IS TEMPORARY

To be Operated for Five Years—France Gets Three Shares of Bank—Delegates Praise Our Mediation.

ALGECIRAS, March 31.—After a plenary session lasting until 6 o'clock this evening the Conference on Moroccan Reforms registered a complete accord and appointed a committee to embody this accord in a formal protocol.

The consummation of the work of the conference was announced in the following official communication:

"The conference has terminated its labors and accord is established upon all points. It has adopted a definite text for the remaining articles concerning the State Bank and customs. The final article, regulating the distribution of police at ports, was adopted from the Russian draft. By it France will police four ports, Mogador, Saffi, Mazagan, and Rabat, and Spain two, Teutan and Larache, and France and Spain together will police Tangier and Casablanca, subject to an inspector of police. The Dutch Delegate announced that his Government declined to appoint an officer.

"The conference has appointed a special committee to revise the text of the agreement. This committee meets on Monday to consider the final formalities of the protocol."

The duration of the police agreement is fixed at five years.

The settlement of the question of the State Bank of Morocco gives France three shares, including those of the French Syndicate. The other nations have one share. Four bank supervisors will be appointed by the Bank of England, the Bank of France, the Imperial Bank of Germany, and the Bank of Spain.

The complete accord resulted from a long conference this morning between M. Revoil, head of the French mission, and Count von Tattenbach of the German mission.

Mr. White, the American delegate, is of the opinion that the result is a satisfactory one, not only because the immediate future of Morocco is secured, but because the manner of the settlement is satisfactory both to France and Germany, removes the causes for friction, and restores international relations to a normal condition. The principles for which Germany insisted, the integrity of Morocco and equal commercial and economic rights there, were, Mr. White thought, recognized, while the special position claimed by France also was acknowledged.

Others of the leading delegates confirm Mr. White's opinion and emphasize the good effect the result should have on the European situation. They say that the agreement was in no small measure due to the efficacy of the mediation on the part of the United States through its chief representative.

With reference to the effect of the conference on Morocco, the delegates were reserved in expressing opinions. They admitted, however, that real reforms would be impossible without the good-will and sanction of the Sultan and his advisors. For that reason the last act of the conference will be to order that the reform programme as adopted be submitted to the Sultan by Chevalier Malmusi, the Italian Minister to Morocco, who is Dean of the Diplomatic Corps at Tangier, with the intimation that it is the unanimous wish of the powers that it be put into operation immediately.

Mr. White, after the signature of the protocol, will return to Rome by way of Gibraltar, and Mr. Gummere, the American Minister to Morocco, who is one of the delegates to the conference, will leave for Tangier. There is a strong feeling among his colleagues that Mr. Gummere should visit Fez with the other foreign missions.

ROW LASTED JUST A YEAR.

The Kaiser's Visit to Tangier Was Made on March 31, 1905.

The German Emperor's visit to Tangier was made on March 31, 1905, and the Conference on Moroccan Reforms came to a final agreement on March 31, 1906. The conference was a direct result of Emperor William's visit to Morocco. Since that visit the dispute between Germany and France in regard to the future of Morocco has more than once seriously threatened the peace of Europe, and has led to many events of international importance, including the resignation of France's famous Foreign Minister, M. Delcassé.

It was in March, 1905, that the German Government informed the Sultan of Morocco that Germany was not a party to the agreements made by France with Great Britain and Spain. At the same time the Emperor's approaching visit to Tangier was announced. The Anglo-French convention had given to France practically a free hand in Morocco in return for the waiving of her claims in Egypt, concessions in Newfoundland, and other considerations.

Emperor William's unexpected interference created a very delicate international situation, which was not much ameliorated by the agreement, after prolonged negotiations, to refer the Moroccan question to an international conference. This agreement was reached last July.

The principal questions to be settled by the conference were the control of the Moroccan police and the Moorish financial problem. It was recognized from the first that these were the only two vital subjects—that the power which controlled the police and the finances of Morocco was the power which would control the country. France contended that the two previous conferences on Morocco clearly established her right to police Morocco, as well as the Algerian frontier, basing her claim on the fact that Morocco adjoined Algeria. On the other hand, Germany declared that France had no more rights in Morocco than any other nation.

The conference opened in the Town Hall at Algeciras on Jan. 16. The principal delegates of the powers were M. Revoil, ex-Governor of Algiers, representing France; Herr von Radowitz, representing Germany; Henry White, Ambassador to Italy, representing the United States; the Marquis Visconti Venosta, ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, representing Italy; Count Cassini, Ambassador to Spain, representing Russia; Sir Arthur Nicolson, Ambassador to Russia, representing Great Britain; Mohammed el Torres, Minister of Foreign Affairs, representing Morocco, and the Duke of Almodovar, Minister of Foreign Affairs, who was chosen President of the conference, representing Spain.

For some days after the conference began work there was no serious dispute. Minor questions were settled amicably and for a time it was believed that the delegates had traveled to Algeciras on a mission which was almost entirely unnecessary. But as soon as the police and bank questions came up a very different situation arose. For a long time it appeared that agreement was impossible. No progress could be made at Algeciras, and semi-official communications issued at Berlin and Paris indicated that there was no hope that France or Germany would give way.

It was not until Austria presented a compromise police proposal that any hope of an agreement was entertained. It was admitted that this proposal was inspired by Germany. Even then the German and French delegates were far from an agreement, and it was not until the head of the United States Mission, Mr. White, presented a modified proposition, which was indorsed by all the powers, that the basis for a definite settlement was reached.

KAISER HONORS BUELOW.

Makes the Chancellor a Member of the Prussian House of Lords.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

BERLIN, March 31.—It was announced to-day that Emperor William had appointed Prince Bülow a member of the Prussian House of Lords. This shows that the Chancellor is again enjoying the favor of the Emperor, and this is doubtless due to his success in persuading the Reichstag to agree to the establishment of a Ministry of the Colonies. It certainly cannot be due to the result at Algeciras, which is an admitted defeat for Germany.

The Reichstag's action regarding the Colonial Ministry was a general surprise. Unexpected support for the Chancellor came from the liberal parties, and the success of Prince Bülow is a blow to the Centrists, who have been practically dictating the policy of the Government for years.

It is taken for granted that the Colonial Minister will be the hereditary Prince von Hohenlohe-Langenburg, at present Director of the Colonial Department of the Foreign Office.

In a recent address to the Budget Committee of the Reichstag the Prince outlined the policy he intends to adopt. He is supporting the establishment of a "Colonial Training College," which, he hopes, will turn out officials for the German colonies as well qualified to deal with colonial problems as the English officials.

A large number of the natives of the German colonies are Mohammedans, and the criticism has frequently been made that Mohammedans are more often selected for minor posts in colonial administrations than are native Christians. Prince Hohenlohe, in regard to this question, said that Christianity could be introduced only gradually, but that instructions had been sent to the colonial administrators to prefer Christians to Mohammedans in the selection of native petty officials.

GERMANY ALMOST FRIENDLESS.

Conference Has Shown That She Can Rely Only on Austria.

DURBAN, March 31.—The execution of losses due to Germany's Moroccan policy are being reckoned up at the Foreign Office.

That it is Germany's purpose to be consulted when other powers are arranging the future of weak States is now regarded as established.

In face of the diplomatic resistance of France, Great Britain, Italy, Spain, and Russia, the Germans have been compelled to recognize that they have not a friend in Europe except Austria. The Triple Alliance failed to hold Italy to the support of Germany. The strain of recent months showed that Italy is in secret agreement with France, and the Triple Alliance, although existing, as before, on parchment, is considered to be virtually ended. Diplomacy may reconstruct the Alliance at the expiration of its term, but the reliance of Germany on the constancy of Italy has been shaken for the present. Russia also, upon whom Germany counted as remaining neutral in the discussions of the Moroccan questions, has been against her. Germans, however, it is pointed out, regard it as a great gain to learn that they cannot rely in international politics on any one except themselves and Austria.

Respecting Morocco itself, Germany has secured equal trade for the future, and has checked for some years the development of French political designs.

The losses sustained by Germany, and they are deemed great by those who are opposed to her Moroccan policy, are that a reconciliation with France has been delayed indefinitely, while France and Great Britain have been pressed closely together in their mutual dislike of Germany.

The effect on internal opinion in Germany of the Government's Moroccan policy has been to consolidate and strengthen the conviction that Germany must continue to develop her navy in order to be safe in future international discussions, and it has also increased Germany's determination to avoid the ruin of war.

A VICTORY FOR FRANCE.

Opinion in London—Future Trouble Over Morocco Expected.

LONDON, March 31.—Although it was anticipated for a fortnight, the successful outcome of the Algeciras Conference brought great relief to England, as during the past year the Moroccan question was the only one causing serious misgivings for the peace of Europe.

The agreement is considered to be a victory for France, which retains the preponderance of influence in the financial affairs of Morocco and loses little of what she demanded with respect to the policing of the country, for, with a majority of the powers supporting France's policy, the diplomats at Tangier are not likely to interfere much with the Franco-Spanish officers.

While Great Britain opposed the conference until France had agreed to it, it is now realized that the meeting of the delegates served useful objects in cementing the Anglo-French entente and dissipating the belief held in many Continental capitals that Great Britain would only support her friend when it was to her own interest. On the other hand, it assures Great Britain that she is not involved with a dangerous, aggressive power.

As to the future, the Foreign Office is not so optimistic, the officials looking upon the agreement as merely a temporary relief. It stops aggressive action, but does not prevent the interested nations from continuing to strengthen their positions until either feels strong enough to take without parley what it failed to secure through diplomacy. It is not believed that Germany will give up her effort to obtain a footing in the Mediterranean.

STARVING JAPANESE WANTED NO CHARITY

Would Not Beg; Paid Reduced Prices for Relief Supplies.

MANY SAVED BY AMERICANS

People Warmly Appreciate the Aid Extended from the United States—Thanks the Diplomats.

TOKIO, March 31.—The distress in the famine districts will last until October, but the acute stage will be passed by June, when other crops will be harvested.

The severity of the ordeal through which the people have passed will hardly be realized by those accustomed to a higher standard of comfort. Eight feet of snow covered the wide tracts of country where the helpless people and their hungry children cowered in their flimsy hovels.

Yet all through they have shown a wonderful spirit of independence and self-reliance. They would never stoop to beg, so that in numerous instances the heads of the villages reduced the price of food that might have been given gratuitously to a third its usual cost, in order that the recipients in paying this price might preserve their self-respect.

A careful examination of conditions in the famine districts, however, make it clear that while the distress is very severe, there has been exaggeration in some accounts. The deaths that can be directly traced to starvation are practically nil. In addition to the great crop shortage, which in some places was only 2 per cent. of the average, the Winter was exceptionally severe, and this resulted in a considerable mortality among the aged. Yet the death rate in these districts was not abnormally high.

Deaths probably would have been far more frequent had it not been for the general subscriptions so promptly sent, especially from the United States. One thing that every subscriber may be assured of is that every cent was judiciously expended.

The heads of counties and the heads of villages gave their cordial and gratuitous co-operation to relief work. The Japanese Government has not yet the work of relief to foreign charity, but has started relief works throughout the districts. These, while providing remunerative employment, will permanently benefit the country at large. Large quantities of hard tack brought back from Manchuria have been sent to the famine districts.

President Roosevelt's appeal is resulting in generous responses. It has been published throughout the country, and has struck a harmonious chord.

The population of Sendai has invited Huntington Wilson, Secretary of the American Legation here, and Mrs. Wilson to visit Sendai so that the people may personally return their thanks for the relief given by the people of the United States.

BAN ON DR. BARRY'S BOOKS.

Holy Office Condemns Works of Abbe Loisy's Followers.

ROME, March 31.—The Holy Office is preparing a solemn condemnation of the works of certain writers throughout the world which have been inspired by the principles of the Abbé Loisy.

Up to the present no American books have been condemned.

Two English authors are mentioned—the Rev. Dr. William Barry and the former Jesuit priest Terrill.

The Rev. Dr. William Barry is one of the best-known Roman Catholic priests in England. He is rector of the Church of St. Birinus, Dorchester, and has been a professor at Birmingham Theological College and Oscott College. In 1893 he came to America and delivered a number of addresses in this country.

His most celebrated book is "The New Antigone," a novel which, published anonymously in 1887, created an immediate and profound sensation. He has written various other works, including "The Papal Monarchy" and volumes on Newman and Renan.

The Vatican's campaign against the Abbé Loisy began three years ago, previous to which time his books had been tolerated, if not welcomed, by the authorities at Rome. He is one of the most learned priests of the Roman Catholic Church. He has arrived at the conclusion that the Old Testament is much of it valueless as historical record. He also declares that the Christian religion falls to the ground in the light of modern research, but that out of the destruction a new and greater Christianity can be raised.

The Abbé's books were placed upon the "Index Expurgatorius" in 1903. This condemnation was largely attributed to the efforts of Cardinal Richard, Archbishop of Paris.

ACTOR'S DEATH SUSPICIOUS.

Police Investigating Assault from Which Schriffey May Have Died.

Edward Schriffey, an actor, 65 years old, died suddenly in a saloon at Amsterdam Avenue and 109th Street yesterday morning. Schriffy was assaulted after coming out of a saloon in the neighborhood on March 20, and the Actors' Protective Union, of which he was a member, have asked the Coroner and the police to inquire into the cause of his death. The organization suspect that a blow he got on the head at that time may have caused his death.

Schriffy was born in Detroit, Mich. He was the understudy in Joseph Jefferson's company in his youth. Later he was with Lawrence Barrett while that actor was playing at the head of a stock company in the Detroit Opera House. He was also a writer of farce-comedies, his best-known one being "Collars and Cuffs." For the last year or two he played in vaudeville under the name of "Billy Barlow."

LA FOLLETTE ASKS A VETO.

Wants President to Protect Coal Lands in Indian Territory.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—President Roosevelt was urged to-day to veto a bill providing for a settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, because it is likely to contain a paragraph permitting the leasing of coal lands to railroad companies.

Senator La Follette of Wisconsin talked to the President about the bill. He said he had learned that the paragraph which he had opposed and had stricken from the measure while it was pending in the Senate was to be restored by the conferrees. The Senator strongly urged the President to veto the bill in the event of its passage with the objectionable paragraph restored.

The President did not indicate what he might do.

THE HERO OF COURRIERES.

People Want Government to Decorate Nemy, Leader of Rescued Miners.

LENS, March 31.—The survivors of the Courrières mine disaster of March 10, who were brought to the surface from Pit 2 yesterday, passed a good night. Their condition is much ameliorated, despite yesterday's excitement. The doctors do not find that they are suffering from fever, except the youngest man, Anselme Pruvost, whose temperature is slightly abnormal.

The floors of the hospital where the rescued men are being treated are covered with straw, to prevent noise, and the patients are kept in semi-darkness. The families of the patients are admitted to see them for very brief periods.

When the Prefect visited the men, Némy, the leader of the rescued party, said:

"I have some additional details to give. My mine boy, Pruvost, was injured by the explosion, and I was obliged to lead and carry him during our search for the outlet. His sharp ears heard three responses to our calls. Afterward I heard men using pickaxes, and Pruvost rapped on a water pipe. To this we received repeated answering signals. It was the noise made by a working party which guided us out."

The work of the salvage parties is delayed owing to the exhaustion of the men and the increasing danger from carbonic gas. An analysis of the air in the wine this morning showed it to be heavily charged with carbonic gas. An engineer named Weiss, who superintended the excavations in Paris during the search under the auspices of Ambassador Porter for the body of Admiral Paul Jones is superintending the salvage work at Courrières.

Nèmy is the hero of the hour, and a movement is on foot to have the Government decorate him with the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

The survivors of the Courrières disaster have joined in sending a telegram to Herne, Prussia, thanking the German Salvage Corps for its assistance.

PARIS, March 31.—It is semi-officially announced that Hugo, the Chief of the German Salvage Corps which went from Herne to assist in the rescue work at Courrières, will be made an Officer of the Legion of Honor; that Meyer, the Sub-Chief, will be decorated with the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and that the other members of the German Salvage Corps will receive Medals of Honor.

TO ABANDON ARMY POSTS.

War Department's Plan for Concentration at Brigade Posts.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The abandonment of a number of army posts in the West and Southwest is proposed in a recommendation for the redistribution of troops prepared by Lieut. Gen. J. C. Bates, Chief of Staff, and approved by Secretary Taft.

It is the purpose of the General Staff to have as many brigade posts as possible, that officers may have opportunity to deal with larger bodies of men, and Secretary Taft recently explained the plan of the General Staff to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Two or three years would be required to effect the desired changes, and the speed with which the redistribution can be accomplished depends on the amount of money Congress appropriates for the department. The posts recommended for evacuation are Forts Liscum and Davis, Alaska; Ringgold, Texas; Missoula, Mont.; Niobrara, Neb.; Reno, Okla.

SPECIAL TRAIN TO CARRY ARMY PRISONERS AWAY

118 Leave Governors Island for Leavenworth Prison To-day.

HANDCUFFED IN GROUPS OF 4

An Armed Regular Will Guard Each Group—All Are Particularly "Bad" Army Men.

One hundred and eighteen young men, all of them military prisoners, who once wore the uniform of the United States Army, will leave New York for Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, this afternoon. The prisoners come from all sections of the East and have been serving sentences at Castle William, on Governors Island, and were recently ordered transferred to the bigger prison at Fort Leavenworth, owing to the crowded conditions on Governors Island.

This is the biggest transfer of military prisoners ever made in this country in peace times, army men say.

All the forts and stations in the Department of the East will be represented in the contingent that will start West, and to guard them thirty picked men of the crack Fifth Regiment, now doing garrison duty on Governors Island, have been selected. A special train will leave New York about 1 o'clock this afternoon for Fort Leavenworth, via the Pennsylvania, and is scheduled to make the run between New York and Fort Leavenworth in fast time.

The prisoners will be handcuffed together in fours, and will be marched from the prison to the pier on Governors Island, where they will board a special boat that will take them to the Pennsylvania station. There will be a guard for each four, the guards to be commanded by a Lieutenant, a Sergeant, and a number of Corporals. Although no trouble is expected, the guards will go fully armed, and the prisoners will be given to understand that the slightest infraction of discipline will be dealt with according to military law.

That the men feel keenly their transfer from peaceful, easy going Governor's Island to the strict Government prison at Fort Leavenworth there is not the least doubt. At Governor's Island they receive exactly the same food allowance as the regular soldier gets, and are always given feasts on holidays. The best behaved of the Castle William prisoners have been retained, and it is only those whose conduct has been bad that have been ordered West. Nearly all of those that will leave New York to-day are wearers of a red letter "P" on their clothes, which denotes that they have been very bad.

All day yesterday the 118 due to start West to-day were busy packing up their belongings, and telling their comrades who will stay in New York how sorry they were to have to go to Leavenworth. It was really pitiful in many cases, an officer said, to witness the grief of some young fellows, the red "P" on whose jackets made it necessary to transfer them to the Western prison.

NATAL MINISTRY TO STAY.

Twelve Condemned Natives to be Executed To-morrow.

DURBAN, March 31.—The execution of the twelve natives condemned to death for the murder of policemen in the uprising last month, which was postponed by the Earl of Elgin, the Imperial Secretary for the Colonies, will take place on Monday.

At the request of Gov. McCullom and in view of Lord Elgin's assurances, the Natal Ministry has withdrawn its resignation.

GAVE HIM A POISONED DRINK.

Two Strangers Nearly Killed Richter with Supposed Whisky—They Are Missing.

Augustus Richter, a homeless mason, 28 years old, was found early yesterday morning in the doorway of a house at 55 Seigel Street, Williamsburg, suffering from the effects of raw ammonia and arsenic. It is alleged that Richter was persuaded by two strangers to drink the liquid. They led him to believe the liquid was whisky, it is said.

Richter had been out of work at his trade for several months and did odd chores in a saloon at 24 Seigle Street. He lost his job there late on Friday night, and while in an intoxicated state he set out to look for sleeping quarters.

According to the man's feeble statement at St. Catherine's Hospital yesterday he wandering around Seigel Street early in the morning when two men approached Richter and asked him to have a drink of whisky. They had a whisky flask, and Richter, without first investigating it, put the bottle to his lips and swallowed a large quantity of the contents. He was found in a semi-conscious state by Joseph Smith, a cripple, who summoned Policeman Swarts of the Stagg Street Station, who found the mason apparently dying.

Ambulance Surgeon De Verona removed Richter to the hospital. There it was found he was suffering from the effects of the poison. He was revived long enough for the police to learn his story.

The police, it is said, learned that liquid similar to that which was given to Richter had been administered to six horses in that neighborhood recently, and that all the animals had died. Last night the police were still searching for the two men.

MRS. OLCOTT'S HOME ENTERED

Burglars Force a Window, but Leave Without Stealing Anything.

Burglars forced their way into the home of Mrs. Frederic P. Olcott, at 4 East Fifty-third Street, early yesterday morning. The entered the house by cutting a hole in a window pan adjoining the rear basement door and unfastening the lock from the inside.

Mrs. Olcott and her family were asleep up stairs, and the burglars roamed over the three lower floors, forcing open trunks, and ransacking bureau drawers and closets. Nothing was stolen so far as Mrs. Olcott could discover.

The burglary was reported to the East Fifty-first Street Station yesterday. The police believe it possible that the thieves may have been in league with some of the servants. Mrs. Olcott would not allow the detectives to question them.

OIL FOR TROUBLED WATERS.

Lieut. Wycoff Would Compel All Vessels to Carry Some.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—As a result of the experiments of Lieut. Wycoff, United States Navy, retired, Representative Jones of Washington to-day introduced a bill requiring all seagoing and lake vessels to carry a quantity of oil, with apparatus for its distribution on the water in time of storm, the quantity and regulations for its use to be prescribed by the Government.

Lieut. Wycoff declares that ten gallons of oil, thrown overboard in a sack of certain texture and fastened to the vessel by a line, will distribute sufficient oil to keep down the waves for several hours. Two gallons are regarded as sufficient for a lifeboat.

AERONAUT'S CLOSE CALL IN BALLOON ASCENSION

Count de la Vaulx Collides with a Tree at West Point.

ALMOST DROPS INTO RIVER

French Expert, with Levee, Remains in Air One Hour and Descends Near Peekskill.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., March 31.—Count Henry de la Vaulx, Vice President of the Aero Club of France, and who has made some of the most notable balloon ascensions in Europe, made his first ascension in America from the siege battery at West Point shortly before 5 o'clock this afternoon. He was accompanied by Charles Levee, the young French balloonist, who has been in America for the last three months, and who made the first balloon ascension ever seen at the Military Academy grounds about six weeks ago.

For his ascension to-day Count de la Vaulx used the smallest of the three balloons which he brought over from France for the purpose of making flights in this country. It is called the Ludion and holds about 18,000 cubic feet of gas.

Great preparations had been made for the flight, which was expected to have been held under the auspices of the Aero Club of America. Owing to the wet and stormy weather and the high wind that blew over West Point this morning, it was considered inadvisable to make the ascension, consequently word was sent to the club's quarters in New York that the flight was postponed. A large delegation had intended to be on hand, but none of the balloon enthusiasts made the trip. Augustus Post, Leo Stevens, and André Massenat were about the only New-Yorkers who witnessed the ascent.

Toward noon the weather moderated, the kind died down, and the Count, who had been bitterly disappointed at the announced postponement, determined to make his first American ascent. Lieut. Frank P. Lahm took general charge of the gas-filling arrangements, and nearly three hours were required to inflate the balloon, which is larger than the one used here by Charles Levee.

When news that an ascension would be made after all circulated through the Academy grounds, the officers and cadets swarmed to the hill on which stands the towering monument, and watched the proceedings with keen interest. About 4:30 o'clock the basket was carefully attached. A number of cadets and officers caught hold of the balloon and carried it from the gashouse to one of the siege gun batteries, and Count de la Vaulx, with Levee, climbed into the basket. Comparatively little wind was blowing at the time, and it was from the northwest. Count de la Vaulx ascertained before leaving the earth that the lifting power of the gas was weak, much more so, Mr. Levee said, than had been the case when he made his ascent. Owing to this fact all of the ballast was thrown out except thirty or forty pounds.

It was a few minutes before 5 o'clock when the big balloon was set free. It failed to rise rapidly, and, to the consternation of the spectators, it made a vicious lunge at a big tree near the top of the hill. For a second every one expected to see the big, round ball torn in a dozen places, and a number of the cadets instinctively darted forward to render assistance if needed. With a rasping sound, the balloon swept by the branches, but both of the occupants were forced to dodge their heads in order to avoid being hit. This danger over, the balloon sailed directly for another tree. Count de la Vaulx threw out a little sand, and this sent the balloon up just enough to escape the top of the tree by a few feet.

The balloon then slowly floated over the parade ground, never as much as 100 feet above the surface, and as it approached the big clock tower of the Academic Building at the lower end of the field, another collision seemed inevitable, but the throwing over of more ballast carried the balloon in safety over the Hudson River. As it reached the middle of the river, practically over the ferry line to Garrisons, it suddenly seemed to stop and then slowly descended. A tugboat coming up the river tooted its whistle loudly and prepared to stand by and lend assistance, but the casting over of more ballast started the refractory balloon on its trip once more, and it reached the opposite shore of the river without incident, and then, sailing majestically over Sugar Loaf Mountain, was soon lost to sight in the southeast.

Count de la Vaulx and Levee only remained in the air about one hour. Just before 6 o'clock they descended safely in a big field one mile north of Peekskill.

"Our trip was uneventful," said Count de la Vaulx on his return to West Point shortly before 8 o'clock. "We had a surprise, though, on our descent, for the farmer who tilled the land where we came down was a Frenchman, and it was just as natural as being in my own country."

This evening Count de la Vaulx delivered an illustrated lecture on his balloon experiences in France before the officers and cadets of the Academy. Charles Levee left for New York from Peekskill with the balloon.

TO PLAY RUGBY FOOTBALL.

Local Devotees of Sport to Organize League Next Fall.

Devotees of the game of Rugby football are taking steps to introduce the sport in New York. There has been a quiet movement to ascertain the possibility of success of a Rugby Football League, and the result has been in every way satisfactory. It is expected that the league will be formally launched late this Summer, and games will begin in the early Fall. Those now interested in Rugby football are, of course, Englishmen who learned the game on the other side. Many of them are connected with the Association football clubs already organized here, but prefer the Rugby game as being more active and varied. Several teams have been organized, and one of these, calling itself the Freebooters, has already started out of what was formerly the Flushing Association football eleven. There are also a number of Englishmen working in the neighborhood of New York, among whom it is thought several teams can be organized.

Gordon Brown, the former Yale football Captain, and for four years almost a unanimous selection for the all-American team, is interested in the movement, and as there is no opportunity for college players to continue the college game after graduation, it is thought that many will be glad of the chance to take up a sport with most of its advantages, but requiring less time and less severe training.

It is recognized by the promoters that with baseball and the already overcrowded Summer athletic season coming on it will not be possible to arouse extensive interest in Rugby at this time, but next Fall it is hoped that it will attract the interest of colleges and schools which have put up the bars on the American game, and will be tried experimentally, at least, alongside of the college game, where the latter is to be retained. It is felt that wherever it can get a fair trial it will be retained. The difficulty in the outset is to get somebody to teach the game.

The possibility of a team at Columbia University, where the American game has been discontinued, is very encouraging, and the authorities are considering the plan.

An effort is also on foot to introduce Rugby football in Chicago and Philadelphia. Should the scheme succeed a series of intercity contests will be arranged next Fall. As a rule Association football does not appeal to those who have grown up on the American game or on Rugby. Association football is played entirely with the feet, and for that reason lacks the real interest to those who have become accustomed to a more active style. Rugby, on the other hand, seems to catch the fancy at once of devotees of our game. The unfortunate features are largely absent, while running and passing are more highly developed.

POLO CHANGES PROPOSED.

Plan of Combining Clubs for Sectional Tournaments Meeting with Favor.

Some changes in the Executive Committee of the American Polo Association are likely to be made at the annual meeting on Tuesday, April 17. A new method of conducting tournaments in some cities will also be discussed, and it will probably be used by the Boston and Philadelphia clubs, and, to some extent, by the New York clubs. This method, which was considered favorably at a recent meeting of the Executive Board, provides that the clubs in certain localities combine in holding one large sectional tournament. In this way, it is believed, a better entry list will be obtained and the tax upon individual clubs in preparing for and conducting an open event will be materially lessened.

Some plan has got to be adopted by the association to reduce the number of annual tournaments, for owing to the large number of new clubs that have joined the National organization, the application for tournaments is so excessive that it is almost impossible to find satisfactory dates for all the clubs without conflicting with other popular events.

While this sectional system may be adopted in the local territory, it is understood that Meadow Brook and Rockaway will hold their customary events. Several of the smaller clubs will probably consolidate in giving a series of games for the younger players. There will be no Spring tournament at Lakewood, and it is barely possible that Westchester will open the northern polo season. The Country Club of Westchester did not hold its usual event last year, owing to the work then in progress on its new field.

A number of Northern polo men are keeping in practice at the Carolina resorts, Camden and Aiken for the more important games of the season on local club fields. The prospect of international polo this year has been abandoned, chiefly owing to the inability of some of the men to go abroad who would constitute a representative American polo team.

FORDHAM LOSES ITS COACH.

Baseball Has a Set-Back Because of the Resignation of Callan.

The Fordham baseball squad has received a setback in not having a coach for the past week. Callan has been compelled to resign his position on account of ill-health, and Capt. Hartman has taken the burden upon his shoulders until the Advisory Board selects a new coach. An effort was made to secure the services of "Billy" Keane, who played second base and was Captain of the 1903 team; but Keane, who plays with the New London team, has to leave on April 12. The squad has begun practice outdoors for the second time this season. Men have been engaged for the past few days in getting the field in shape for the opening game on Wednesday with the St. Francis College team of Brooklyn. The squad now numbers eighteen men. The pitching department, which at the outset caused much anxiety, has developed in a marked degree. Hedorff, Egan, and Rudolph ought to be a trio capable of coping with those of any of the Eastern colleges.

The infield, which it may not be as fast as last year, has every indication of developing into a strong one. McCarthy, the young infielder from Morris High School, has not come up to expectations, and Capt. Hartman will come in from left field and cover the initial bag. Hartman's place in left field will in all probability be filled by Rhoades O'Reilly, the promising young outfielder from last year's freshman team. The other two outfield positions will be filled by the pitchers. The catching department is causing a considerable amount of worry. Kane will cover third base and McNeills, who has been fielding sharply, will play second, while offey, an infielder from Morris High School, will be shortstop.

The team of Fordham "Prep." has this schedule arranged: April 7, Columbia Grammar, 21; Cutler; 25, Berkeley; 28, St. Ann's Academy; May 3, Xavier High; 9, White Plains High; 11, High School of Commerce; 16, Mount Vernon High; 19, Dwight; 24, Loyola School; 30, Yonkers High; June 1, Morris High; 6, Betts Academy, at Stamford, Conn.; 9, Overlook Military Academy, at Norwalk, Conn.; 13, Hackensack High. With the exception of the last three all the games will be played on Fordham Field.

Telephone News Service.

Several years ago an editor in a small Illinois town conceived the notion of strengthening his subscription list, and, incidentally, making a little money on the side, by running out farmers' telephone lines into the surrounding territory. Anywhere from fifteen to thirty telephones were put on one line. The farmers paid $1 a month for the service, and in addition to having the free use of the line for telephoning among themselves and to the merchants of the town, they had even a greater boon. The editor, as an inducement to subscribers, inaugurated a "daily telephone news service." Every night when he received the latest Chicago newspapers, he cut out the principal headlines, summarized the leading news items, and, at a certain hour, in response to a given signal, all the farmers on his lines picked up the receivers and the editor read to them the full news of the day. In this way, families living twenty miles from the nearest railroad or telegraphic station had the news of the world as quickly as dwellers in the great cities. The idea has spread until now hundreds of country telephone companies are giving their farmer subscribers daily news service.—Success.

PEACE OF CHINATOWN IS MERELY A MERGER

The Quarreling Tongs Now Have a Holding Company.

TO TAKE GAMBLING PROFITS

The Kown Yick Will Divide Protection Money Between the Hip Sings and On Leongs.

The real significance of Chinatown's great peace treaty became known yesterday. The treaty's ratification was celebrated a short time ago by a twenty-course dinner to Judge Foster, presiding Commissioner of the conferences which paved the way for its coming. Members of the On Leong Tong and the Hip Sing Tong seated themselves at the same board, after a careful search for revolvers had been made, and conversed in the friendliest way.

It now appears that while the peace is genuine enough, it has a strictly commercial basis.

The truth of the treaty, which will be a surprise to Judge Foster, is that the On Leongs have consented to share the profits derived from the protection of Chinatown's gambling industry with the Hip Sings. Both Tongs will seemingly continue in existence, but the purpose of their continuance will be to cover a new organization, a holding company, the Kown Yick Tong, which from now on will handle the rake-off from fan-tan, pie-gow, and lottery games, and divide it between the parties to the peace.

The management of gambling from the beginning of Chinatown has been vested in the Lee Company. No sooner did the Lee Company begin to flourish than it found occasion for protection and a contract was duly drawn which named the On Leong Tong protector. In consideration of the services of the On Leong Tong, that organization has been drawing a certain per cent. of the profits of the gambling establishments. The On Leongs grew rich, and Tom Lee, the Tong leader, ammassed a large fortune.

Seeing money flowing into On Leong pockets Wong et, a wily schemer, whose day is done, organized the Hip Sings, with the end in view of dividing the spoils. Mock Duck, who is now in the Tombs, cast in his lot with the Hip Sings, and when Wong et was forced to make a sudden journey to China because of the sudden death of certain individuals in Mott and Pell Streets, stepped into his shoes.

An era of violence unprecedented dawned in Chinatown. Mock Duck posed as a reformer, opposed to the wickedness of his brethren, and especially outraged by the openness with which gambling was indulged in. The personification of offended virtue, he called the Parkhurst Society to his aid. The society proved an active ally, and there was gambling raid after gambling raid.

Matters went from bad to worse. Swiftly succeeding assassinations and ambuscades began to hurt business in Chinatown. The gambling profits decreased. The On Leong Tong finally saw that it would be cheaper to compromise than to fight further.

In seeking foreign intervention, however, Mock Duck had estranged his followers, and, just about the time the On Leong Tong was ready to surrender he was locked up on a charge of murder, which was followed by one of attempted bribery. He ceased to figure in Chinatown affairs for the time being, and the peace signalized by the Foster banquet was not of his making.

The Kown Yick Tong, which assumed the reins yesterday, will have charge of what may be termed the private policing of Chinatown. It will receive and disburse all funds derived from underground life there, and will further guarantee forgetfulness on the part of those who are summoned against Tong members now in legal difficulties or who may hereafter get into trouble.

All of which goes to show that mergers are convenient and harmful competition much to be deplored, even among Chinamen.

COACHING CLUB'S PLANS.

Pioneer to Start Seven Weeks' Season, Beginning Easter Monday.

The Coaching Club is arranging an unusually attractive season and the plans will embrace a longer and more comprehensive schedule of meets than ever before attempted. The annual mets of the Coaching Club and Ladies' Four-in-Hand Driving Club have been steadily increasing in numbers and popularity. At a recent meeting of the Coaching Club it was decided to put the Pioneer on the road between New York and Ardsley for the season of seven weeks' staging under the guidance of amateur whips. The first run, from the Holland House to the clubhouse on the Hudson, will be made on Easter Monday, April 16. Excepting Sundays and the dap appointed for the Coaching Club's annual meet and parade, the Pioneer will run daily until June 2. Then the club coach will be put away for the Summer and the horses will be sold under the hammer.

Several new faces will be seen on the box this year. The committee in charge of the coach has been enlarged to four members, of whom Alfred G. Vanderbilt and Reginald W. Rives served last year. The new men are Robert L. Gerry, who drove the Viking last year, and W. G. Loew, who also frequently tooled the Viking and the Venture during the thoroughbred racing season. Mr. Rives, who has been the "wheel horse" of the Coaching Club for years in buying and schooling the horses and driving the Pioneer, is not expected to be so active as usual this year owing to a contemplated trip abroad.

The annual meet of the Coaching Club will probably take place the first Saturday in May. H. S. Brenchley has been engaged as professional man in charge of the coach. Harry De Mawby, the guard, is in the West, and a new man will be selected for the position before the season opens.

The club will be the guest of Peter G. Gerry on the occasion of the annual lon gdistance run in May. The drive will be from New York to Lake Delaware, in Delaware County, a distance of nearly 100 miles. Not since the drive to Shelburn Farms in 1894 have the members of the Coaching Club contemplated such a long run.

In addition to driving the Pioneer three days a week Alfred G. Vanderbilt will put on the road his coaches Venture and Viking during the Spring racing season.

Squadron A is preparing to put on the road again its smart public stage Squadron, which for several seasons has run from the Hotel Savoy to the polo field at Van Cortland Park. J. Campbell Thompson and Edward Koch, who ran the successful dinner coach Vigilant to the Suburban Club last Summer, will continue the sporting enterprise this year, and there are rumors of several other public coaches which may materialize before the season is over.

KINGDON GOULD A HURDLER.

May Represent Columbia on the Track Team This Year.

Columbia's track coach, "Josh" Crooks, announced yesterday that Kingdon Gould has come out for the Blue and White team and will in all probability represent the university in the high hurdles. Further announcement was made that the team would begin outdoor practice on South Field to-morrow. The track this year will be about a lap and a half more to the mile than last year, owing to the building of the dormitories on the easterly end of South Field. The team will train on the made track on South Field for the remainder of the season. Frederick A. Geotze, Superintendent of Grounds, to facilitate matters, has allotted several rooms in the Columbia dormitories, and these will be made the permanent quarters of the team. Arrangements have also been made wit hthe Hotel Marseilles, at 103d Street and Broadway, for a training table.

When the team goes out on the track to-morrow, despite the numerous losses that it has suffered, it will be a promising aggregation, if the coach's calculations are accurate. The best men apparently are out for the half mile. The squad comprises the two-mile relay quartet, composed of C. A. Fulton, J. W. Brodix, R. Marsh, and A. Zink. F. S. Hetherington, who has made several good indoor records, has just recovered from an attack of grip, and B. Saunders, the freshman, who recently won the university novice championship, will also appear in the half mile.

A number of new men of promise have appeared for the 440-yard run. C. E. Grunsky, 1907, winner of the novice sprints championship; G. Crawley, 1908, and G. E. Hutchinson, 1909, have registered for this event. J. W. Brodix, an old stand-by, will probably lead the squad in the quarter, but will have a run for his place with G. Bull, 1908, and Hetherington and possibly Grunsky. The sprints and pole vault are fairly well fixed.

"Jack" Ryan, the football and basket ball star, has decided to come out for the high jump and the shot put. In the former event Ryan has arecord of over six feet.

CITY BREVITIES.

Horace Victor Bruce will address the League for Political Education to-morrow evening at 8:30 o'clock at 23 West Forty-fourth Street, on "Vacant Lot Cultivation in New York Suburbs."

A sale of Easter novelties and other articles will take place in the rooms of the Harlem Exchange for Woman's Work, 324 Lexington Avenue, between 126th and 127th Streets, on Thursday and Friday next. The sale is in the interest of needy women, in whose behalf the society is organized.

Members of the Manhattan Dickens Fellowship will meet at dinner next Thursday evening at Cavanagh's Twenty-third Street restaurant to celebrate the first anniversary of their organization.

The Tennessee Society of New York, which has been in existence just one year, will dine at the Waldorf-Astoria on Tuesday evening. The speakers will include United States Senator Frazier of Tennessee, ex-Borough President Littleton, and Champe S. Andrews.

PLANS FOR POWER BOATS.

Arranging Schedule for Races and the Annual Cruise.

The officials of the American Power Boat Association have begun the preparation of their tentative list of fixtures, subject to the final approval of the association. The two fixtures settled for New York waters are May 30, when the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club will hold a big open regatta, and July 4, when the Indian Harbor Club will conduct its annual event. It is probable that the Columbia Yacht Club regatta will be held on June 9, while the American Yacht Club and Larchmont may hold races. The latter usualy plans power boat races for ladies' day in race week, which this year will fall on July 17, while there is every probability that the Challenge Cup, won in 1904 by the Vingt et Un II. and now in its possession, will be raced for.

The dates for the association's races for the Gold Challenge Cup have been fixed for Aug. 21, 22, and 23 at the Chippewa Yacht Club, in the Thousand Islands. There is only one challenger thus far for the cup, the Sparrow of the Riverton Yacht Club, but it is expected that at least six will try to wrest the cup from J. R. Wainwright's Chip, the winner last year. It is known that the Hartford and Rhode Island clubs will challenge.

Measurer J. H. McIntosh has been in consultation with President Olyphant regarding plans for the annual cruise. No course or dates have yet been determined upon, but the statement is made that the cruise will be even more elaborate and, it is expected, more successful than last year.

E. H. HARRIMAN IN CONTROL?

Wall Street Hears He Has the Los Angeles Pacific.

It was rumored in Wall Street yesterday that control of the Los Angeles Pacific Railway Company has passed into the hands of E. H. Harriman. The road runs from Los Angeles to Santa Monica and operates an extensive suburban system.

A representative of the Southern Pacific denied yesterday that this road is interested in the Los Angeles Pacific, but he could not tell, he said, whether Mr. Harriman had personally acquired any of the stock. At the shareholders' meeting on March 7, when an issue of $12,500,000 5 per cent. general mortgage bonds was authorized, it was said that 76,500 shares, a majority of the stock, were voted by Mr. Harriman's representative.

COLLEGIATE REFORMERS TO CONTROL ATHLETICS

To Centralize and Regulate All Sports in the Future.

THE GATE RECEIPTS PROBLEM

How to Maintain Sport and Eliminate the Financial Feature Is the Real Question.

Within a couple of weeks the biggest movement that has ever been undertaken for the reform and control of collegiate athletics will be well under way. The extent of the revolutionary tendency has not been appreciated by those who have viewed its work casually. Although scarcely an institution in the United States has remained unaffected by the sentiment so generally expressed against abuses in sport, only the beginning of the transformation has been witnessed. When at the start of another academic term the extensive and radical changes will be realized, some conception of the true import of the present movement can be gained.

It is determined by the prominent educators interested in the coming plan that the new order of things that has been born of the agitation against football shall be firmly established and jealously maintained. It is resolved that the reformation shall go further and shall embrace the centralization and control of all collegiate athletic activity in such a way that any return to the old conditions will be impossible, and that the real serious difficulty in college athletics shall eventually be removed.

Naturally the main difficulty is money—gate receipts in its immediate expression in college athletics. To eliminate the gate and still provide for the support of the elaborate systems of athletics built up by the various colleges is the ultimate end. From the excess of money have developed all the exaggerations of the present, all its evils—for none of them would have been possible without a plentiful expenditure. While it would seem a simple matter to prohibit gate receipts and at once destroy the root of them all, the big plants erected and unpaid for have to be considered. To finance them and to provide for the legitimate continuance of athletics in their helpful influence is the problem ahead.

Harvard has an enormous debt on her stadium. Yale is planning to create one by building a similar structure, for which she has already amassed a considerable surplus with which to begin it. Pennsylvania has a big bonded indebtedness on her field and gymnasium. Princeton, too, owes money for permanent improvements, and so does Cornell. Columbia is about to undertake a million-dollar stadium. It is impossible to maintain such athletic plants without big incomes.

How these incomes are to be provided is the question. Endowment, annual subscription, and gate receipts are the only possibilities. The first is improbable, the second impracticable, and the third inevitable. Economical expenditures from the vast returns from athletic contests must be made to wipe out bonded indebtedness, and then the restriction of annual budgets to a legitimate size is the plan. Then the limitation of intercollegiate contests and the gradual reduction of their number and the development of intracollegiate activity may follow.

Those who have directed their whole attention to the reform of football have missed the real point of the entire situation. The roughness and so-called brutality of football, the undue exaggeration of interest and hysterical excitement attending the games, even its dangers were very unimportant considerations compared to the real trouble due to the improper morale of sport, impregnating every branch and simply finding its most conspicuous expression on the gridiron. Those who made football the scapegoat are beginning to realize their mistake.

The correction of the game was necessary, and has been effected. Its abolition as ordered by Columbia, Union, California, Stamford, and Northwestern was too radical. The advisers of these institutions are apparently pretty well convinced that their action was precipitate. Harvard, who was quite as emphatic in her denunciation of the malpractices, is certainly shaping her course to continue play, and the chances seem to favor her appearance on the gridiron as usual if less conspicuously.

Aside from football, the changes already effected in intercollegiate athletics have dealt mainly with the evils of proselyting and professionalism. The actual payment of money to play has not been the difficulty, but the proffer of inducements of one or another kind, that brought men into college who had no reason to be there, no serious purpose, and who were continued and maintained purely for the sake of winning an athletic supremacy that meant mainly superiority in deception. It would have been far better, viewed from the standpoint of moral effects in the opinion of leading educators, to hire out of hand skilled players and have let them play.

The restriction of all freshmen until in residence one year and until examinations on that year's work have been passed has made proselyting unprofitable and therefore improbable. The prohibition against graduate students has tended to further prevent it in another form and finally the proscription against all students below a very high standard of scholarship removes the last objection from the standpoint of this class of candidates.

These provisions have been subscribed to in the East by Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and Pennsylvania. It is a moral certainty that Cornell and Columbia will join them and the smaller institutions that are in the main clean, and in a few cases—note the more prominent athletically—the worst offenders in the entire gamut of sport, are sure to follow the lead.

Then will begin the gradual reconstruction of the whole system of athletics under the new plan. Collegians familiar with the situation are awaiting its first expression with the keenest interest.

CRESCENTS' PARTING SHOTS.

Brooklyn Club Men Wind Up Record-Breaking Season at Bay Ridge.

The events of yesterday closed the trap shooting season of the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn, which was the most successful in the fourteen years of shooting at Bay Ridge. Approximately, more than 100,000 targets were sprung from the traps in regular competitions and at practice from the beginning of the season on Oct. 14, and not a postponement occurred owing to climatic conditions. The records show that more matches were shot than ever before, more newcomers appeared at the traps, the fields were larger, and the marksmanship better than in any previous year.

All the season's competitions were concluded yesterday, the stake trophy, a one-hundred-dollar gun, going to Oliver C. Grinnell, Jr., who had quite a tussle with Dr. Teeter for the possession of the prize. Up to yesterday Dr. Teeter led with four wins to three for Mr. Grinnell. The last try resulted in a tie, and in the shoot-off Mr. Grinnell won. This made four wins for each man. The shoot-off for the trophy was quite interesting, and Mr. Grinnell won by a score of 23 to 22. The team prize, a handsome trophy presented by the club, went to Frank B. Stephenson and O. C. Grinnell, Jr., with Henry M. Brigham and Henry Keyes second. In the special scratch shoot, O. C. Grinnell, Jr., was first and T. B. Stephenson second.

Frank Stephenson annexed the March Cup for the best three scores, with H. M. Brigham second and J. J. Keyes third.

MOTHERS CHEER LADS AT ATHLETIC MEET

Midget Runners Compete in Sports of Public School 77.

SCRAMBLE FOR THE MEDALS

Events for Military Athletic League Members Included in Eight Regiment Armory Programme.

Midgets in stature and veritable babies in athletic experience last night provided the amusing and remarkable feature of the annual indoor meet of Public School No. 77 of Manhattan. These small boys, the majority of whom were attended by their mothers, appeared barely to have graduated to the distinction of their first short trousers. Yet for all that they displayed the spirit of track veterans as they raced in their respective events in the Eighth Regiment Armory, Ninety-fourth Street and Park Avenue. There were boys of older years also, and all had brought with them proud parents, uncles, and aunts and anybody who would cheer until the armory was packed with a crowd such as it had probably never before held. Even upon the stairway leading to the floor sat a score or more of mothers with infants in their arms, too young to compete, but taking in the athletic spirit of the great meet while they peacefully absorbed the contents of nursing bottles. Throughout the long programme the athletic enthusiasm which has become possessed of the schoolboys of this city ran riot.

The youngsters fairly mobbed the clerks when the medals were given out. They handed the bits og gold, silver, and bronze about for inspection, as proud as peacocks. Benjamin Schenk, a diminuitive bit of an athlete, won the 50-yard dash, and was placed second in the 100-yard, both for juniors. He was one of the most wildly excited boys in the whole armory.

The smallest of the boys, mere toddlers, raced in the thirty-yard dash for midgets. Leslie Killeen, who did not appear to be taller than a tailor's yardstick, came to the tape the winner. From the pistol shot to the finish he went at a tremendous pace for such a youngster, his flaxen hair flying and his baby face flushed and set toward victory. Edward Peterson and Walter Pacey, not a bit bigger than the plucky winner, got second and third places, respectively.

The events open to the men of the Military Athletic League brought out excellent performances. George E. Hall and James Teevan, Thirteenth Regiment, made a great race out of the three-legged competition. They beat their regimental mates, R. Wainwright and L. Pierce, to the tape by a flash, H. J. Edward and W. S. V. Happener, Twenty-second Regiment, getting third place.

Richard Rodgers, Eighth Regiment, captured the quarter-mile run in the fast time of 54 3-5 seconds. He made his way to the front of the big field after the first lap, and, despite the efforts of Dreher and Fennelly to overtake him, the best the latter two runners could get was respectively the second and third places.

New Class of Boats for Larchmont.

The meeting of the Larchmont Yacht Club held last evening adopted the racing rules recommended by the Atlantic Coast Conference, being the last of the New York clubs required to adopt them to insure their uniform use in waters in this neighborhood. The meeting of the club was important in other respects, adopting various changes in the courses of the club, and providing for a new class of restricted boats in which the members of the American, Indian Harbor, Manhasset Bay, and Hartford Yacht Clubs who did not join the new class of eighteen footers proposed because of the rejection of the Herreshoff design, will be invited to join.

The new boats are to be 21 feet water line, and will probably fit Class Q. Their beam will be not less than 7 feet on the water line in keel boats, and 7 feet 9 inches in the centre-board type. The free board must be 20 inches, and the actual sail area is limited to 600 feet, with not more than 480 feet in the mainsail. The boats must weigh 5,900 pounds or more, and must have a minimum draught of 3 feet in centre-board boats, and when racing the crews will be limited to three with a Corinthian helmsman.

THE KNABE REMOVAL SALE
Enters Upon Its Second Week To-morrow.
If you called upon us during the past week you appreciate what remarkable "piano bargains" we are offering, because of our removal to the new KNABE BUILDING, FIFTH AVE. & 39th ST. MAY 1st.
THIS OPPORTUNITY SHOULD NOT BE CONFOUNDED WITH THE ORDINARY "PIANO REMOVAL SALE" that has met your eyes so frequently in the advertising columns of the newspapers. WHEN THE HOUSE OF KNABE ADVERTISES A PIANO SALE, it has genuine value of no mean character to the piano purchaser, and this one—the second in thirty odd years—carries with it special opportunities, as we wish to sell every piano in the present stock rather than remove one instrument to our new building.
EVERY PIANO WILL BE SOLD AT A VERY SUBSTANTIAL REDUCTION from original prices. In fact, by comparision, you will know how greatly under all competition our removal prices are
These are some of the Pianos:
New Knabe Pianos of discontinued case designs.
Knabe Pianos which have been slightly used, and nothing injured. Some loaned, some rented, and some were used (solo work and accompaniment) by such artists as Kubelik, Gerardy, Rubinstein, Marteau, who this season used "Knabe" Pianos on their tours.
Also excellent assortment of Uprights and Baby Grand Pianos of other makers, some almost new, at greatly reduced prices, among which will be found instruments of the following makes: Steinway, Steck, Weber, Gildemeister & Kroeger, Sohmer, Krakauer, Emerson, Richmond, Smith & Barnes, Chase, New England, Waters, Wegman and Hofman.
Other makes of Uprights $110 upward, and Baby Grands from $225 upward.
Each instrument is marked in plain figures, from which there is no deviation. When desired we are pleased to sell upon the deferred payment plan.
Pianos intended for Summer Homes will be stored without charge and delivered when desired.

START THE CAMPAIGN FOR SIMPLE SPELLING

ANOMALIES ARE REGULATED

The List of 300 Words Spelled by the New System Is Received with Favor.

By lopping off superfluous letters from 300 words, the Simplified Spelling Board has fired the first gun in its campaign. With every list of 300 pruned words sent out goes a postal card containing this pledge:

"I will use in my correspondence, as far as may be practicable, the simpler spelling recommended by the Simplified Spelling Board in its circular of March 21, 1906."

The man who signs the postal card and returns it to 1 Madison Avenue has his name placed on the files, and thereafter he will receive all publications as they appear. Already, says the Secretary of the board, many favorable responses have been received.

Among the forms recommended are tho, altho, thru, thruout, ax, kist, (for kissed,) stept, stopt, wo, thoro, elipt, fixt, nipt, propt, pur, (for purr,) and husht. Words in which -t is substituted for -ed form the greater part of the vanguard. Taken as a whole, the changes are not violent, and any one who fears to have his etymological sensibilities shocked will meet an agreeable surprise. Classical authorities are cited to show that many of the so-called new forms are not really new, but were gradually changed by the adoption of imperfect standards. If Milton wrote "confest" and if Shakespeare, Bunyan, and Burns wrote "crost," why, asks the Simplified Spelling Board, in effect, should present-day citizens raise the cry that history and etymology are being outraged?

As the leaflet accompanying the list of 300 words points out, many of them are already in common use; some of these are honor for honour, jail for gaol, flavor for flavour, center for centre, draft for draught, skilful for skillful, sextet for sextette, and wagon or waggon.

The arguments advanced by the Simplified Spelling Board do not leave, apparently, a leg for its critics to stand on. A circular, entitled "A First Step," says:

> Some of those who would like to see our spelling made simpler fear that this will obscure the derivation of words; but all etymologists deny the statement and repudiate the argument. Etymology is history, and is now secure in innumerable books. Some object to any change, not realizing that change—much of it in the nature of simplification—has been almost continuous in the history of English spelling. We do not print Shakespeare's or Bacon's words as they were written; and surely no great catastrophe to English literature or to the literary character of the language will happen if our successors find—as they certainly will—as great or greater differences between their spelling and that of the present day.
> In familiar correspondence many simplified forms are now used which shock no one's nerves, and in the most emotional poetry such forms as dropt, stept, prest (Tennyson) are printed without attracting attention. It is probable that if all English words were printed to-morrow in the simpler forms which they will unquestionably bear a hundred years hence, it would take a very little while for us all to become accustomed to them.

Millions of dollars are wasted every year, says the Simplified Spelling Board, through the typewriting and printing of useless letters. And the gradual simplification is expected to save money and time as well as aid the spread of English as a universal language.

"The recommendations of the board will be announced from time to time as its plans mature," says the circular. "In this preliminary circular it desires merely to ask those who sympathize with its aims to take an initial step. There is inclosed a list of 300 of the commonest words, (not the complete list, which amounts to thousands,) of which different spellings are authorized by the leading dictionaries or by the usage of eminent men of letters, the simple forms being printed in the first column and the more complex forms in the second."

Then in black-faced type comes the list of the members of the board. The first ten names are Brander Matthews, E. Benjamin Andrews, O. C. Blackmer, David J. Brewer, Nicholas Murray Butler, Andrew Carnegie, Samuel L. Clemens, ("Mark Twain,") Melvil Dewey, Isaac K. Funk, and Lyman J. Gage. Altogether there are twenty-eight on the board.

The pamphlet containing the list of 300 words has an introduction which explains the plan on which they were chosen. The introductory paragraphs say in part:

> The anomalies and perversities of English spelling are obvious enough, and call loudly for regulation. But the very fact that some spellings are anomalous implies that the other spellings are more or less regular, and this is true. The majority of English words are spelled according to ascertainable analogies, and thus fairly regular. Words like eminent, prominent, evident, protestant, memorial, terrestrial, practical, astronomical, ability, peculiar, tedious, and previous, &c., are approximately phonetic as to the short vowels which are concerned in these words.
>
> They would not present many difficulties if the learner were not confused by a host of other words with other analogies. Any one can see that binn, bunn, butt, are out of accord with the rule established by the innumerable words like pin, pun, cut, and that centre, metre, fibre, are out of accord with the rule established by center, number, timber. So likewise dript, dropt, snapt, drest, prest, though not actually less common than dripped, dropped, dressed, pressed, are more in accord with the prevailing analogy of p or s before a t sound, which appear in apt, host, boast, best, nest, rust, &c.

Publishers are blamed for the adoption of less simple forms than those found in the original editions of Milton, Dryden, Burns, Scott, Byron, and other writers.

> "The habit of present publishers," says the circular, "of permitting their proofreaders to 'adopt' some imperfect standard like the older dictionaries as an inflexible rule, and to alter the text of the standard authors when a new edition is made to suit his 'preference' serves to conceal from the reader the real spelling of the author himself.
> "Happily, however, there are many hundreds of words in which this process of stereotyping irregular or anomalous forms has not prevailed, and in which a choice still lies open between a simple or normal form, and a less simple or anomalous form. It has been thought wise to print a partial list of the words now spelled in two or more ways, with a view to informing the public of the facts, and of ascertaining how far intelligent readers will concur in the effort to establish the simpler forms."

Below are given some of the words sent out by the Simplified Spelling Board. Many are omitted because it requires only one or two of a certain class to indicate the general plan. The forms in the first column are to be used instead of those in the second:

TWO FRENCH EXHIBITIONS.

One to be Held in Paris and the Other in Bordeaux.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Consul General Mason of Paris reports that in accordance with a decree issued by the Ministry of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, there will be held at the Grand Palais of the Champs Elysées in Paris, from July to November, 1906, an International Colonial Exposition, in which all nations are invited to participate. The scope of the exposition will include all products of the soil, forests, mines, fisheries, and manufactures of every kind from the colonial possessions of France and other nations, together with implements, machinery, habitations, and appliances which pertain to every form of industry and phase of colonial life and trade. Collections of woods, fibres, minerals, and domestic utensils are especially solicited.

The schedule prices for space allotted to exhibitors are fixed at 50f. ($9.65) per square meter of floor or wall and 3,500f. ($675) for a salon on the ground floor of the palace, which will contain about 60 square meters of floor space. Applications for space should be addressed to the Commissariat General, Colonial Exposition, 64 Rue Tiquetonne, Paris, and should be sent so as to be received, registered, and the desired space assigned before June 30, 1906.

Consul Murphy reports that it has been determined to hold an international maritime exhibition at Bordeaux in 1907, to commemorate the centennial anniversary of steam navigation and to illustrate the marvelous progress of a century in the art of shipbuilding. All that pertains to the construction of vessels of every type, their means of propulsion, equipment, armament, furniture, lighting, &c., will be exhibited. The industries of Bordeaux are to be given prominence, particularly the wines, oils, and food products for which the city is noted.

The exposition is to be held under the auspices of the Maritime League, (La Ligne Maritime Française,) of which Admiral Gervais of the French Navy is President. To meet the initial expenses, it has been determined to have a lottery, from which it is hoped to realize 4,000,000f., (about $800,000,) the Minister of the Interior having already given proper authorization to the scheme.

NEW SYSTEM AT PRINCETON.

Statistics Show That Preceptorial Methods Are Working Well.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., March 31.—With the general interest that has been manifested in the preceptorial system, which has been introduced at Princeton University, there has ben a curiosity as to just now it has worked during its first term. Statistics have been prepared by Librarian V. Lansing Collins, who shows that the new method has so increased the general collateral reading among the undergraduates that it has been necessary to employ three additional desk assistants.

In his article in the last issue of the Alumni Weekly Mr. Collins opens by quoting President Woodrow Wilson as follows: "The preceptorial system is meant to change the methods of the student's work; to make a reading man of him instead of a mere pupil receiving instruction." The librarian adds:

"Before the beginning of first term last September we laid our plans for the extra burden on the library and secured about 900 books for collateral reading in the different courses, to be taken out from the building only over night. During the first four months the circulation of these books was roughly estimated at 7,000.

"One of the most curious facts about the circulation is that during the football months of October and November, when the undergraduate world is supposed to be absorbed in the problems of the gridiron, we do our biggest business at the library. The horse in undergraduate disguise has been led to water and made to drink. Whether he will be made a drinking horse is another question. However, I suspect that three years hence the present freshman will be better read and better informed seniors than the present graduating class."

CAUGHT BY WOMAN SLEUTH.

Man Arrested in Store for Stealing Coat Said He Was a City Employe.

A young man, who said he was Frank T. Erland, an employe of the Dock Department, and lived at New Brighton, S. I., declared it was "all a horrible mistake" when House Detective Gertrude Thompson of a Sixth Avenue department store locked him up in the Tenderloin Station yesterday afternoon on the charge of having stolen a $35 overcoat.

Miss Thompson said she hadn't liked his looks, and following him she saw him have a new overcoat tried on. Then she noticed him changing things from the pockets of the old coat to the new and in a moment, while the eyes of the clerk were turned away, Erland went swiftly down the stairs. She followed him, grabbing him just after he had reached the sidewalk. She got a store porter to help her hold him. In his pockets were several small articles that bore the mark of the store on them, but which were not wrapped up.

GOSLIN WOULD RIVAL THE PANAMA CANAL

Issued Stock for a Ditch Crossing Central America.

"REALTY" OFFICES SEARCHED

Detectives Discover That the Fugitive "Promoter" Ran a Chain of Bucket Shops.

Central Office Detectives McConville and Wakefield obtained three search warrants from Magistrate Wahle yesterday afternoon with which they entered the offices of the Manhattan Realty Associates in the Morton Building, at 116 Nassau Street. These are the rooms where Alfred R. Goslin and his companions in the Western Gold Mining swindle wove nets of shady finance to entrap persons of strong and simple faith.

The detectives forced open three large desks and two safes. In one of the safes, bearing the name of "The New York Auto Car Company," they were confronted by an inner strong compartment, which withstood all the efforts of a professional opener. Another attempt to open it will be made to-morrow.

One of the desks belonged to Goslin, who is now a fugitive from justice. Another desk contained a lot of papers belonging to Charles M. Dunn, Goslin's associate. Bernhard Uhren, Henry Whiteman, and Charles Turner, all of whom have been mentioned in connection with Goslin's many swindles, occupied desks in the offices occupied by the Manhattan Realty Associates.

The detectives took away with them a patrol wagon load of papers and stock certificates used in Goslin's various enterprises. They also found large blocks of letterheads, circulars, literature, blank stock certificates, rubber stamps and seals belonging to at least half a dozen concerns whose names have no place among the reputable concerns in the city.

Among the concerns whose papers were found in Goslin's office were the "American Honduras Company," with $5,000,000 capital stock, and a scheme to build a canal to rival the Panama enterprise across the widest and most mountainous part of Central America. A bankbook that bore Dunn's name and showed a deposit of $600 for the company with the Empire Trust Company at 42 Broadway was found by McConville in Dunn's desk. Letterheads of the Light, Fuel and Power Company, with a main office at Sutton, West Va., and a branch office at 256 Broadway, were also discovered in Dunn's desk.

The detectives believe that they have found ample proof that Goslin, prior to his escape, was the backer of a chain of bucket shops in the financial district which were operated from the office in the Morton Building. There are two telephones in the office, neither of which appear in the telephone directory.

THE EVANS COLLECTION.

Exhibition of American Paintings at the Lotos Club.

The Chairman of the Committee on Art of the Lotos Club has had a congenial task, this time, of arranging an exhibition of pictures from his own collection at Montclair, N. J., where he dwells in the house formerly belonging to the late George Inness. There are in the collection of Mr. W. T. Evans ninety canvases, all by American painters. The exhibition opens formally on Saturday, and will be visible by card for several days after.

Among the figure pieces of note are John La Farge's "Visit of Nicodemus to Christ," remarkable for the ease and, one may say, affability of the figures, and resplendent with the rich dark reds and gold-shot greens of their robes; "The Reflection," by Benjamin R. Fitz, an excellent nude by a painter of great promise now no longer living; "Woman in Purple and Green," by Thomas W. Dewing, notable for the miniature brushwork on the face and the fine tones of the gown; "A Gentlewoman," by Alden Weir, which we had a chance to admire at the recent exhibition of Ten American Painters, and "Musa Regina," by Henry Oliver Walker, a nymph with sceptre in hand and red bird wings in her headdress, along with two half draped boys, one dancing, the other holding a book of music. "Sea Nymphs," by Ballard Williams, tread a measure in a circle on a wild shore, and "The Witch's Daughter," by F. S. Church, has lured a snow white dove to her hand. Here are the pretty light-haired child by George Fuller called "A Child of the Forest," and the handsome sleeping nude "Ariadne," by the late Wyatt Eaton. Other figures are "The Lute," by T. W. Dewing; "Perfume of Roses," by C. C. Curran; "Lady of Shalott," by John La Farge; "Music of the Woods," by Will H. Low; "The Kiss," by Walter Shirlaw, and "One Day in June," farmhouse interior with figures of man and maid, by William T. Smedley.

Landscapes and marines, however, outweigh in interest the figure work. Winslow Homer's "High Cliff, Coast of Maine"; William Morris Hunt's "Spouting of the Whale," Robert C. Minor's "Great Silas at Night," a foam-flecked rock in dubious moonlight, and George Bogert's "Sea and Rain," with its double touch of rainbow, are marines worth owning. Landscapes of a noble sort are Homer D. Martin's "Mussel Gatherers," Charles H. Davis's "Summer," with its superb clouds and well-felt distances; George Inness's "Sunshine and Clouds" and dark "September Afternoon," R. Swain Gifford's "Near the Ocean," J. Francis Murphy's "Path to the Village," and John H. Twachtman's "Niagara in Winter" and "End of Winter." Fine tonal work is seen in Louis Paul Dessar's moonlit thatch and shepherd in "The Sheepfold" and Horatio Walker's "Sheepyard—Moonlight," in Henry W. Ranger's "Cornfield," and Dwight W. Tryon's "November." Unusually good for R. Albert Blakelock is the moonlight, with a very big moon, and also his "Moonrise." A mystery of night sky and moonlit barque is Albert Ryder's "With Sloping Mast and Dipping Prow." No less than thirteen canvases by Alexander H. Wyant show how much Mr. Evans appreciates this reserved and delicate painter. Among them the most notable are "A Wet Afternoon," "Housatonic Valley," which has some of the color charm of Martin, and little masterpieces such as "A Gray Day" and "Birch Woods in the Adirondacks." There are characteristic canvases by W. Gedney Bunce, Charles Melville Dewey, Henry B. Fuller, Childe Hassam, George Inness, Jr., and the late Theodore Robinson. This is by no means an exhaustive review of what our living and recent painters have been doing, but it is remarkable to find a collector getting together so strong a gallery a few years after the sale of an earlier collection. The catalogue does not state in what degree these pictures represent the entire private gallery; the inference, however, is that it is a selection from a larger number.

Mr. Evans has just offered to the Metropolitan Museum a large canvas by Theodore Robinson, showing a peasant woman and cow in the bright daylight.

PICTURES AT THE SOCIETY.

A second examination of the exhibition made by the Society of American Artists at the Fine Arts, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street, only confirms the impression of the opening day that an exceptionally interesting lot of pictures have been brought together for the final show. The difference between this and the Academy's exhibition which went before is too marked to escape the notice of the most prejudiced. It may not be so marked as during the early years of the society; but it is enough to warrant one in the belief that the old Academy will be invigorated by the merger.

The society's room on the right of the entrance hall is apt to be considered a place where the less desirable pictures and sculptures find a resting-place, but this time the suspicion is falsified by facts. Here are some excellent portraits —that of Mrs. L. D. Alexander, Jr., by W. Sherman Potts, firmly and broadly painted, the hand on the hip beautifully drawn; that of Carlton T. Chapman by William J. Rice, seated full-face, and one by Miss Josephine Jessup of a lady not named, half-length, seated profile, called "The Black Plume." In bronze there is Hartley's bust of David Warfield in his rôle in "The Music Master." The bronze of a young greyhound, "Adonis," by Eli Harvey, rises to the rank of distinguished portraits. It is full of life, and yet suggests the formal seated effigies of the Egyptian god Anubis, with its erect ears and exact pose. On the pedestal are low reliefs. More could not be done for a human being. One feels the pleasure an artist has in modeling a creature of which he is fond. This is one of the most attractive bits of animal sculpture recently shown.

Oddly unfinished but full of "go" are Winter scenes like "The Hillside," by Jonas Lie, where the stunted trees and brambles emerge from a sweeping mass of white; "Central Park, Winter," by W. J. Glackens, in which the figures of children and adults are introduced with good effect, but the distance is too blue and indistinct. Very different is the smooth, finished work of Walter Nettleton, such as "Melting Snow," in which he reflects the brooding calm of the country. Particularly lovely in its refined color-scheme is his "Afternoon Light in Pine Valley." A very charming bit is Allen B. Talcott's "April." Here is one of George Hitchcock's Holland scenes, a tulip farm with acres of flowers in bands of different colors. A picture which should not be overlooked is "Capri, the Twisted Olive," by Allen Tucker, a view off the heights onto a stretch of turquois sea, with the gray olive writhing its curiously twisted trunk in the foreground to the right.

In the South Gallery pictures to note are "Arrangement in Yellow," by Charles W. Hawthorne, a young woman seated in a way that suggests the Japanese figures of saints, the figure issuing from terraces of yellow drapery in a quaint and original way, the whole somewhat sculptural in effect. Groll's "Sandstorm in Arizona" is an impressive view of the desert and his "Arizona Clouds" a fine bit of land and cloudscape. Frederick J. Waugh has a surf view called "The Seventh Wave," perhaps more interesting through its title than its execution. For while there is a legend about the ninth wave, (three times wave the third,) which is supposed to be taller and more dangerous than those which fall on the land before or behind it, there seems no authority for attributing greater power or magical strength to the seventh.

Some of the good portraits are Mrs. Chase's "Master Hyatt Mayer," Miss Lydia F. Emmet's "Boy in White," which took the Julia A. Shaw Prize; Carroll Beckwith's portrait of Newbold Morris, and Miss Jean McLane's "The Locker." Interesting is "The Girl with Pearls," by Dana R. Pond, who has two more figures in the Central Gallery, the one a Spanish dancer, remarkable for the red openwork shawl over a white dress, but not effective as to the face, which lacks color. Brilliant lips and cheeks, reinforced by artificial means, belong to a costume like this, so the picture suffers in consequence. "Portrait of Miss Woodbury," another canvas by the same artist, is just the reverse; the face is well painted and expressive, but the draperies are not quite up to the mark.

One should not leave the South Gallery without admiring the big bronze polar bears by F. G. R. Roth, full of burly life and showing an excellent feeling for composition and mass. This is the largest bit of animal work which Mr. Roth has shown. Karl Anderson's "Student of Steinlen" is a nice bit of vivid brushwork, perhaps unnecessarily crowded into the canvas, but well managed as to shadows and very pleasantly realistic as regards the figure of the smoking artist. A bronze bust of Elihu Vedder, by Charles Keck, and a fine decorative marine, by Charles H. Woodbury—"Floating Ice"—should be looked at, the latter from a considerable distance, so powerful are its carrying qualities. An oil study of the nude by George R. Barse, Jr., called "Echo," strikes a note of richness and shows a pleasure in line that puts it apart from other work here by the same artist. In the Central Gallery a delightful "old-fashioned" figure is Mrs. Adèle Herter's "Lady with a Blue Dress," seated on a sofa, clad in the costume of a bygone age.

In the West Room, an attractive landscape is Allen B. Talcott's "Afternoon on the High Palisades," giving a raking view of the cliffs. Here one may note Charles Vezin's unambitious "Sunset," an excellent lifelike portrait of Mr. Hugo Ballin by J. Campbell Phillips, a good townscape by Paul Cornoyer, "Washington Square, Afterglow," and a design for the new Police Headquarters by Francis Newton, called "Battle Watch in New Amsterdam." Not to be missed are Edward Steichen's "Nocturne of the White Lady," Jonas Lie's "Gale," and Albert Herter's portrait of Robert King, the last mentioned in some respects one of the best portraits in the exhibition.

The East Gallery has a charming woman's head and child's front face, called "The Seer," one of a series of three portraits by Sergeant Kendall. "Winter Morning," by Charles Foster, and "The Old Manor House," a snowscape by F. W. Hutchinson; "Late Autumn," by Cullen Yates, and "Beech Woods," by R. M. Shurtleff, are worth lingering over. As to portraits here, note that of Prof. Osborn, in brilliant college gown, by Kenneth Frazier, and the bust portrait of Mr. William B. Northrop, by Richard F. George.

The exhibition will continue until Sunday, April 22.

DR. KITTREDGE MAY RESIGN.

Pastor of Madison Avenue Reformed Church Is Going Abroad.

A rumor was current yesterday that the Rev. Dr. Abbott E. Kittredge, who has been for sixteen years pastor of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, Madison Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, is to resign that charge. The report was that he is soon to make a tour of the world.

That the report had some foundation was admitted by Dr. Kittredge. He said, however, that he has not resigned from the Madison Avenue pastorate, but admitted that it was at least possible that he might not return to the church. His trip, he said, is to commence next Autumn, and he will not return to this country until March or April of next year. Dr. Kittredge said that he had reached no decision as to whether he would leave the Madison Avenue Church permanently.

OWN YOUR OWN WIRELESS.

Pocket Sender and Umbrella the Requisites—Not Yet, but Soon, Maybe.

Every man his own wireless station with the aid of an umbrella, is the promise made yesterday by an officer of the American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company. He made this announcement while telling some details the company had forgotten to give on Friday concerning its efforts to reach Ireland from America by wireless.

By the pocket wireless apparatus, it is declared, any one can, with a knowledge of the Morse alphabet, telegraph from any point in New York City to Coney Island and possibly to distances further away, even to ships at sea. This apparatus might be ready in a few weeks, it was asserted.

Dr. Lee De Forest, the inventor of the system that bears his name, is now in Ireland, the guest of Lord Armstrong, President of the British branch of the company, and already Dr. De Forest, the officers of the company say, has received 500 words sent from this side to apparatus placed temporarily on top of Lord Armstrong's castle in South Ireland. Messages, the De Forest people say, are going only one way just now, but before long, it is predicted, they will be going in both directions.

Abraham White, the President of the American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company, gave out the statement about the pocket wireless machines and the possibility of utilizing umbrellas as antennae in the sending of messages from a person's pocket to stations and ships, miles away. In a few weeks, he explained, there will be an exhibition of the machines, so that any one can see how easy it is to tell your troubles to somebody twenty miles or more away.

As to the transmission of 500 words out of 1,000 across the Atlantic, one of the attorneys for the De Forest Company declared yesterday afternoon that the report was true in every respect. The words, which numbered, to be exact, 572, were sent to Dursey Head, in Southwest Ireland, Wednesday night last, it was stated. The Manhattan Beach station was the station used on this side. It is one of the most powerful on the Atlantic.

TAKES ISTHMIAN CHURCHES.

Episcopal Body in America Relieves the Church of England.

An agreement signed within a few days transfers the Church of England work in the Canal Zone of the Isthmus of Panama to the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. The signers of the concordat were the Bishop of Honduras, the Right Rev. Dr. G. A. Ormsby; the Archbishop of Jamaica, the Most Rev. Dr. Enos Nuttall, and the Presiding Bishop of the Church in America, Bishop Tuttle of Missouri.

Under Archdeacon Hendrick mission stations were established along the Panama Railroad, and on the coming of Americans to dig the canal they were strengthened. There has long been a pretentious Episcopal Church at Colon, and a year ago a small church was opened at Panama. There is a communicant list of about 1,000.

TOURISTS IN ITALY WARNED.

Exportation of Antiques Is Forbidden by the Law.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The following report from Consul Caughy of Messina regarding regulations of the Italian Custom House has special interest to tourists in that country:

"According to the regulations now in force all goods coming from Taormina, in Sicily, for shipment as freight to any foreign port, upon the arrival at the Italian Custom House in Messina must be sent at the shipper's expense to the museum either at Palermo or Syracuse for examination by experts, to discover if the cases contain any antiques. The declaration that they do not contain such articles bears no weight whatsoever. If an antique is found which comes under the law which forbids its exportation it is seized. If it is of a class that can be exported, by payment of an export duty, it is released when that requirement is complied with. If, however, this article be found in a package which was entered for exportation upon a declaration stating that nothing antique was contained therein the shipper is subject to a fine which may be as much as $154.

"I have now on my hands a case in point, that of an American artist who had lived at Taormina, who, upon his departure, packed all his belongings and sent them to Messina for shipment to New York. He declared the contents as household effects. When examined there were found numerous antiques of Italian origin, but of little value, and which were not all purchased in Italy. The authorities decided that they could be exported upon payment of the duty, but that he must pay the fine for false declaration.

"For this reason it would be well if Americans contemplating visiting Taormina be warned of the existing conditions. The antiquarian who sells a piece of old furniture will naturally not find it to his interest to inform his customer of the regulation; therefore I would suggest that the only safe method for the purchaser to pursue would be to stipulate that payment is only to be made when the bills of lading of the steamer upon which his goods are embarked are placed in his hands. Last season this office received numerous complaints from purchasers who, only too late, discovered that even after they had paid for their goods they could not export them.

"The conditions at present are such, that a person not conversant with the law may purchase a genuine antique from a dealer only to discover that the exportation of his purchase is actually prohibited, and his only recourse is to make a legal claim against the seller, which is a most expensive proceeding."

Butt Must Answer Grand Jury.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 31.—State Senator Butt, accused of accepting a bribe and who refused to answer questions propounded by the Grand Jury on the ground that he might incriminate himself, must answer, according to a decision of the Supreme Court to-day. The decision stipulates that his answers cannot be used against him when his case comes to trial.

GIVES $25,000 TO AID CRIPPLES' SEASIDE HOME

[illegible]00 FROM R. F. CUTTING

[illegible] Association Is Raising $250,000, and Must Have the Whole Sum in Hand by July 1.

An anonymous donor yesterday contributed $25,000 to the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor to aid in the building of the first American Seaside Hospital for Crippled Children. The hospital is to be built as soon as the association has obtained the necessary $250,000, toward which sum John D. Rockefeller has given $125,000, with a proviso that the entire amount must be raised before July 1.

The association received also last week $10,000 from R. Fulton Cutting, its President. Henry Goldman added $2,000 to the sum; John S. Huyler contributed $1,000; Jacob H. Schiff, $5,000; Mortimer L. Schiff, $5,000; Percy R. Pyne, $5,000, and Felix M. Warburg, $2,000.

Sea Breeze, the temporary hospital for crippled children at Coney Island, accommodates forty-four children. But in New York City there are 4,500 maimed and crippled children, while in the United States the number reaches 60,000. Not all of these are sick; not all may be cured. Hundreds may, however.

The sea air has long been recognized by medical authorities to contain curative properties for consumption which had not attacked the throat or lungs. Because of this principle Europe has eighty-one seaside hospitals. America has but one, Sea Breeze, and that was founded by an organization whose business is not to found or maintain hospitals.

At Sea Breeze, even the bed patients are out all day long, no matter what the weather may be, while to be indoors at night to sleep is only being under a roof, for the windows are taken from the casements and the wind sweeps through the rooms continuously.

Thus it is that nightcaps are the style at Sea Breeze, where mittens are also worn to bed. Woolen jackets are donned, too, for the mercury may drop very low before morning. Sea Breeze's front yard is the beach, so, of course, there is the sand heap all the time and all the great monuments and houses that childhood can build. A Punch and Judy show adds to the attractiveness of the beach.

There are school and kindergarten for tots who are well enough to study, but the tots who are well enough to study, but they are within doors but not within windows, for here also must fresh air be introduced in unlimited quantities at all times. City school children would freeze in this room, but the tots at Sea Breeze who do not love to study, make it their lasting complaint that they cannot because the room is so "stuffy."

Five hearty meals are served each day to these tots, who used for the most part to live on strong tea or coffee and bread.

Health Commissioner Darlington said only yesterday: "I love to go to Sea Breeze, for there I can forget absolutely that there are sickness and suffering in the world. This may seem to be paradoxical when one considers that every child there has been deformed through suffering in some way, and that almost all are wearing braces of one description or another. But, despite their physical handicap, the tots at Sea Breeze are such natural children and such happy ones."

MAY BUY ANOTHER STORE.

Associated Merchants' Company Plans a $10,000,000 Stock Increase.

The purchase of another large department store in New York by the Associated Merchants' Company, which owns the store of James McCreery & Co. and a controlling interest in the Adams Dry Goods Company and the H. B. Claflin Company, is foreshadowed in a circular sent to the stockholders yesterday.

The stockholders are notified that at the annual meeting to be held in Hartford on April 18 they will be called on to vote for an increase of the second preferred stock from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. This stock, which it is proposed to sell at par for cash, will furnish funds for the acquisition of new properties.

"If a large negotiation should eventuate," says the circular, "the liberal amount of cash held by the company would not nearly suffice to pay the purchase price. It is the sense of the Directors that an issue of second preferred stock at the present time may be more advantageous to the company than an issue of first preferred stock. Moreover, the proceeds of the first preferred stock cannot be used to pay for the good-will of any business, and in an important purchase now contemplated a substantial payment for good-will would be necessary."

A SUIT FOR $5,367,740.

C. D. Brown Brings It Against the Memphis, El Paso & Pacific R. R.

An action involving over $5,000,000 was commenced yesterday in the United States Circuit Court by Henry J. McCormack, a lawyer, of 27 Pine Street, representing Charles D. Brown of this city, who asks that a judgment of $5,367,740 be awarded him against the Mehphis, El Paso & Pacific Railroad Company, a Texas corporation.

According to the complaint, the defendant corporation in February, 1867, issued 2,400 first mortgage bonds of $1,000, bearing 6 per cent. interest and payable Jan. 1, 1890, in New York City or Paris, at the option of the holder. The bonds were secured by a mortgage on the company's property, executed to A. G. Curtin, Paul S. Forbes, and S. M. Swenson, as trustees.

The plaintiff alleges that he became the owner of 1,667 of the bonds and that no interest has been paid on the securities since 1869. He therefore asks judgment for his principal of $1,667,000, and interest to date. The interest at 6 per cent., not compounded, amounts to $3,700,740, making a total of $5,367,740.

Yale Beats Hamilton Fish.

CARMEL, N. Y., March 31.—According to returns received here to-night from the Republican caucuses in Putnam County, Assemblyman John R. Yale has a majority of one vote over Hamilton Fish among the delegates to the County Convention. The deciding district was Ludingtonville. The campaign has been hotly waged, and there was much interest in the result.

NEW GLASSMAKING METHOD.

Belgian Invention for the Manufacture of Glass Plates.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Vice Consul Bock of Nuremberg reports a new invention in the glass plate industry, concerning which he writes:

"Should it really possess the advantages claimed it would cause serious damage to the blowing glass plate industry in this district, where three-quarter glass plates are chiefly manufactured. So far two methods have been employed in the manufacture of crystal plate glass and mirror and window glass—namely, that of casting and blowing. The new method is the invention of Mr. Fourcault, a Belgian, who has sold his patent to the European syndicate of plate glass manufacturers for $952,000. This syndicate consists of German, French, and Belgian manufacturers and one Bohemian factory.

"Until now, in the making of window glass, the molten substance has been blown into cylinders by glassmakers' pipes and subsequently flattened, while in the making of plate glass the viscid mass was cast from the pots and rolled. The new invention draws the molten substance from the pot and conducts it between rollers lying side by side. Seventeen pairs of these rollers are built up towerlike above the pot. The liquid mass cools on its way between the rows of rolls and comes out from them polished on both sides in any desired thickness, (this being regulated by the relative position of the rollers,) beautifully flattened and ready for use.

"At present dimensions of from 157.48 inches to 39.37 inches can be made, but experiments are being conducted to allow of the manufacture of from 98.42 inches to 68.90 inches as well. It is believed that this invention will bring about a revolution in the trade. One early result would by that the manufacturing of plate glass 157.48 inches and less would undergo an entire change, as the making of glass plates would come chiefly within the scope of the plate glass furnaces."

HUDSON AND THE DUTCH.

Before and After the Voyage of 1609 He Sailed Under British Auspices.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. George Wharton Edwards, in a letter recently published in THE TIMES has made the statement that Henry Hudson spelled his name Hendrijk upon several occasions, and that he swore allegiance to the Dutch. To support these statements Mr. Edwards cites but does not quote Samuel Purchas, and while referring to Volume IV. of "Purchas, His Pilgrimes," (or Pilgrimage,) omits to mention the edition to which he refers.

I think that no historical student will deny that the Rev. Samuel Purchas is about as poor an authority on spelling as can well be found. For many facts relating to Hudson's voyages he is the best because the only authority, having been the editor of Hakluyt's posthumous papers. The best of accepted modern authorities on the subject is Dr. Asher, who edited Purchas and made a careful analysis of his work. Henry C. Murphy published half a century ago a very thorough and scholarly book called "Henry Hudson in Holland."

Neither in Asher, Murphy, Van Meteren, de Laet, nor elsewhere in a score of books that I have had the pleasure of consulting have I found any warrant for thinking that Henry Hudson either changed his name or swore allegiance to the Dutch.

Mr. Edwards makes Hudson's first recorded voyage in 1607, which was undertaken under the employment of the "Muscovy or Russian" company of London, subsequent to the time when he "swore allegiance to the Dutch." That he did sail upon his third voyage in 1609 under the direct orders of the Dutch East Indian Company is true, and it is no less true that he sailed again for his own countrymen in the following year. The statement that he reached the American continent in latitude 44 and, sailing south, discovered the noble river that bears his name is only partly true. There is no evidence that Hudson discovered the river that bears his name. We honor him because he was the first European who thoroughly explored it.

If Mr. Edwards had given more attention to the journal of Juet, our only authority for the greater part of this (1609) voyage, he would not have fallen into the error of stating that Hudson ascended the river in a pinnace. Juet distinctly describes the trip up the river in the Half Moon as far as the head of navigation, beyond which the boat was sent. Is it possible that the carelessness with which your correspondent has relied upon his memory in this paragraph may indicate a similar inaccuracy in all his citations from Purchas?

REPUBLICANS EXPECT A DEMOCRATIC HOUSE

Leaders Take Note of Signs and Portents in the Country.

WORRIED BY PUBLIC UNREST

Apprehensive of an Uprising Against the President and Their Party —The Labor Factor.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—In the judgment of some of the shrewdest politicians in Congress there are many signs which point to a Democratic victory in the Congressional elections next Fall. Republicans who keep in close touch with political conditions in their own and other States do not hesitate to admit that such is the outlook, and profess to be able to see no effective remedy for improving the situation at this time.

It seems that Republican leaders realize the threatened changes to their party more keenly than the Democrats recognize the opportunity which confronts their party. The latter hope for the election of a Democratic House, but are not able to present as strong and convincing arguments to show that this may be the result of the election as are the Republican leaders themselves; and this would tend to indicate that the latter are more observant of menacing omens than the former.

The Republican politicians fear that the public unrest which is noticeable everywhere in the country and is being shown in more ways than one, augurs ill for their continued control of the lower branch of Congress. They apprehend that the various investigations of corporations and municipal scandals presage a revulsion of popular feeling against the party in power which will manifest itself at the Congressional elections in November.

Another contributing factor in the distressing prospects for their party is the dissatisfaction of the American Federation of Labor with Congress and the President, and its recent announcement that it intends to take an active part in politics next Fall. Some public men have been disposed to treat lightly the threat of the federation, but the practiced and trained politicians—men who have managed campaigns and understand the palpable influence of a trades union agitation—look upon it with deep concern.

The restiveness of big corporations on account of the activity of the Department of Justice in seeking to enforce anti-trust laws, it is feared, will react against the Republicans in the approaching campaign. In this connection it may be remarked also that the President is held responsible in a large measure for the tendency of Republicans to break away from their old party moorings and vote with the opposition.

The Republican stalwarts in Congress are constantly inveighing among themselves against Mr. Roosevelt because they say he has filled the minds of a great many people with the virtue of independence in politics and imbued them with a spirit of hostility against machine politics so called. They point to the damage done to the Republican cause in Ohio last Fall by Secretary of War Taft as an illustration of the havoc wrought in the party generally. Preachments against the "organization" in politics have tended to undermine the foundations of the Republican Party in many of the States, these men contend, and they are ready now to lay a portion of the blame for the anticipated election of a Democratic House of Representatives at the door of the White House.

While these Republicans do not admit that the party ought to suffer on account of the contributions of life insurance companies to the Republican National Committee in 1904, they acknowledge that this disclosure, taken in connection with the other insurance scandals, has reflected seriously upon the party in power, and will have its effect upon the next Congressional campaign.

In addition to these palpable evidences of popular disgruntlement they feel there are intangible manifestations of dissatisfaction with the Republicans, which to their uneasy minds foreshadow disaster next November.

IGNORANCE AND COMMON SENSE.

Two Incompatible Qualities—Replies to Mr. Kerpen's Letter.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

According to the standards set forth by Mr. Kerpen I should be the most miserable, unhappy person on this sphere. My parents were both college graduates and gave me a quadruplex college education.

Strange to say, however, I have great pleasure in my acquaintance with the fine arts, literature, astronomy, palaeontology, Latin, Greek, calculus, and bacteriology. I wouldn't sell out for the combined wealth of Carnegie and Rockefeller.

Of all professions, mine of civil engineer keeps me hustling about in the world more than most, yet curiously enough I never was shunned by anybody as an "educated fool" at home or abroad, and I have been as far as Africa. Nor have I ever found any difficulty in meeting any man, however ignorant, on his own level, in fact, that is part of my daily work. True education is more than information. A. B., B. S., A. M., C. E.

New York, March 20, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Kerpen quotes a proverb in support of his view that education is more of a burden than a support—"an educated fool." There are no "educated" fools—there may be "learned" fools—education implies an understanding of the higher responsibilities of a man to his brother—of the higher morality, of the higher life.

No doubt there are men who would be satisfied with a sort of perpetual meal ticket—and happiness consists of contentment with one's lot in life—but is a mere sufficiency of creature comforts a noble ambition? And this is the sort of "happiness" which is the supreme end to be gained by men such as described by Mr. Kerpen—"the very lowest in life, who have less to bother them than those on a higher intellectual plane."

In the same way, "ignorance combined with common sense" would constitute all that is desirable in a Subway guard or a bricklayer; but there are no "most educated men who are impracticable in their methods," as Mr. Kerpen asserts—real education consists mainly in the training of the mind to grapple with the problems of a work-a-day world.

Mr. Kerpen must learn to distinguish between pedantry and education.

THE MUNICIPAL COURTS.

Rotation of Judges in Itself Pernicious and Undesirable.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with considerable interest the letter published in this morning's TIMES written by Mr. Howard A. Gans with reference to the bill now pending to abolish the rotation system in the Municipal Court.

Mr. Gans seems to be opposed to the bill and to be in favor of the rotation system mainly upon the ground that the Judges of the Municipal Court are not honest and cannot be trusted, and the cure for this, he seems to think, is to keep the Judges moving around from court to court, and this seems to be the general trend of the argument of all the advocates of the rotation system.

This question is affected by so many considerations that it is impossible within the limits of a letter of this kind to discuss them all in detail, but I feel impelled to answer at least the argument that, because the Municipal Court Judges are assumed to be dishonest, therefore they should be compelled to rotate.

In the first place, I think that Mr. Gans assumes entirely too much when he intimates that the Judges of the Municipal Court are dishonest. I have had occasion in times gone by to appear before most, if not nearly all, of the Municipal Court Judges, and I am not at all satisfied that they are dishonest, as intimated by Mr. Gans, simply because Mr. Bolte, who was formerly a Judge of the Municipal Court, was proved to be so.

The present rotation system is due to the conditions in the court formerly presided over by Mr. Bolte, and when it was originally suggested I took the position that I take now that the way to get rid of Mr. Bolte was not to keep shifting him around from place to place, so that he could impose his dishonest, unfair, and injudicial methods upon the citizens of other districts, but should be compelled to serve in his own district until such time as sufficient evidence was accumulated which would warrant in having him dismissed as a Municipal Court Justice.

To my mind, the same argument applies to-day to those men who are now Judges of the Municipal Court. If there is one of them who is dishonest or incapable he should be compelled to sit in the court to which he was elected, and if found to be dishonest and incapable he should be dismissed in the same manner that Mr. Bolte was.

But, though I am not prepared to say that there are any Judges on the Municipal Court bench who are dishonest, I feel justified in saying that there are several who are certainly lazy, notoriously so; and the same principle applies to those Judges as applies to dishonest Judges, that they should be compelled to remain in their own courts, and when sufficient evidence has been accumulated an application should be made to remove them from the bench.

The main support back of the rotation system is the support of certain Judges of the Municipal Court who are anxious to be relieved of the heavy work in the courts to which they were elected, and all this talk about keeping dishonest Judges moving around is simply a means of supporting the effort of these few Judges who desire to rotate.

The result of this system of rotation is to create confusion, dissatisfaction, and a congested condition of calendars in some of the courts, which is an outrage and a disgrace and unfair to the citizens of the district.

My attention has been particularly called to this condition in the Ninth Municipal District, presided over by Mr. Justice Fallon, an earnest, hard-working, and competent Judge. I had occasion to be in his court not very long ago, and I found that it took more than two hours to call the calendar, and that it was impossible to actually reach a case for trial unless the litigants remained in court and sat around sometimes as long as two or three days at a time. This condition was caused solely and entirely by the rotation system. The Judges of other courts who come to the Ninth District have no responsibility for the conditions existing in the Ninth Judicial District. They try as many cases as they conveniently can, and it is no concern of theirs that when the month is over the calendar is crowded, or that many cases have remained undisposed of; and the condition is caused particularly by the fact that every once in a while there comes to that court one of the Judges whom I have characterized as lazy, who, instead of starting to call the calendar at 9 o'clock, starts to call it at 10 or even later, and will frequently spend several hours for lunch and surely not stay a minute longer than he absolutely is compelled to in the afternoon.

The result is that the citizens of the Ninth Judicial District suffer by it. The citizens of that judicial district elected Judge Fallon as Judge of that court, and the responsibility is on him to keep up with the business of the court, and the responsibility should be on him. But you cannot fasten responsibility on Judge Fallon when he is confronted with a two-hour calendar on coming back to his court after an absence of six months.

In this connection it must also be borne in mind that the Judge of the court is responsible for the clerks and attendants, and he must certify at the end of the month that the clerks and attendants have properly performed their duties. How can a Judge of the Ninth District Court, or of some other district court, certify that the employes of that court have performed their duty during the month when the Judge has had no opportunity to even see them, and has been working in a court miles away?

There is still another point to be considered in this connection. Take as an illustration the Eleventh District Court, presided over by Judge Worcester. Judge Worcester has lived most of his life in the upper west side of the City of New York, and is familiar with the character and language of the people in that district. Under the rotation system he is asked to preside over a court in the Fifth Municipal District, which is on the lower east side of the city.

The difference between the Eleventh District and the Fifth District is the same difference as there is between a district composed mainly of English-speaking citizens and a district composed mainly of a conglomerate mass of foreign-speaking people of all kinds, characters, and degrees.

Judge Worcester is unfamiliar with the language spoken by the people of the Fifth District; he is unfamiliar with their customs and with their habits, and it is almost impossible for Judge Worcester to determine where the truth lies on a disputed question of fact between people in the Fifth Municipal District, because of the fact that he is not able to judge the witness because of his unfamiliarity with the people themselves.

As I said at the outset, the way to dispose of dishonest or incapable Judges is not to keep them on the bench and moving them around, but to put them off the bench.

MORO BANDS' FANATICISM.

Gov. Scott Says There Is No Course But to Hunt Down and Kill Them.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 23.—Major H. L. Scott, Governor of the Sulu Archipelago, is about to return to his post, and made a parting call on the President today. As he left the White House he said that he though Gen. Wood's attack on the Moros at Mount Dajo would improve conditions in Sulu.

"I hope," he said, "that our soldiers will not again be compelled to give battle to the Moro bands. The chief of the band that was exterminated the other day is perfectly friendly to this country. He tried hard to keep the band from continuing their warfare against our Government in the islands, but was unable to do so. They were determined on disobeying all law, on killing and acting to suit themselves, and they did not propose to surrender.

"They preferred death to surrender. See this hand?" and Major Scott held out his right hand, which showed two fingers missing. "Well, I tried fifty times to get the leader of the band that gave me these wounds to surrender. While I lay in the hospital three months I sent him word often, asking him to surrender and assuring him fair treatment. His name was Panglim Hassam. He disregarded every message we sent and returned defiant and insulting messages. Nothing remained but to hunt him and his band down and engage them in battle. He was finally killed. That is the sort of character we must deal with among these fanatical people. Not a soldier of this country wants to shed blood, and every soldier regrets the necessity for hostile action."

Labor's Anti-Injunction Bill

A direct bid for Anarchy

The Labor Trust is pressing before Congress an anti-injunction measure to take from federal courts any power to issue restraining orders or injunctions to prevent injury threatened to property or personal rights.

The present power of the Courts established by the people is used for the protection of property and person.

The Labor Trust want all obstacles to their lawlessness removed for a purpose, plain enough to any peace-loving American.

LABOR TRUST ANARCHY.

Citizens Must Rise for Protection.

As the law of the land now stands, courts can issue restraining orders frequently called "injunctions" to prevent acts by strikers or others that may result in destruction of property or interference with the rights of free American citizens.

The labor unions object to any power that will prevent their members from wreaking vengeance on men or property when their "orders" are not implicitly obeyed, therefore they have the astonishing audacity and impudence to "demand" of Congress an "Anti-Injunction" law to take from the courts any power to thus protect the people. When they succeed in this there will be

No use for the children to ask that the father be allowed to work for them in safety.

No use for either mother or children to hope for any power to prevent insult, assault, or the home being blown up by labor union strikers.

No use for a property owner to ask for any order to prevent union strikers from destroying it.

No use for any community to apply to the courts to preserve order and prevent the rioting and destruction by strikers and other union men.

The operations of the labor trust (unions) during the past five years in America include the most appalling list of crimes imaginable. Over five thousand free workmen were assaulted and injured in Chicago in one year. Hundreds of murders have been committed and millions of dollars of property destroyed.

Is this true or not? Simply turn to the files of the daily newspapers and observe that scarcely a day passes but some act of bloody violence is done by "union" men. The leaders of the labor trust are quick to deny, in the papers, any complicity in these crimes, but the actual facts when brought out show that the crimes are committed by the labor union members and frequently in conspiracy with the leaders.

The labor papers, including the yellow journals, during the civil war inaugurated in Colorado during the operations of the Western Federation of Miners, bitterly denounced the state military authorities for attempting to preserve the peace, and the lives of the state officials were threatened, and frequent attempts made upon them.

Finally ex-Governor Steunenberg was blown to pieces by dynamite, and the president and other officers of this labor trust are charged with being among the conspirators who arranged for his murder, and are now held for trial in Idaho.

The denials are useless and the labor unions are compelled to bear the denunciation of the public until the union men cease such criminal acts and the leaders cease supporting and aiding them. The public is not deceived by announcements that the leaders counsel against lawlessness when the American Federation of Labor or labor union money is freely spent to support lawless strikers and defend them in the courts when apprehended. The people must see "union" money spent freely to convict criminal strikers before they will have any sort of faith in the honesty of union talk in favor of law. Every act so far points all too clearly in an opposite direction, and the common newspaper announcement of a strike includes a statement of the steps taken to protect the people from violence and destruction of property, showing that strikers are considered aliens and probable criminals when they dare be.

Any man has a right to quit work, but no man has a right to do criminal acts to try and force some one to hire him.

It is the duty of every employer to get the record of each man who applies for work and absolutely cut out the agitator and violent, discontented man with criminal instincts.

Altogether too many labor unions contain criminals ready whenever their demands are refused to commit crime, and the peace and safety of the common citizens demand protection through the courts with their free right to issue restraining orders.

The operations of these criminals are certainly not in the interest of the common man, and so long as labor unions conduct their affairs in a manner that puts power in the hands of criminals, so long will such labor unions be a menace to the community.

The labor trust must be forced to conduct its affairs on the lines of common commercial law. A labor union has labor to sell. It has a right to offer that labor for sale the same as any commodity is offered for sale in a legitimate commercial way, and the buyer of labor has a right to refuse to purchase. Then the owners of labor have a right to offer it peaceably to other purchasers, and sell where they can obtain the best price, but all of this must be done without resort to crime, and the people must insist upon the labor unions conducting their affairs in a peaceful and legitimate manner.

Upright, liberty-loving, desirable citizens who are unfortunate enough to be connected with criminally conducted labor unions have a right and owe it as a duty to other citizens to withdraw from such conspiracies.

There is a way to obtain good prices and good conditions for labor without resort to crime, and the common citizen must demand a cessation of all these criminal procedures.

Suppose an employer should hire an "entertainment committee" to go out and dynamite the house of a man because he struck and refused to come back to work and incidentally this "committee" beat the man to death, then the employer planning to attack the property of other strikers would apply for an "anti-injunction bill" to take away from the courts any power to issue an injunction to prevent such outrage and allow the employer free rein to carry on such lawlessness without restraint. What a howl would go up from the labor unions and in fact from every lawabiding citizen protesting against such a bid for anarchy and unrestrained lawlessness. And yet the employer has exactly the same right to do this as the labor unions which are now using every power in their ranks to bring about the emasculation of the courts established for the protection of the people.

The desire of the labor unions to tie the hands of the courts and prevent them from protecting the people is plain evidence of a desire to do criminal acts without interference of the courts, and it is the duty of every citizen to write his Congressman and Senator to vote to support the courts in their power to issue restraining orders. In other words to defeat this anti-injunction bill presented by these anarchists seeking to make crime safe and easy. Citizens must act to protect themselves and their property. Let every man—merchant, workman, doctor, lawyer, and farmer—write his protest to his Senator and Congressman at once in order to protect the people and save this country from such a blot from the hands of the anarchists.

BIGGEST RIVER LINER LAUNCHED AT NEWBURG

Little Miss Olcott Names the Hendrick Hudson with Water.

DOVES FLY AS VESSEL GLIDES

Many Innovations in Construction of the Vessel and for the Comfort of 5,000 Passengers.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWBURG, March 31.—The new Hudson River Day Line steamboat Hendrick Hudson was launched here at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the shipyard of the Thomas S. Marvel Company. Little Katherine Olcott, the twelve-year-old daughter of Elmer E. Olcott, President of the Hudson River Day Line, broke the traditional bottle—containing, however, water instead of champagne—over the bows of the steamboat, and at once the vessel glided into the waters of the river that henceforth is to be her home.

At the same moment cannon boomed from the deck of the Hendrick Hudson's sister ship, the New York; whistles shrieked, the crowds on the banks cheered lustily, the pleasure craft on the river dipped their flags as a salute to the newcomer, while a number of doves, liberated on the deck at the moment of launching, according to the Japanese custom, circled about in the air overhead.

With her nose sadly out of joint, owing to the prominence of her new and larger rival, the New York, until now the pride of the Day Line, left her pier at the foot of Forty-second Street, New York, at 11:30 o'clock this morning, covered with flags from bow to stern and carrying over 500 invited guests of the steamboat company. The New York had been rudely aroused from her Winter sleep a month earlier than usual to take part in the triumph of her rival.

Among those she carried on board was Chales H. Haswell, the dean of New York engineers, who was born in 1800, and remembers Robert Fulton's Clermont, the first Hudson steamboat. At West Point a short stop was made to take several officers on board, and then the New York steamed straight for her destination, which she reached exactly on schedule time at 2:30 o'clock.

At Newburg a crowd of several thousands of people lined the bank of the river, while a dozen steamboats, launches, and tugs filled with sightseers and gay with many-colored bunting circled about the Marvel shipyard, awaiting the launching of the Hendrick Hudson, the great red hull of which loomed up conspicuously over the surrounding sheds and wharves.

Little Miss Olcott, with about a dozen others, mounted the platform built around the bows of the new ship. At a given signal workmen knocked away the supports under the keel, the great ship creaked and groaned as if anxious to be free, and then glided smoothly into the water. With a parting salute to her triumphant rival, the superseded queen of the Hudson turned sadly back toward New York.

The Hendrick Hudson is the largest river steamboat in the world. Her length is 400 feet over all, and her depth 14 feet. Seven steel bulkheads will make her practically unsinkable, and the inclosures around the boilers will be of heavy steel plating, eliminating all danger of fire.

Many innovations have been introduced in the construction of the Hendrick Hudson. Her shaft will be placed under the main deck, and she will be equipped with an inclined, three-cylinder, short-stroke engine, and wheels twenty-nine feet in diameter. Vibration will be reduced to a minimum, as the power will be evenly distributed. The entire craft will be built on the plan of a New York skyscraper, a rigid framework of steel acting as a support for the upper decks.

The walking beam, which has always been a feature of Hudson steamboats, will be missing on the new vessel. Eight large boilers will supply steam enough to drive the vessel at the rate of twenty-three to twenty-five miles an hour.

In the matter of internal arrangements everything possible has been done for comfort and convenience. The Hendrick Hudson will accommodate 5,000 passengers. There will be a doctor aboard on each trip, likewise stenographers to take dictation from business men. Another feature will be a photographic dark room, where tourists may develop their pictures. Not only will the orchestra be so placed that fully three thousand passengers may be within hearing, but a curtained recess will be provided for chorus singing, either by professionals or patrons of the line.

The Hendrick Hudson will be put in commission on or about Aug. 1.

HAPPENINGS AT TUXEDO.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, March 31.—Although the weather was rather disagreeable to-day, a large number came out to Tuxedo for the week-end entertainment. There were also several arrivals for the opening season of the trout fishing, but fishing was only possible in the brooks leading to the lakes, as the ice on the latter interfered.

Mrs. Charles Coster and Miss Coster arrived early in the day, opening their Tuxedo villa for over Sunday, and entertained a party of young people. Some of the guests included Miss Mortimer, Miss Hull, F. S. Witherbee, W. R. Stewart, Jr., H. C. Pell, Jr., and others of the Tuxedo colony.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen H. P. Pell came out to the Jones villa and entertained a large party at dinner to-night. Among others who had dinners at their cottages were Mr. and Mrs. Grenville Kane, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Whitehouse, Mr. and Mrs. William Kent, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Hull, Miss Dominick, and Mr. and Mrs. T. Wyman Porter.

Mrs. John G. Neeser, who is stopping at the clubhouse for a brief visit, entertained a party at dinner, among whom were Miss Ogden, Miss Depeyster, Miss Neeser, and Rudolph Neeser. Others who gave dinners at the club were J. Cooper Lord, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Keech, and Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Edgar.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lord gave a dinner, followed by an entertainment, at their cottage Friday night, at which nearly all of the colonists were present.

Miss Pauline French, who has been in Europe for several weeks, arrived on the Amerika to-day, and a dinner was given by Mrs. Amos French to-night for Miss French.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Redmond came out for a brief stay to-day to get their villa in readiness for occupation by the 1st of May. Among others who are getting their cottages in readiness for occupancy are Mr. and Mrs. William M. V. Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Frelinghuysen, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Delafield, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Rogers, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Poor, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander.

Mr. and Mrs. Josepuh T. Tower, who spent the Winter in the Gillespie cottage, will go abroad next week, and Dr. and Mrs. Edward L. Keyes, who have purchased the Gillespie cottage, will occupy it the coming season.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Tilford have leased the Ingalls cottage for the Summer, and will arrive about the 1st of May.

Ambrose Monell, who occupies the small Cutting cottage, has gone abroad for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Hare, who will occupy the Davis villa the coming Summer, arrived at the clubhouse to-day for a short stay.

Other arrivals to-day were George Lorillard Ronalds, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Keech, John H. Prentice, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Thatcher, Comte Lionel de Montesquieu, Dr. and Mrs. J. Clifton Edgar, Francis Burton Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Robbins, and Mr. and Mrs. F. Abbott Ingalls.

AT ATLANTIC CITY.

The Easter Rush to the Seaside Resort Has Already Started.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., March 31.—Atlantic City has already booked several important conventions for the season. Among the largest are the Railway Men's Convention and the Master Plumbers in June, and the National Machine Tool Builders' Association and the Electricians in the same month. For April four large conventions are scheduled. They are the State Bankers' Association, the Daughters of Liberty, the Epworth League and the National Municipal League. The New Jersey State Association of Master Plumbers will hold its annual convention in June with headquarters at the Hotel Loraine.

George T. Lippincott has purchased the Hotel Ridgeway property from the Magee estate of Pittsburg. The present structure will be razed to make room for a large building of brick and stone fireproof construction for apartment house purposes and public hall and lodge rooms. Other valuable properties sold in the same avenue are those of State Senator Edward S. Lee and John Tompkins.

Work is now being pushed on the new theatre and hippodrome building which is being erected on Arkansas Avenue and the Boardwalk by Nixon & Zimmerman.

The Easter rush to Atlantic City has already commenced, and in two weeks this resort will entertain, it is predicted, the greatest throng of visitors in its history at this season of the year. Travel over the railways the past week has been very heavy and nearly every one of the leading hotels is now filled to its capacity. From now on accomodations will be at a premium until after the Easter rush is over, and the only thing that can mar the most prosperous Spring season in Atlantic City's history is unfavorable weather.

Thoroughly renovated and refurnished, the Hotel Edison, in Michigan Avenue near the beach, is now open for the season under the management of T. K. Roberts, former owner and manager of Kenilworth Inn. J. Minor of New York is proprietor of the house. It has a capacity for 300 guests.

For the third consecutive year Atlantic City has been chosen as a meeting place for the annual convention of the National Masters Steam Fitters' Association, and for the third time the St. Charles has also been selected as headquarters. Several hundreds will attend the convention.

The Carlton, one of the beach-front hotels in Chelsea, will open for the season on April 1. The American Hotel and Garden, at New York Avenue and the beach, is now open for the season. The Garden Hotel, at Illinois and Pacific Avenues, has been leased by W. I. Finch for two years to W. B. Johnson. It was opened last Thursday, after having been redecorated and recarpeted throughout. The arrival list is already a large one. The Elwood, in St. James Place, near the beach, is now open for the season. John Shafer of Los Angeles has leased the Hotel Coleman in South Carolina Avenue, near the beach, for five years, and will make many improvements. The Chetwoode, at Pacific and Illinois Avenues, has been opened for the season.

Prince A. Radziwill of Germany is at Young's Hotel. He is making a tour of America, and was accompanied here by Eugene Kelly and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kelly of New York. Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, is registered at the Marlborough-Blenheim. William J. Clothier, the tennis player, is also at the Marlborough-Blenheim.

J. Madison Porter, President of Lafayette College, is at the Traymore.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Galland of New York, parents of Bertha Galland, the actress, are at Haddon Hall. Mrs. James Smith, Jr., wife of former United States Senator Smith of Newark, is at the Brighton. H. A. Willard, the veteran Washington hotelman, is at Haddon Hall, with his wife and a party of friends.

Mrs. Theodore Cramp, Miss Cramp, Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilmer Biddle, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Mason, Miss Adele Biddle Dixon, Miss Ethel Barron, and Miss Lena A. Dahring of Philadelphia were at the Brighton this week.

Walter Camp, Yale's famous athlete, spent a part of the week at the Runnymede. Mrs. Don M. Dickinson, wife of former Postmaster General Dickinson, is a recent arrival at the Marlborough-Blenheim. She is accompanied by the Misses Dickinson and Frances Bagley of Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Newbold Etting, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel P. Huhn, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Heppe, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McHugh, and Mr. and Mrs. D. Reeves, all Philadelphians, are spending the Lenten season at the Hotel Chelsea.

George C. Boldt, proprietor of the Waldorf-Astoria, is at the Shelburne for a fortnight, accompanied by Miss Boldt and Miss Hammond of New York.

Mrs. J. H. Carstairs of Philadelphia and her sister, Mrs. S. R. Hadock of New York are at the Windsor.

Recorder of Deeds Edward Vare of Philadelphia is a guest at the Chalfonte.

Rescue Mission's New Home.

The Harlem Rescue Mission has leased a large building at 1887 Lexington Avenue, which will be opened to-morrow as a convalescent home for young men. The mission workers are striving to aid young men who on account of the crowded condition of the hospitals are often discharged before they have regained strength sufficient to resume work, and who on account of the enforced idleness are not unlikely to be driven by hunger to steal.

NEW MORTGAGE TAX LAW CUTS CITY'S REVENUE

Net Loss Will Be $2,500,000 in Personal Property Taxes.

36,000 OBTAIN REDUCTIONS

Cut in Assessments in Manhattan Alone Exceeded Half a Billion. —Tax Books Closed.

All swearing off of personal tax assessments was ended yesterday when the tax-books were closed for the year. Personal assessments that have not been reduced or sworn off now stand as liens against the property assessed. Corporation assessments and realty assessments, however, are subject to review up to May 1.

According to the figures given at the Tax Department yesterday, the city will lose about $2,500,000 in taxes on personal property, owing to the workings of the new mortgage tax law, which went into effect July 1 last. Personal property assessments will run approximately $200,000,000 less this year than a year ago, and the amount of money which has been invested in mortgages, which are not subject to this tax, is about $200,000,000 in all boroughs. Manhattan shows $95,589,000 of such investments since July last and Brooklyn about $80,000,000. With the mortgage investments in other boroughs the $200,000,000 total is reached. Figured on the basis of last year's tax rate, the city would have collected $3,000,000 on this total if it had remained personal property, but on the mortgage investments the tax will be but $500,000.

Since the tax books opened on Jan. 8 36,239 persons have appeared in Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn and Queens to swear off or reduce their assessments. The total reductions effected were $735,760,120, as against reductions of $775,977,269 for the like period of the year before. Of the persons securing reductions 23,037 were in Manhattan, 1,541 in the Bronx, 11,141 in Brooklyn, and 520 in Queens. The reductions in Manhattan were $538,086,275, as against $629,186,489 for the year before. In Brooklyn the reductions were $129,843,308 as against $128,691,780 the year before. The Bronx showed reductions of $12,887,450 as against $13,880,420 the year before, and the reductions in Queens were $4,941,087 as against $4,218,580 the year before.

The tentative personal and corporation assessments for the year amounted to $3,492,015,682, as against $3,461,620,171 for the year before, but the department looks for unusually heavy reductions in the personal assessments of corporations during the coming month.

City officials generally expressed satisfaction at the assessments made by the State Tax Board against the franchises of local public service corporations. The increases figure approximately $60,000,000, and as the property is classed as real estate, this increased by $6,000,000 the city's debt limit after July 1 next.

NEWS OF NEWPORT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, March 31.—Mrs. Chadwick, wife of Rear Admiral French E. Chadwick, United States Navy, retired, has been honored by the French Government with the bronze medal which is sent each year to the Federation of the Alliance Française in the United States for one of the Presidents of the different committees or branches of the Alliance. This year's medal is awarded to Mrs. Chadwick, who is the honorary President of the Newport committee of the Alliance. The medal was presented by Prof. B. L. Henin of St. George's School, who is the active representative of the Alliance here.

Paul J. Rainey, who occupied a cottage here for the first time last Summer, will again be in Newport the coming Summer, having rented the Charles Astor Bristed cottage, on Wickham Road.

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, who arrived in New York on the steamer Amerika, returned to Sandy Point Farm this evening.

Newport expects to have at least one large wedding the coming Summer, that of Miss Anita Sands, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Sands, to Harold Minott in June. Mr. and Mrs. Sands will occupy the Cutting cottage, Wee Bush, on Bellevue Avenue this year.

Sunday School County Convention.

A Sunday school county convention—the first held in this city in twenty years—will meet at the Broadway Tabernacle on April 26, 27, and 28. Topics on the relation and duty of the church to the children will be discussed by prominent clergymen and Sunday school workers representing different denominations.

Roosevelt Joins Disease Fighters.

At the last meeting of the Directors of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, President Roosevelt and ex-President Cleveland were elected Honorary Vice Presidents, and both have accepted the election. President Roosevelt has already shown much interest in the work of the association.

IN SUNNY LAKEWOOD.

The Weather at the Resort Propitious for All Sports.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., March 31.—Warm, sunny days, balmy and invigorating, have been enjoyed by Lakewood visitors this week. From early in the morning until dusk the visitors remain outdoors, breathing in lots of the fragrant, piney air and enjoying a wide variety of pastimes.

Now that the roads from New York to Lakewood are in fairly good condition, following the recent storm, automobilists are again flocking to this resort. The trip to Lakewood is one of the best runs out of New York.

The polo fields at Georgian Court are being rolled and trimmed, in preparation for the practice game of polo which George J. Gould and his friends will enjoy from now on. Mr. and Mrs. Gould will return to Georgian Court next week. Jay Gould, who won the gold racquet in the Eastern States court tennis tournament at Tuxedo last week is to enter the National tournament, to be held at the New York Racquet and Tennis Club next Tuesday.

Very successful was the Eastern bazaar which was held in the ballroom of the Lakewood Hotel this week, for the benefit of Lakewood's new hospital. Society women of the resort joined with the patrons of the hotels in helping the hospital, and all the booths were generously patronized. The Sisters of St. Joseph, who established the hospital, realized several hundred dollars from the bazaar. They have had plans prepared for a new building, which will be erected this Summer.

The last of the series of indoor tennis tournaments at the Lakewood Hotel was held this week. The Lakewood Hotel Cup was won by Dr. William H. Stratford, who defeated William H. Coombs of Wakefield, R. I., in straight sets, 6—4, 8—5, and 8—3. There was an exciting match between Philip S. P. Randolph and Harry Suydam, which was won by Mr. Randolph. The gallery was crowded with spectators.

A performance of "The Rivals" will be given in the theatre of the Lakewood Hotel next Thursday evening by the Amherst Dramatic Club.

John E. Borne, President of the Colonial Trust Company of New York, and George P. Forman, President of the Fidelity Trust Bank of Buffalo, are staying at the Laurel House with their families. Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Kissam have taken apartments at the Laurel House until after Easter.

The lawn tennis courts at the Laurel House were made ready for play this week. A round of golf in the morning and tennis in the afternoon is now the daily programme of the young women patrons of the Laurel House.

Mrs. Frank W. Higgins, wife of Gov. Higgins of New York, joined her son, Frank H. Higgins, at the Berkshire, for a brief visit, this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Robinson of Brooklyn are among the week's arrivals at the Palmer House. Alexander Maxwell of New York is at this hotel.

Delany Wants More Help.

Corporation Counsel Delany wants to increase the staff of his assistants from seventy-five to one hundred, and an application to that effect has been made to the Municipal Civil Service Commission. That body has announced a public hearing on the matter for next Wednesday. On Jan. 1, according to The City Record, there were sixty-nine assistants, but the vacancies have been filled since that time.

WIND-UP AT ST. AUGUSTINE.

Visitors Flock There from Other Resorts—Many Social Functions.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 31.—St. Augustine is never so charming as in the early Spring days when the visitors who have been further south gather here to finish a well-spent Winter. Although many of the Winter guests are turning their faces toward home the hotels are well filled. Every hour yachts and motor boats carry visitors to the beaches, to Crescent Beach, ten miles away, or further, to Matansas.

The annual tournament for the five handsome cups presented by the St. Augustine golf club opened on Monday with a large list of entries. E. Lee Jones of Chicago, who, with his sister, has a cottage here, won the qualifying round, with a score of 82. Match play began the same afternoon, the first sixteen qualifying being matched for the first prize and runner-up cup, the second sixteen for the consolation cup. The finals were played on Wednesday, W. N. P. Darrow and John Sheppard playing thirty-six holes for the first prize, A. R. Peirson and A. F. Southerland for the consolation cup. Darrow defeated Sheppard and Southerland beat Peirson, seven-up 6. In the handicap competition on Wednesday twenty-four competed, four playing scratch. W. A. Knight and R. B. Corbin tied at 78, the lowest net score. In the play-off Knight won.

The largest function of the season was a bridge party, given in the upper rotunda of the Ponce de Leon on Saturday night by Mr. and Mrs. William L. Harkness of New York and Mrs. J. D. Maclennan, who are paying their annual visit there. The immense room, directly under the dome, was beautifully decorated with palms. On one side of the opening the tables for bridge were arranged, and on the other a beautifully appointed table laid with decorations of pink carnations and pink shaded candles. At 12 o'clock supper was served to the guests, who were seated at small prettily decorated tables placed around the room. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Harkness, Miss Warden, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Corning, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Miles, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Ilsley, Mrs. J. J. Upham, Mrs. Howard Norris, Miss Stephenson, Miss James, Miss Bigelow, Miss Jones, Mrs. George Fletcher, W. H. Pell, J. P. Greaves, E. Lee Jones, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Kinney, Henry Sandford, Major and Mrs. C. C. MacConnell, and Mrs. M. W. Seagears.

On Monday Miss Dewhurst gave a luncheon for Miss Anderson, who is visiting the Misses Macmillan, and Miss Ennis, who is at the Alcazar. Both young ladies were here when children. The guests included Miss Wagstaff, Miss Schawb, Mrs. George Dismukes, and the Misses Macmillan. On Saturday Mrs. Will A. Knight gave a luncheon for the same young ladies in her villa, Three Oaks. Her house and room table were decorated with white and lavender wistaria, with a photograph of each guest on the place card.

On Tuesday Mrs. Alfred Jerome Weston gave a reception in the St. Augustine Yacht Clubhouse. The Ponce de Leon Orchestra furnished music, and the second room was arranged for dancing. Mrs. Weston received, assisted by Mrs. Dewhurst. Mrs. L. J. Hopkins and Mrs. Jonas Coe Heartt poured tea, Mrs. Gardner Hammond presiding over a coffee urn. Miss Schawb and Miss Wagstaff served punch. Many guests from the hotels and the women of the society colony were present.

Miss Riggs entertained the Bridge Club on Tuesday evening and was hostess again on Wednesday at a bridge tea for the visiting young ladies. On Thursday Miss Wherry and Miss Bessie Frazer gave a sailing party for them, followed by a tea at the Valencia. Miss Wagstaff gave a tea yesterday in the old Spanish house belonging to Mr. Wagstaff.

The Japanese Famine Fund.

Jacob H. Schiff, Treasurer of the Japanese famine fund, acknowledges the receipt of contributions amounting to $923.53 since March 22. They are in sums ranging from $1 to $100. The total amount so far contributed is $8,793.43.

ALGECIRAS AND AFTER.

There may be said to have been three parties to the dispute referred to the Algeciras Conference, which practically closed its labors yesterday—Germany, France, and the rest of Europe. Morocco was present in unaccustomed dignity, and her appearance may be a precedent for serious happenings in the future, but her actual part in the work was negligible. How do the three parties named come out of the conference?

Germany in some important ways loses. She loses prestige because she challenged a show of relative strength and stood almost solitary when the test came, with Austria only of all Europe by her side, the support of Morocco detracting from rather than adding to her title to respect. Substantially she is isolated. Moreover, it is hardly to be questioned that she brought all Europe into the quarrel with France with the hope that the understanding between France and Great Britain would be weakened by the terrible strain. It has been strengthened, and in the process the relations between Russia, the ally of France, and Great Britain, for half a century jealous and apprehensive of Russia, have been improved. These are the losses of Germany, and they are very considerable. On the other hand, Germany has served effectual notice on Europe that affairs on the Mediterranean and in the Near East cannot be disposed of without her having a hearing. More important, however, than anything else in the international situation is the fact that the Kaiser has succeeded in impressing his own people with the risks and difficulties of his position and with the need of the enormous revenues required for the refitting of his army and the extension of his navy. It is not unlikely that this impression on his people, vexed and apprehensive as they are at the new taxes on tobacco and beer, on commerce and on successions, was the chief object of the whole scheme. Whether it has completely been attained remains to be seen; for the moment the German people are intensely excited and interested and seem prepared to give the Government of the Kaiser all that it wants.

France comes out of the conference with added prestige, with a more generally recognized and a firmer position in the counsels of Europe than before. Of that there is no room for question. Her alliance with Russia has stood a severe test. Her understanding with Great Britain, Spain, and Italy has been even more severely tested and is confirmed, not shaken. This has been accomplished, moreover, at a time when great confusion prevailed in domestic politics resulting in the overthrow of the Ministry that consented to the conference, thereby guaranteeing greater stability and continuity in foreign policy than it had been supposed the republic could assure. Practically France has now a free hand to do all in Morocco that she can do while respecting the independence of the Sultan and the equal commercial rights of the other Powers. With this result there goes an immense responsibility. To all intents France is now the guardian of peace and order and trade in Morocco, and her task will be a very trying one. In like tasks in Algeria and in Tonquin she has done, on the whole, extremely well. In Madagascar and on the Congo she has done ill. The new work will demand wisdom, justice, consistency, and possibly large expenditure, at first, of money. She has won an opportunity. If she fail to use it intelligently the failure may be disastrous.

As for the rest of Europe, we think that it comes out of the conference with greater security for peace than before existed. That is a solid gain, one that compensates for all the trouble and anxiety that have reigned so generally since the conference was called.

HENRY JAMES ON PROTECTION.

Mr. HENRY JAMES does not often in his comments on the impressions he received from his native land revisited have anything to say as to questions of a public nature. But in his exceedingly interesting paper on Boston in The North American Review, he indulges in one reflection the point of which can be understood by those who have not spent so much time as he in foreign parts:

> The shop front, observed at random, produced on me from the first, and almost everywhere alike, a singular, a sinister impression, which left me uneasy till I had found a name for it; the sense of an economic law of which one had not for years known the unholy rigor, the vision of "protected" production and of commodities requiring certainly, in many cases, every advantage Protection would give them. They looked to me always, these exhibitions, consciously and defiantly protected—insolently safe, able to be with impunity anything they would; and when once that lurid light had settled on them I could see them, I confess, in none other; so that the objects composing them fell, throughout, into a vicious and villainous category, quite as if audibly saying: "Oh come; don't look among us for what you won't, for what you sha'n't, find, the best quality attainable; but only for that quite other matter, the best value we allow you. You must take us or go without, and, if you feel your nose thus held to the grindstone by the hard fiscal hand, it's no more than you deserve for harboring treasonable thoughts."

MR. MITCHELL'S MANOEUVRES.

It would be agreeable to discuss the coal strike prospects upon the merits of the controversy, but there is nothing but tactics and pleadings upon the record. Everything regarding the merits is unofficial, and mostly ex parte. In the bituminous trade the operators offered to abide the result of an inspection of their books, and to pay the increased wages if their profits justified it. This was rejected, and no counter proposal was made. The bituminous miners therefore advance nothing but a demand for more wages and obstruct the operators' attempt to have the facts impartially ascertained.

In the anthracite trade the miners' representatives appointed a conference with their employers upon the disagreement with them for a date later than the suspension of work which they ordered in the same document. If Mr. MITCHELL's preoccupation prevented his setting the conference at an earlier date a decent regard for the opinion of all should have suggested the prudence of ordering a continuance of work pending the negotiations. As the matter stands he ordered a stoppage of mining while there was pending his request for a conference, and without that reference of the subject back to the whole committee which had been contemplated by both sides throughout the entire correspondence. In the meantime Mr. MITCHELL had got his strike in the bituminous trade, and nothing was necessary to stop both industries except his orders. They are lacking no longer. Evidently the labor leaders are a law unto themselves, and ordinary rules regarding business intercourse count for nothing. Readers will judge for themselves whether or not the United Mine Workers have taken toward the public the attitude which Commodore VANDERBILT assumed, and which experience has taught corporate interests that they cannot afford to assume.

These considerations are important in estimating the probable effect of what must be deemed a strike, although not called such. There can be no scarcity of anthracite for months, and a strike may even be welcome to the overstocked operators. The lack of bituminous will be felt sooner, but in this trade the stoppage will be only partial. The anthracite operators have objected to having their trade complicated with disputes in a rival industry. Mr. MITCHELL's contention has been that because the anthracite and bituminous trades were rivals, therefore they should be united in the union's demands. He has succeeded, and now the question is whether in either industry any man can work without the union's license. Consumers of coal conceive that their advantage lies in preserving competition between the two products. A monopoly of both would be regarded prejudicial to public interests and against public policy. Such a monopoly in labor Mr. MITCHELL must succeed in establishing, or his strike will be a failure. If he succeeds, his muscle trust will be established in defiance of the findings of President ROOSEVELT's Commission. If the merits of the dispute are with the men they have failed lamentably in showing it, and have deprived President ROOSEVELT of that support in public opinion which would strengthen his intervention. There should be a lawful and economic settlement—one which would settle.

"SEE AMERICA FIRST."

A "movement" originating, curiously but quite naturally, in Salt Lake City, and boomed by the local organs of that hustling town, Mormon and Gentile alike, has now taken on serious proportions. The plain fact is that many millions are spent by Americans every year in pleasure travel, and that a large proportion of these millions is spent in Europe. The "See America First" organization undertakes, we believe, to say what proportion, but obviously any attempt in that direction must be mere guesswork. The organization desires that this Pactolian stream should be as much as possible diverted, like other streams, to irrigate the arid places of our own continent. It has held a convention of interested Governors and issued a pamphlet in that behalf.

Obviously it is useless to try to bully anybody into seeing America first. "No man," observes the learned Dr. JOHNSON, "is a hypocrite in his pleasures." A man with a fixed amount of time and a fixed amount of money to spend on his pleasure will go where he expects the most pleasure for the money and in the time. Appeals to his patriotic duty will not move him, or will move only such a small proportion of him as to be practically negligible. So, and perhaps still more so, with his wife. And every American of either sex, one may say, is born with an innate desire to "see Europe." The further west you go the stronger, perhaps, is this desire. As no New Yorker or Bostonian or Philadelphian finds it laid upon him to see San Francisco and Salt Lake City and Los Angeles before seeing London and Paris and Rome, even less does any Franciscan or Salt Lake citizen or Angelican find it incumbent upon him to see the cities of the East before seeing the European capitals. "See America first" is a mistaken adjuration when addressed to an American of any part who has time and money wherewithal to see Europe.

But to the ordinary holiday maker, who has not money enough, and above all who has not time enough really to see Europe, who has, say, a fortnight's holiday and, say, $250 wherewith to enjoy it, the appeal that comes from the intramontane region ought to be affecting, especially when he has already "seen Europe," more especially when "time is of the essence." For, in a mere fortnight one can do nothing in the way of "seeing Europe." He can, in effect, see the Atlantic Ocean, both ways, and that is all. That may suit him perfectly, and suit his doctors, if he happens to be on the verge of nervous prostration, and, to any overworked and overworried man, it is a complete rest. But it really does not appreciably enlarge his store of impressions and of memories. On the other hand, in a fortnight the Far Easterner can really go Far West and see things worth seeing, see many scenic wonders by the way, instead of seeing only the melancholy waste of the North Atlantic by the way, and see "cities of men and manners" distinctly different from what he has left, without being so different as to be unintelligible. And similarly the Far Westerner coming Far East, and finding a great deal of interest and gratification before he even arrives at his port of departure for Europe.

Our esteemed contemporary The Evening Post has been pointing out, very properly, that the difference in the cost per diem of travel and subsistence is a weighty consideration in favor of Europe. So it is. So, it might be added, is the European advantage in the lubrication of the general social friction of travel and of sojourn in strange places. With a month to spend on shore in Europe, possibly with even a fortnight to spare, the preponderating attraction for the untraveled would be eastward. The "See America First"-ers have no countervailing allurement to offer. They ought to drop the "first," and to devote themselves to showing what can be seen on this continent within a certain limit of money, and, what is of even more importance, within a certain limit of time. That looks like the most feasible method of attaining the object of their organization.

KALKSTICKSTOFF.

> In manufacturing the substance they employ the latest results of technical science. The atmospheric nitrogen must be separated from the oxygen with which it is mixed. They therefore liquefy the atmosphere and separate the two substances by fractional distillation. The oxygen passes off to be used for other purposes, but the nitrogen passes suddenly from the intense cold of liquid air into the highest heat of the electric furnace, where, through contact with a mixture of coke and lime, it is caught and transformed into Kalkstickstoff. * * *
>
> We see, too, that the disaster of which the world actually stood in imminent deadly peril has been averted, and that if every pound of saltpetre in the mines of Chile were suddenly to dissolve into its elements the human race would still be able to guard itself against the unhumanity of nature.—Prof. R. K. DUNCAN in Harper's Magazine for April.

Kalkstickstoff is the world's new fertilizer. Hitherto the "sovereign'st thing on earth," in the fertilizer line, has been "villainous saltpetre" digged out of the bowels of a harmless Andean strip in Chile, on which the world's breadstuffs have depended for soil reinforcement by the grace of the Nitre Kings who monopolize the substance.

The Chilean saltpetre beds will be exhausted in 1925, according to Prof. DUNCAN's calculation, just as the Peruvian guano deposits are exhausted to-day. "The natural manure of the world is a mere drop in the bucket" of the modern wants of the peopled earth, Prof. DUNCAN asserts, although a fixed quantity—about $20,000,000 worth—of ammonium sulphate, a fairly good fertilizer, is annually distilled from coal tar. But this amount "is inadequate to supply the one-hundredth of the imperious and increasing demands of Mother Earth."

Truly, humanity would soon be in a parlous state but for the comfortable knowledge that suspended above each several acre of the terraqueous globe the incasing air sustains 33,880 tons of nitrogen, the life-food of plants, whose convenient extraction and combination with the now abundant metal calcium has been discovered by Prof. ADOLPH FRANK of Charlottenburg, Germany. The product is calcium cyanamide, the fertilizing kalkstickstoff of commerce. Could it be stripped altogether from the atmosphere the 237,000 tons of nitrogen above every seven acres of land would quite replace the 1,500,000 tons of saltpetre consumed last year in agriculture and the arts.

There are various methods of tearing nitrogen from its reposeful union with oxygen in the air—some by the direct application of electricity, as exemplified in the manufacturing plants at Niagara Falls and in Sweden, where the electrical conversion of water power is cheap, and in the case of kalkstickstoff by passing frigid liquefied air over white-hot carbide of calcium in factory smelting furnaces. The resultant combination makes a better fertilizer than sulphate of ammonia, and is "practically equal to the saltpetre of the mines, weight for weight of the nitrogen that it contains." It is readily marketable in competition with Chile saltpetre. Moreover, its utility, already great, "is likely to be enhanced to an indefinite extent" by the discovery of Dr. F. LOEHNIS of Liepsic that the nitrogen-loving microbes of the soil are able to eat it, "and to produce in this way, at an accelerated pace, the free ammonia that the plants absorb."

Here, apparently, is a triumph of pure science in commercial production. Prof. DUNCAN ventures to think that it is not unique, that the substitution of high technical skill for the "rule of thumb" of our ancestors is creating a silent revolution in industry—silent because among the trust organizations and large manufacturers who appreciate its advantages "it does not pay to tell."

MISS LONGMAN'S SUCCESS.

Statues have been modeled before now by women. We have heard our fathers tell how there was a sculptress, away back at the "Philadelphia Centennial," who publicly modeled in butter, to the envy and bewilderment of the dairywomen from the back districts, to whom it had never occurred that, except in the modest form of "pats," the material was eligible as a "vehicle." Also to the satisfaction of statesmen who sat to her, so to say, and were content with the simple epitaph: "Here lies one whose bust was sculped in butter." Women, too, have modeled things perpetuated in enduring bronze. The Washington Farragut stands to attest this, unless an advancing popular appreciation has sent it again to the foundry as material for better things. S. S. COX, hailing a Fourth Avenue car from his pedestal, certainly so stood at least as lately as yesterday.

But these things are evidence not of artistic but of social gifts. They would never have been if they had been exposed in the model to the cold light of expert and impersonal criticism. That success was reserved for Miss LONGMAN, who has won a competition for the bronze doors of the new Naval Academy, a competition decided by such criticism, over several male sculptors not without repute in their art. The result may be accepted as just, seeing that the expert judges included two accomplished architects and an eminent sculptor. Without question Miss LONGMAN has earned her honors, and indicated in this field the capacity of her sex.

ATHLETICS FOR WOMEN.

There is no question, we suppose, that the rising generation of American girls, reared in comfortable homes, are physically superior to what their mothers were at their age. The change is so beneficial that it is rather startling to be told that there is any practical danger of the abuse of athletics by young women.

That danger, however, was very distinctly pointed out and emphasized by experts at the meeting of the Physical Training Society on Friday evening. The qualifications as an expert of Dr. SARGENT, Director of Physical Training at Harvard, are undisputed, although, of course, his professional experience has been with young men rather than with young women. His opinion has much weight, and it is that in many institutions for girls athletic exercises are overdone. Among the games which he distinctly discommends for them are not only football, boxing, and pole vaulting, but also the basket ball which is perhaps at present the game most in favor in girls' schools. We may expect to see his judgment on this point challenged.

Dr. GIDDINGS, the President of the society, uttered a warning much in the vein of that of Dr. SARGENT, though he did not go so much into detail. But the principle which he laid down we should suppose would commend itself to physicians, parents, and teachers. "Let us have athletics for recreation, but not for serious public competition." This limitation seems to rest upon the sound principle that the strain not only of the public competition itself, but of the preliminary training, if gone into with anything like the severity which training implies among male undergraduates, would involve far more muscular and nervous strain than is wholesome for the more delicate sex.

"THE CORPORATIONS' SIDE."

Our readers will do well not to skip the talk with a defender of the corporations which we print this morning on the first page of Part Three of THE TIMES.

The gentleman who does the talking in this case is probably as intimately familiar with his subject as any man in the country. He might with accuracy and modesty say of the biggest corporation to which he refers, "all of which I saw and part of which I was." The facts he presents in a general way are not and can not readily be known to the ordinary writer on the subject, nor are they, it must be admitted, of the sort to lend themselves to very attractive newspaper treatment. The mass and variety of the business of a big corporation are impressive, stories of oppression and extortion on its part are intensely interesting. Explanations, such as this gentleman offers, of the methods, the system, the organization, and the personnel of the corporation are not particularly interesting until attention has been drawn to the subject by writing of the opposite sort. Of writing of that sort certainly there has been enough to arouse not merely the attention, but the hostility of a large part of the community. "The Corporations' Side" will be found well worth reading.

> Representative HEPBURN, Chairman of the committee, said that if any legislation was to be enacted at all it should be an amendment to the Inter-State Commerce law, providing that when the President travels he should ride free on whatever railroad he might select.—The Tribune.

And that settles it, we suppose, so far as the passage by a Republican House of the bill to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase, equipment, and maintenance of a train for the President is concerned. Is Chairman HEPBURN meditating the establishment of a legal precedent of Presidential free rides that conscientious Congressmen might not with reluctance follow? And what of the famous instantaneous appropriation, not of $100,000, but of several hundred thousand dollars, which this body of Trappist monks voted themselves last year for "constructive mileage" during the "constructive recess"?

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Twenty Days in the Dark.

Men "entombed" in coal mines have often been rescued alive after several days of desperate effort to reach them, but the case of the miners at Lens is, we believe, without precedent in several respects. Not only did their imprisonment last for twenty days, but they were saved as it were by accident, after all thought of finding anything except dead bodies had long been given up and while the work of repairing the mine was going on in an entirely deliberate way. According to the dispatches, some of the engineers familiar with the Courrières coal deposits have felt and said that the operators despaired too soon after the accident, and that a more vigorous exploration of the wrecked passages would have lessened the terrible list of fatalities, but other and apparently as good authority decided that there could be no life in the mine. It seems now that the latter were wrong and the former right, but there is little reason even for suspecting that intention was lacking to do all that could be done to save the miners whom the explosion spared. The story of the survivors and their sufferings from hunger, thirst, and the horror of their position is a very moving one, relieved, as usual, by the appearance among them of the natural leader who took command of the little band and made the most of their slender resources. NEMY, this suddenly developed hero, kept up the courage of the imprisoned men, forced them to utilize every poor means of preserving life, and inspired them with the hope that at last brought them into the astonished sight of those engaged in restoring the mine. It must not be forgotten, either, that the disaster was the occasion for a display of sympathy and helpfulness not less novel than admirable. As soon as news of it was published and at the suggestion, it is said, of the Kaiser, a salvage corps of Westphalian miners put their life-saving apparatus on their backs and took train for Lille. German thoroughness and efficiency were demonstrated by the scientific and confident manner in which the Westphalian corps set to work, and accomplished rescues for which the Courrières engineers, with all the courage and will in the world, were hardly prepared. It now seems a pity that the Westphalians did not continue their much praised efforts longer than they did, for the men finally rescued could hardly have been all who were not killed by the explosion.

Has Finance Its Blind Toms?

People without money-getting abilities have often been moved, when opportunity offered for a more or less close study of those who succeed in acquiring wealth, to wonder what the secret of that success could be. In some instances, at least, the heapers-up of dollars have not seemed to these observers to possess an intelligence greater than their own, while their education and general information were often certainly less. In a discussion of big and little brains, American Medicine takes up this curious problem and suggests a more curious solution of it. Admitting that men of property, except the feeble-minded who have inherited riches, are generally of more than average mental strength, it says that "nevertheless there are so many published instances (of the gullibility of the rich) that we are justified in suspecting that a keen money-making ability may be a special mental power which can exist in a brain otherwise very defective—financial Blind Toms who have as little discretion and morality as that poor fool. Such men may have diminutive brains, unable to think of anything except buying and selling, and instead of being instances of intelligence without brains, they illustrate the rule of all nature. The matter has a professional aspect, for if is found that the new rich are so frequently the victims of quacks. It does not make any difference how grotesque the absurdity, there are plenty of men ready to give up money for it—and rich men, too." Of course, others than quack doctors succeed in gulling the rich. CASSIE CHADWICK is not yet forgotten by everybody, and in numberless instances financial schemes that later seem wildly absurd prove for a while highly and expensively interesting to capitalists supposed to be extremely hard-headed as well as big-brained. The idea that money-getting requires a special faculty, like that possessed, say, by the violin player or the painter, is not new, but when carried as far as to bring Blind TOM in as an illustration it is decidedly startling. And yet most of us have met rich men, and "self-made" at that, whose conversation on any subject other than their own particular branch of trade or industry had many characteristics that not too remotely recalled the jabbering of the negro pianist.

Mystery in This Phenomenon.

One of our correspondents wants to know if self-defense is to be counted by Americans among the lost arts. His question was inspired by noting that while the air is full of the most terrible charges, definitely formulated and aimed straight at men but recently considered as powerful as they were honest, only in rare instances do the accused make any effort at all, and only in still rarer instances do they make an effective effort, either to clear themselves or to bring the accusers to a sense of responsibility. The phenomenon is, indeed, somewhat remarkable, for certainly Americans have not lost the art of self-defense, nor have they suddenly developed a humility that forbids them to strike back when struck. Several explanations of the mystery might be offered, the first one that suggests itself to a cynic, of course, being that the charges are not answered because they are not answerable. Another is that many of the sensation purveyors are beyond the reach of anything except personal chastisement, with which the spirit of the times is out of harmony. The truly charitable will opine that, while some of the accused are silent because the knowledge of guilt oppresses them, a greater number realize that they are the victims, not of this or that reckless calumniator, but of a general emotion or fever of the day with which it is for the present hopeless and useless to contend. There are other theories that might be put forward, but our correspondents can be trusted to think of them without assistance. The question is certainly interesting.

WHOSE AMBASSADORS?

Caustic Replies to the Query of "A Perplexed Englishman."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Does not "A Perplexed Englishman" seem rather ready to criticise the Chief Executive of the country of which he hopes to become a citizen?

If I were he I would not advertise the fact that I wish to foreswear my country.

L. O. N. DON.

New York, March 30, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would like to say to "A Perplexed Englishman," in to-day's TIMES, that if he will consult the election returns of the last Presidential election he will learn who President Roosevelt represents in his relations with Mr. Storer, as well as in many other instances of late that it would not be difficult to name.

In the light he will thus come to see it will not take him long to learn why the President, in his person, represents the American people in a sense in which no King, by accident of birth, could do for any people.

It is probable that this perplexed Englishman has not been long in this country, and he ought to be cautioned that the great amount of howling, sulking, and bull-baiting in the political arena at the present time does not emanate from the American people, but in spite of them, and is a cause of much sorrow and shame to them as well. If he becomes an American citizen it is to be hoped he will be a good one, and cast his vote for men of blameless character, energy, integrity, honesty, and who favor strict justice for the plain people, remembering that here they often have cause to love the men, whom they delegate to administer their affairs, for the enemies they make in dealing with corruptionists, and the jealousies and graft of political adventurers who seek office for unworthy ends, betraying those who have "drest them in a little brief authority. ONE OF THE PLAIN PEOPLE.

TO AID THE BLIND.

Importance of Organized Effort to Provide Employment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with much interest the account in THE TIMES to-day of the meeting held at the Waldorf-Astoria for the purpose of raising a fund for aiding the blind securing employment. The schools for the blind educate pupils supposedly for the purpose of taking care of themselves, and if a pupil actually graduates from one of these schools he is as well equipped in his line to render efficient service as any person possessing sight. The difficulty seems to be in getting people to treat a blind person with the same common-sense methods that they apply to persons with sight who seek employment. The blind do not need pity and charity half as much as they need an avenue for bringing their qualifications to the attention of those requiring the service they can render. If this association is, as I understand it, a sort of employment bureau for the blind, I venture the remark that Mark Twain and Mr. Joseph H. Choate never lent their presence to a more worthy cause.

Many of the pupils in the blind schools have no relatives to look out for them. They are educated, and when their school-days are over they are turned adrift to shift for themselves, and on the streets of this city are blind men selling newspapers, grinding organs, and begging who are well educated, some of them brilliant musicians, expert at tuning pianos, making mattresses, and caning chairs; all they need is somebody to assist them to employment, in order to earn a comfortable living. If Mr. Carnegie would contribute the price of one library to this employment bureau fund for the blind he would be assisting a worthy class of people to taste the sweets of their own labor, where they must now accept charity. Of course, all this does not apply to the blind who have friends to care for them. ONE WHO KNOWS.

Disposal of "Yellow Dog" Money.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As "Judge" Hamilton has now ventured back to these shores, why can't we learn from him the names of the persons to whom the "yellow dog" funds were paid?

The "Judge" seems willing enough to talk, and even give gratuitous advice about everything else—why does the Legislature not take steps to compel him to disclose what he knows or has reason to believe about the very important matter in question?

Can it be that some of the recipients of the funds in question are now in the Legislature, and that they are numerous enough to block any inquiry? LEX.

Spelling Reform.

From The London Globe.

Now that an opportunity has been offered to writers of appropriating some of Mr. Carnegie's superfluous wealth on condition that they will adopt phonetic orthography, we may expect a revival of the so-called spelling reform. For it is only a revival which has been projected in America, and which has gained adherents on both sides of the ocean. The movement was initiated at least sixty years ago by the late Sir Isaac Pitman, who was much more than the inventor of a new system of shorthand writing. He seriously proposed to himself to revolutionize first the spelling of the English language, and gradually that of all living, or, at any rate, all European languages, by spelling the words exactly as they were pronounced, and succeeded so far as to induce a number of men and women to adopt the system which he had devised upon all occasions. His disciples formed the Phonetic Corresponding Society, of whom very few of the original members survive. One of the oldest is, or lately was, in possession of a letter from Pitman dated in 1847, in which, with an enthusiasm which would hardly be credited, the reformer urged him to join the crusade of which he was the leader. Pitman claimed, as his followers are claiming now, the educational reformer, asserting that the time spent in teaching children to spell could be immensely reduced. The enthusiasm of these orthographic innovators found vent in the publication of a newspaper. But all was vain. The idea never caught on, and we shall be surprised if the belated spelling reformers of the twentieth century obtain more than a temporary success.

McLANDBURGH WILSON.

WOES OF THE SUBWAY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

About dear "Thoroughly Disgusted" in to-day's paper. Since he lives slightly out of the city and travels much, he must know, of course, how easy it is to stand on a station platform and search for a vacant seat in either the "front or rear" of an eight-car train, with the persuasive hand of the guard in the middle of your back and his gentle voice bawling "Step lively!" in both ears at once, for fear you may be deaf in one of them.

How can she help dingle-dangling from a strap when she is only five foot nothing, and her usual long reach to the strap is made longer by his feet stretched out in the aisle over the aforesaid bird cage, leg o'mutton, lamp shade, and watering pot, and his paper spread to the extent of his manly arms.

And as for the copy of "East Lynne," at least it is better than the yellowest edition of the yellow peril, and perhaps, on closer inspection, it might even read "The Complete Stenographer" or "The Hard-Working Bookkeeper," though of course, as they don't use spread heads, he could hardly read that so easily.

Go to, go to, dear "Disgusted"! What can you expect when you insist upon transporting a bird cage, leg o' mutton, &c., in an ordinary passenger car just meant for people? Why not add a parrot and a bandbox, the accepted companions of old maids of either sex, and travel on the rear platform, rear car? Then there would be room for female feet to stand with a fair degree of security in the aisles, which were meant for that purpose.

Notice, I say nothing about the lack of opportunity to do anything but stand. Long practice has inured me to that, but it does seem too bad when we cannot even stand without annoying and inconveniencing the stronger and braver members of our race, who are comfortably sitting down.

From one who dingle-dangles regularly twice a day and is

"THOROUGHLY STRETCHED."

New York, March 31, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Nights, lately, I have several times passed rather lengthy periods of waiting in Subway fastnesses, in momentary anticipation of the approach of trains and under the delusion that I was in no danger of being late, no matter how great the distance I was going. The delusion has been dispelled, and I am now going to urge others to join me in a clamor for the ordinary railroad timetable accommodations or schedule, to be placed at street entrances to Subway stations, so as to make it possible to avoid unnecessary wasting of time on the part of passengers. RUINOUS TO CHILDREN'S EYES.

Nurses Permit Their Charges to Sleep in the Sun.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would like to call the attention of those of your readers who are parents of young children to a prevailing custom among nursemaids which is likely to prove a serious matter to the present generation of babies.

It is my habit to take a daily walk through Central Park, and each time, in the course of these walks, I see perhaps between fifty and seventy-five babies in their carriages. With hardly an exception the faces of those babies who are sleeping are turned directly toward the sun, with absolutely no covering over their eyes. Presumably the ignorance of the nurses is to blame for this, but whether the fault lies with maid or mother, something should be done to prevent the wholesale ruin of eyesight which this particular form of carelessness accomplishes. New York, March 30, 1906.

Mr. Haldeman and the Mutual Life.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of even date a "high insurance company officer" attributes the resignation of Donald C. Haldeman, General Manager of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for Great Britain, as prompted by his failure to become head of the parent company.

This reflection is neither just to Mr. Haldeman nor creditable to the "high insurance company official." The public, however, is becoming distrustful of utterances from such sources, and the higher the insurance official the less the confidence.

That Mr. Haldeman's move is free from selfish intent, and is prompted solely in the interests of the policy holders, is evident to all who know him. Belonging to an old Pennsylvania family, he went to England as a lad early in the eighties, and entered the London office of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York, leaving it in 1885 to assume charge of the agency of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for Great Britain. Under his direction the business of the company prospered from the start, until, as stated in your cable of yesterday, it has reached the total of £650,000 annually. Clean-cut, honest, and of unimpeachable character, Mr. Haldeman soon enjoyed the confidence of the British public, and to this is unquestionably due the success attending his management. That he has felt keenly for his clients during this period of uncertainty, and that he has surrendered his position, on which he depended for a livelihood, in order to help them is characteristic of the man. It is reasonable to expect that the same ability displayed in administering the affairs of the company during the last twenty-one years will be applied with equal good judgment and energy in safeguarding the interests of those who trusted in him.

Heckling John Burns.

From The Toronto Globe.

When heckled about receiving £2,000 a year, John Burns at one of his Battersea meetings said he was engaged at a job now where the general rate of pay was £2,000. He was not going to take less than the union pay. But a woman called: "How do ye spend £2,000, John?" and quick as a flash came the answer, "Ask the missus." The heckling stopped amidst a roar of laughter.

TOO MUCH FEMININITY IN MODERN LITERATURE

MEN BOUND UP IN BUSINESS

And Art Left in the Hands of Women—The Manless Tea and the German Author.

Dr. Ludwig Fulda, the German author and playwright, returned yesterday to this city following a lecture tour, in the course of which he addressed audiences in sixteen States. On the day of his departure for Cincinnati, on Feb. 26, he lectured on Schiller to an audience composed chiefly of Barnard College students and other women, and caused something of a stir by commenting adversely on the pre-eminence accorded to women in latter-day literature.

Dr. Fulda explained yesterday that he had been rather crudely interpreted in the published fragments of his lecture.

"I should like you to emphasize," Dr. Fulda explained, "that I am not one of those who, after a superficial observation of a country's life and methods, pretends to have fathomed it or to be better equipped to criticise than those born in it. My belief is that much of the misunderstandings between nations springs from this cause.

"The study of women is so subtle and important that I can hardly imagine an intelligent man pretending to have arrived at any useful impression as to the differentiation of American women from those of other lands in the short time that I have been among them.

"In my Schiller lecture I was speaking of the universal woman. I said that Schiller's works were pre-eminently masculine. His heroes are all masculine, and the tales revolving about them have the tinge of masculinity. It is so also with his contemporaries.

"Now, in the latter-day literature this is altered. The trend is toward femininity—heroines instead of heroes—and an atmosphere of delicacy tending to the effete. This is so in my own country, I feel convinced. It may be, and I suspect that it is, more true of America.

"In America, as I have observed, the men are prone to go in for mercantile pursuits. That naturally drives the women into the study of the fine arts. They become the students, the appreciators of literature, and in the end the exponents of it also—the authors. Now a man who writes in these latter days soon discovers this. He discovers that the women are the readers. If he would sell his books he must cater to their tastes. That tends to effeminacy.

"Your women take a more prominent part in public affairs, more particularly those tending to culture, than do our women.

"In Chicago I attended a meeting of the Fortnightly Club. It is an organization of women exclusively. A woman delivered a lecture—a creditable lecture it was, too. After the lecture there was a general discussion in which all the women participated. Now, in my own country they could not do that with so little risk of being misunderstood. They would be accused of being bold.

"My mind is led to another incident which struck me as unusual. Before my trip out West I lived at a hotel. The women have a 5 o'clock tea there. In my ignorance I tried to get into that dining room one afternoon. 'Halt!' said the butler, 'you cannot go in there.' I felt a little piqued until it was explained to me that no man not accompanied by a woman could go in among that group of women.

"Now, you're ahead of us there, I must admit. There are many places in Germany where a woman cannot go unattended by a man, but there are none into which a man unaccompanied by a woman cannot go.

"You're ahead of us in another respect—the numerous women's clubs in this country. Club life for women only recently had its birth in Germany. I'm inclined to think it will develop.

"In Germany our cultured women are good housewives and progressively intellectual as well. They are more happily situated with regard to their servant girls. In Germany a servant girl is able to do everything in the household. She even shines her master's shoes. That gives the woman of the house a chance to go out with ease and comfort. In this country, as I understand it, your servants are mostly specialists; the cook cannot make the beds and the chambermaid cannot cook. I am referring now only to families of moderate means. In the very wealthy families in Germany the servants have their specialties as well as here.

"No, I am not ready yet to write a great American novel. I want to see a little more of American life—many more of your frank, handsome, American women."

YOUNG QUARLES MARRIED.

Senator's Son Weds Former Miss Mactavish, Twice Divorced.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., March 31.—Private advices have been received here that Mrs. Anita Carroll Kofoed was quietly married this week in London to Edward L. Quarles, son of ex-United States Senator Quarles of Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Quarles will go to Hamburg, where the bridegroom represents the Standard Oil Company.

The present marriage is the third matrimonial venture of the bride, who was Miss Anita Mactavish, daughter of the late Francis Mactavish, and a member of one of the best-known families in Maryland. About seven years ago, shortly after being introduced in society, she married the late George Howard Elder of the Green Spring Valley. She got a divorce from him, and decided to go upon the stage, making her début at the Lyceum Theatre as a member of the regular stock company.

Last May, during a tour out West, she met and married Anton Dahl Kofoed, a Danish musician, playing with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. While abroad the couple fell in with Mr. Quarles, who was a friend of Mrs. Kofoed when he represented the Standard Oil Company in Baltimore. A second divorce resulted, with Mr. Kofoed as the complainant, with the wedding of yesterday as the sequel. Mrs. Quarles has one son by her first marriage, Carroll Mactavish Elder, about 6 years old, now being cared for in Harford County.

Tuskegee's 25th Anniversary.

Special to The New York Times.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., March 31.—The officers of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute are making extensive preparations for the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the school on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday next. Andrew Carnegie, President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard University, Secretary William H. Taft, Robert C. Ogden, President of Southern Education Board, and Seth Low are expected to be present. Mr. Ogden, who is President of the Board of Trustees, plans to bring from New York a special train with 112 persons as his guests.

LAND FOR GRANT'S TOMB.

Patriotic Societies Petition for It—Gen. Horace Porter's Views.

More than seventy Grand Army posts, including 100,000 old soldiers, have sent in a petition to the Board of Estimate, asking that the ground between 116th and 122d Streets and Riverside Drive and Claremont Avenue, be made part of Riverside Park, in order that Grant's Tomb may not be shut out from view by apartment houses. Other societies, including the Colonial Dames, Daughters of the American Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution, sent in a similar request early in the week.

Gen. Horace Porter, in discussing the plan, said:

"Ninety thousand citizens contributed toward the Grand Monument Fund of $600,000. So much of the work was secured at cost that the tomb really represents an outlay of about $800,000. The tomb was built here because the city had been so prolific with promises as to beautifying its surroundings. These promises, however, were not carried out. Enough ground was reserved on which to place the tomb, but no provision was made, when it could have been done economically, for the prevention of buildings of unrestricted height, which would mask the tomb, which is of an architecture which depends largely upon a clear space and the surroundings in general.

"Having retained the body at Riverside, and the tomb having been built by private subscription, it would seem that the City Government is doubly pledged to add every reasonable beauty to the surroundings.

"The property in question was the scene of an early and important battle in the Revolution, the only battle of that entire struggle that was fought on Manhattan Island. If a portion of this ground, hallowed by these memories, should be made into the contemplated park, no doubt a suitable monument would some day be built to commemorate the heroes who there fell in defense of American liberty."

GIFT TO YALE MUSEUM.

Dr. T. Mitchell Prudden Presents His Archaeological Collection.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 31.—Dr. George Grant McCurdy, curator of the anthropological section of Peabody Museum at Yale, announces the gift by Dr. T. Mitchell Prudden, Yale, 1872, of New York, of the great archaeological collection made by him in South Utah, Southern Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona.

The material is connected with the ancient cliff dwellers and Pueblos of that region, together with some objects obtained from modern Pueblos. It includes textile fabrics, pottery, ornaments, and objects connected with religious worship. Along with the collection Dr. Prudden gives his field notes, a valuable map of the region, and a gift of new cases.

LIVELY WEEK AT PINEHURST.

Third Gymkhana the Most Attractive Outdoor Event.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., March 31.—"Everybody pleasantly occupied out of doors," tells the story of the week, and an exceptionally large influx of visitors has swelled the numbers of those already here to enjoy the delights of Spring.

The most important outdoor event was the third gymkhana. Among the more ludicrous of the new features was the nightcap and pajama race, contestants riding to a given point, dismounting, donning a nightcap and pajama coat, remounting, and returning to the starting point. Another new feature was the water-carrying contest, in which participants rode to a given point and back, carrying a small pail of water extended at arm's length, both the time made and the steadiness in carrying the water being considered in making the awards. The doughnut race afforded no end of amusement, participants riding to doughnuts suspended on a line, which they were required to grasp with the teeth without the aid of the hands, and return to the starting point with the doughnuts in their mouth, the first in winning. There were also button sewing, pursuit and sack contests. George L. Moorman of Philadelphia, Miss Naumberg of New York, and Mrs. Leonard Tufts of Boston divided the honors of the afternoon.

Among the most delightful of the social affairs was a "championship" bridge tournament, which occupied several evenings of the week at The Carolina. Through an arrangement whereby North and South were stationary and East and West progressed after playing four hands, every couple met every other couple in equal play, and an excellent test was the result. Mrs. H. S. Denny and D. McK. Lloyd, both of Pittsburg, carried off the first prizes with a total of 1,432 points, G. S. Dexter of Boston and Henry Lloyd of Pittsburg, taking second with 1,290.

Late New York arrivals include Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Baldwin, Lathrop E. Baldwin, Mrs. J. R. Mix, and Miss Julia Mix; Mr. and Mrs. Henry White, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Rogers and Miss Marion Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Mason, Dr. and Mrs. S. F. Kimball, Dr. and Mrs. D. B. Bogart, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. George F. C. Booss, Mr. and Mrs. Rydan Billings, Mrs. N. T. Hemingway, Mrs. Sue Cusick, Mrs. M. W. Henderson, Miss Humphrey, P. W. Holden, and Owen Roberts.

Late New Jersey arrivals include Miss M. W. Herrick and Miss C. A. Van Houten, Paterson; Mr. and Mrs. F. Pring, East Orange; Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Ward, Rahway; Mrs. William West, Camden; E. P. Hanks, Jersey City.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Mrs. Root and Miss Root, wife and daughter of the Secretary of State, will leave early next week for a stay of a few days at their Summer home at Clinton, N. Y. Mrs. Root expects to spend the month of June at Clinton, and, with Miss Root, sail with the Secretary for South America early in July.

The Governor General of Canada and Lady Grey are expected to arrive in Washington early next week for a short visit at the British Embassy. The Ambassador and Lady Durand have issued dinner invitations in their guests' honor for Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jules Vatable, Miss Katharine Cameron, Gilbert Franklyn and H. S. Page, all of New York, have joined the house party now being entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont.

Rear Admiral and Mrs. Bradford have issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Katherine Bradford, to Prof. Howard Angell Brockway, formerly of New York but now a member of the Faculty of the Peabody Institute, Baltimore. The ceremony will take place April 17 at St. Margaret's Church.

Mr. and Mrs. George Whitfield Brown entertained at dinner this evening in honor of Miss Marie McKenna and Davenport Brown, whose marriage takes place on April 25.

The wedding of Miss Edith Harlan Child, granddaughter of Justice and Mrs. Harlan, and Erastus Corning, Jr., of Albany, N. Y., will take place on April 17, the ceremony to be performed in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Miss Adola Greely, daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Adolphus Greely, will be married on April 24 to the Rev. Charles Lawrence Adams of East Hampton, Mass. The ceremony will take place in St. John's Episcopal Church here.

One of the most interesting of the Spring weddings will be that of Miss Nannie Hume, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hume of this city, and Lieut. Harry C. Jewett, United States Army, on April 18, in the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Ascension.

Mrs. John Stearns announces the engagement of her daughter, Priscilla, to Mr. Howe Totten of this city. The wedding will take place on May 16 in St. John's Episcopal Church.

THE 'RUBBERNECK' AUTO IS AN EAST SIDE HIT

Blacksmith Asen Brings 'Em Uptown to See the Sights.

THE STARED AT NOW STARE

The Amateur Megaphone Man Was Shy on Fifth Avenue Facts but Long on Imagination.

Aaron Asen, east side blacksmith, inaugurated yesterday his season of reversible sightseeing. For some time Asen, who lives at 121 Broome Street, has been stared at, with other east siders, by the occupants of the "rubberneck wagons" from uptown. It occurred to him that there was no reason why the east side shouldn't stare at the folks uptown. So he got capital, and the capital got Aaron Asen a "rubberneck wagon"—not so imposing, perhaps, as the ones the uptown people ride in, but efficient for all that.

"We'll give them some of their own medicine," said Asen. "The people of the east side are just as interested in the people of the west side as they are in us. Our people want to look at the rich in their carriages and houses in Fifth Avenue, and I undertake to say that as soon as the weather gets pleasant there won't be an empty seat on my wagon, which will make about three round trips a day."

The weather yesterday was not particularly cheerful for the inauguration of the east side sightseeing trips. It was so cold that the first trip on the schedule was postponed from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M. By that time Asen had sold enough tickets to fill a dozen autos. The crowd which started was composed of young men and of matrons anxious to give their babies an airing.

The start was made from 127 Delancey Street, where Asen has established his ticket office. There was some delay even at 1 o'clock, on account of the illness of the professional megaphone man. When it was learned that he had developed a sudden attack of tonsilitis an amateur promptly disguised himself and said he would do the talking. What he did not know about the rich and about New York would fill a book, but he had a fertile imagination.

When the auto left Delancey Street it was followed by a vociferous mob of small boys. About three thousand persons saw the start and raised a cheer.

The wagon went through many east side streets, where cheering was the order of the day, and then chugged into the Bowery, where pedestrians stopped and apparently tried to figure out what kind of craft the Asen automobile was.

Broadway was puzzled, too, but Broadway eventually broke into a broad grin. It apparently appreciated a joke, even on itself. It was about here that the megaphone man became talkative.

"Lad-ies and gentle-men," said he, "we are now approaching that thoroughfare which outvies Rome in pomp; Athens in splendor, and old Madrid in color. Before you is—Broadway!"

Fifth Avenue stirred the most interest in the east side folk. The orator waxed eloquent and reckless. He picked out any house he pleased, and in giving it "a local habitation and a name" he gambled with the list of the "400."

"On our left, ladies and gentlemen," he cried, "we see the residence of a millionaire, the same who is responsible for the raise in the price of noodles. Any of you women who have occasion to make noodle soup will grasp the significance of my remarks.

"On your right and a little ahead is the residence of Mr. Morgan. The gentleman now leaving the front door is Mr. Carnegie, who wishes to change the spelling of noodles. He believes that by dropping an 'o' the price also may drop a little. I would draw your attention now to one of our justly celebrated mounted police, at this precise moment dismounted and feeding his Rosinante with lump sugar.

"We are now entering Central Park. Here, ladies and gentlemen, one may hide one's face from the sickening sights of plutocracy and sordid wealth in the bosom of Mother Nature. Straight ahead is the statue of Dan-i-el Web-ster, author of that famous phrase: 'All of the people like to be fooled some of the time.' The carriage now passing contains Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, in close conversation with Mrs. Roosevelt, wife of our illustrious President."

The tour led through the Park to Columbus Circle, and down Broadway into Times Square, where a short halt was called to let the east side people see the matinée crowds.

The home-coming of the east side sightseers was a triumph. There was much cheering and as Asen, who is his own chauffeur, stepped from the auto, he was met by his wife, who gasped:

"Well?"

"It's a go!" whispered Aaron Asen.

"And now, ladies and gentlemen," said the megaphone man, "our next trip will be at 4 P. M., and from now on each day at 10 A. M., 1 P. M., and 4 P. M. The fare is fifty cents, but for the first week it will be twenty-five. Bring all your friends and don't forget what the poet says:

> Alas, in every mortal state,
> Some anxious thought is found,
> And even dwellings of the rich
> With cares are compassed round.

Then the sale of tickets began again.

SPRING DAYS AT OLD POINT.

Many New Yorkers at the Virginia Resort—Dinners and Bridge.

Special to The New York Times.

FORT MONROE, Va., March 31.—Many New Yorkers have arrived at the Chamberlin to enjoy the Spring days. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Lyman of New York are now at the Chamberlin. They were journeying northward from St. Augustine, Fla., and made a short stop in Richmond.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Denny of New York were the host and hostess at a dinner given at the Chamberlin on Monday evening. Their guests were Mr. and Mrs. De Yarmett and Miss Sherman of the Hampton Institute. Miss Denny is here with her father and mother and was also present at the dinner. The table was decorated with yellow daffodils.

In acknowledgment of many courtesies received during the four years that he has been stationed here, Dr. J. W. Boggess, United States Navy, on Sunday evening gave a dinner to which close friends were bidden. The table was laid in the dining room of the Chamberlin. Mrs. Chamberlin, Mrs. Carter, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Scarborough, Miss Sullivan, and Mrs. Brown were the ladies present; Capt. William Chamberlaine, Capt. Carter, Capt. Francis N. Cooke of the army; Mr. Adams and Dr. Collins and Lieut. Houston Eldredge of the navy were the men guests. Dr. Collins will succeed Dr. Boggess here on the quarantine boat Jamestown. Miss M. C. and Miss A. L. O'Neill of New York are stopping at the Chamberlin, and with them is Miss Rica Durkees.

Some New York City guests at the Chamberlin are:

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Root, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Austin Bates, Miss M. C. O'Neill, Miss A. L. O'Neill, F. D. Carruther, L. D. Levy, J. Kaufman, Mr. and Mrs. J. Stewart Emmons, Mrs. Robert Stewart, Mrs. F. W. Crocker, R. S. Crocker, Mrs. E. A. Walsh and daughter, Geo. F. Pratt, Mrs. H. E. Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Ross, Mr. David Ross, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Montgomery, Chas. H. Park, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Geo. N. Gardiner, Jr., L. C. Smith, Mrs. Edward V. Kamniski, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Rosenberg, Mr. and Mrs. L. Martic, Joe Mac Roe, Mrs. B. M. Forest, H. T. Driscott, Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Kenyon, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. L. Adams, F. R. Story, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Law, F. N. Dodd, Miss Cary, Miss Louise Cary, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Cooper, C. G. Codman, John Bartlett, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Smith, Edwin Coming, F. W. G. Coming.

ORLENEFF'S WOES ENDING.

Legal Troubles Clearing Up—New East Side Theatre for Russian Actors.

Paul Orleneff and his company of Russian actors seem nearly out of their troubles as the result of a conference held yesterday morning at the offices of Albert Kerr, 60 Wall Street. The final arrangements will not be made for a day or two, but it is expected that Dr. Max Davidoff will release Orleneff from the contract under which the actor was brought to this country and that, with the aid of certain friends the Russian company will be established in a new theatre on the east side, where they will have a far better chance of success than in the hall on First Street.

At the conference Paul Orleneff was represented by Owen Johnson, and Dr. Davidoff was accompanied by his lawyer, Moses Feltenstein. It appeared that the Russian actor was bound to act only in such places as Dr. Davidoff approved until the amount expended in bringing the company from Russia and in establishing the theatre was paid off. But, as Dr. Davidoff has no house in which Mr. Orleneff can play, it appears impossible to hold him to the strict letter of his bargain.

In the course of the disastrous enterprise Dr. Davidoff had, with Orlenoff himself and Dr. Abel Breslou, signed a number of notes, which it seemed likely that he would have to meet alone. His personal liabilities on this score are expected to amount to $5,300, and he reckons that, with the money he expended from his own pocket and with the subscriptions from the society that was organized among the Russian colony to establish the theatre, the total losses were $12,500.

Certain friends of Orlenoff, among whom Miss Smalley and Miss Helen Dunham are prominent, have agreed to give the actors a new start. Dr. Davidoff will be indemnified by the payment of a percentage of the receipts, and it is believed that by economy and good management the company may be made to pay. It will be cut down.

One of the extravagances of the old régime was the importation of a much larger number of actors than was necessary. They are engaged till May 20, but a number of them are anxious to return home and will willingly go in return for their passage money.

The claim of Joseph Goldstein for $1,500 from Orleneff, personally, has been satisfied. It appears to have been the result of misunderstandings on both sides through having to transact business through interpreters, and has now been arranged to the satisfaction of all concerned.

N. C. GOODWIN HERE AGAIN.

Miss Carlisle of His Company, Homesick, Will Go Back.

N. C. Goodwin, the actor, arrived home after a brief season in London, on the Hamburg-American liner Amerika yesterday afternoon. He has not yet decided exactly when he will resume his place on the American stage.

Also on the Amerika was Miss Alexandra Carlisle, a young English actress, who was prominent in Mr. Goodwin's support in London. She said that it was her first trip to America and that she was so homesick that she was going home on the next boat.

Jerome's Playlet Given for Charity.

Jerome K. Jerome's one-act play, "Sunset," was presented last evening at the Berkeley Lyceum, under the auspices of the Junior Section of the Council of Jewish Women. The auditorium was well filled, and more than $1,000 was realized, which sum will be used for supply with ice a fountain built by the society last year. The patrons were the Rev. and Mrs. H. Pereira Mendes, Mr. and Mrs. William D. Sporborg, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua J. Lindo, and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Lichtenstein.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Charles Dillingham returned from Europe yesterday, after having completed arrangements whereby Fritzi Scheff will appear in London next Spring in "Mlle. Modiste."

At the one hundredth performance of "The Vanderbilt Cup," which takes place at the Broadway Theatre on April 9, souvenir mirrors will be distributed.

McIntyre and Heath in "The Ham Tree" will appear this week in Brooklyn at the New Montauk Theatre.

DEATH OF NOTED ENGINEER.

John C. Kafer Once Served with Dewey on the Old Kearsarge.

John Christian Kafer, a naval and mechanical engineer and a past President of the Engineers' Club, died at Trenton, N. J., last Friday. His death was unexpected, though his health had been poor for two or three years.

Mr. Kafer was born at Trenton, N. J., on Dec. 27, 1842. His father was a partner of John G. Stevens, at one time President of the United Railroad Companies of New Jersey. At the outbreak of the civil war Mr. Kafer was appointed Third Assistant Engineer in the Navy and ordered to the Ticonderoga. He served successively on this vessel, the Mackinaw, the frigate Minnesota, and the famous old Kearsarge, with which vessel he made a cruise to the coast of West Africa at the close of the war with George Dewey—then a Lieutenant Commander—as his executive officer. While on this cruise the Kearsarge encountered an epidemic of the yellow fever which cost many lives. Mr. Kafer recovered from his attack promptly.

His active service in the navy came to a close in 1885, after he had served as assistant to Commodore Loring when he was Engineer in Chief, and also to Admiral Melville. He served two terms as instructor at the Naval Academy, from 1868 to 1874, and from 1874 to 1878. Since 1885 Mr. Kafer has been identified with the Morgan Iron Works of this city, and the Quintard Iron Works. Within a month he had organized the consulting firm of Kafer, Mattice & Warren.

Mr. Kafer had been identified with the Engineers' Club since it was organized, and was its President from 1901 to 1904. It was largely through his efforts that the gift of $1,500,000 was secured from Andrew Carnegie for the United Engineering Building and the Engineers' Club, and he served as Treasurer of the Conference Committee on the joint project.

He was a manager of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, senior American member of the Institution of Naval Architects of Great Britain, a member of the American Society of Naval Engineers, the Society of Naval Architects and Engineers, and of the Army and Navy and the Players Club. The funeral will be at Trenton to-morrow.

HOTEL MEN ALL MOURN DEATH OF 'JIM' BRESLIN

FROM BELLBOY TO OWNER

Was of the Old School of Bonifaces, a Born Wit, and Never Forgot a Face—Left Large Fortune.

James H. Breslin died at 4 o'clock yesterday morning after an illness of a year at his apartments in the Hotel Wolcott. The immediate cause of his death was Bright's disease. Mr. Breslin was President of the Hotel Men's Association, and through his hotel enterprises was a National character. Every hotel and restaurant of any prominence was notified of the death of Mr. Breslin, with the result that on many buildings flags were at half-mast.

Old friends, on learning the news, hurried to the Wolcott to be certain that the news was true, and in the evening gathered in the Gilsey House to condole with one another and tell stories of their friend. They drank to his memory in silence more than once, and then talked of old days and old ways, and retold old stories of the dead man. They had laughed over these stories in the old days and ordered more wine.

Last night they looked at one another at the end of a tale, smiled pathetically, sipped of their drinks, not because they wanted to drink, but because it gave them a chance to collect themselves to look down into the glass instead of into the eyes of their chums. There was a vacant chair at the table in the café of the house, which "Jim" Breslin managed for thirty years.

Across the street, in the Hotel Breslin, the music was playing, people coming and going, but the employes, from the chief clerk down to the bootblack, looked like pall bearers, and the same was true at the Hotel Wolcott.

"Al" Smith, the dean of the corps of veteran friends of "Jim" Breslin, lifted his glass and said:

"In silence we drink to the memory of a friend and a big man. While he lived he never said a stupid thing. Outside of his stories, and they were merry ones—clean ones, too—he had the happy faculty of saying the right thing at the right time, and there was always the scent of humor in it like the bouquet of a fine wine. 'Jim' never could say anything that was not smart. It was not in him to be stupid. He never tried to be clever. He was born that way; so, here's to 'Jim.' God bless him."

Seven gray haired men lifted their glasses, sipped, and were silent for some minutes, when Matt. J. Ward broke the quietness to approve of what had been said before and to add that there was never a gentler man, nor a more charitable one. To have been one of "Jim" Breslin's employes and with a recommendation from him meant a job in any hotel in the United States and at once.

Mr. Ward remarked that after his very busy life it was fitting that their friend should have left a large estate. His two hotel interests in New York, Mr. Ward said, together with his holdings of stock in the Auditorium Hotel of Chicago and stock in New York banks, would surprise people when they learned the total legacies to his unmarried daughter and to the other children, Mrs. Charles B. Dana and Mrs. Grant Shepherd.

There was a little question as to the exact year in which their friend was born. Charles W. Shepherd of the Union League Club settled this, saying Mr. Breslin was born at Waterford, N. Y., in 1833.

"He was the most remarkable man I ever knew to remember a face and attach the right name to it," said Mr. Shepherd. "As a boy he was a Deputy Sheriff in his native place, and this gift of his served him well. While he was a lad he went to Saratoga as a bellboy in the old United States Hotel. It was his duty to go to the 'bus and help carry in the light baggage. One of the members of the club was saying this morning that Breslin had carried in his luggage, and that when he came back to Saratoga five years later and found the bellboy a clerk Breslin hailed him by name and reminded him of the day he had brought in his luggage.

"This gift of his went even further. He not only knew the individual, but his family, so that he could greet his guests asking after their families. Just how he could never make the mistake of asking for some one dead I never could make out, except that he gained information from every one he talked to and never forgot it or the person who gave it.

"On the day of his death, among his guests were the children and the grandchildren of old guests of his from the West and South. The day of the old boniface was not gone with him. You know, one likes to go under the roof of a man who was intimate with your grandfather, Cornelius Vanderbilt, the Rhinelanders, and most of the old families of New York were his friends.

"When the old United States Hotel was rebuilt Mr. Breslin personally raised the money from former guests, and the sum required was $700,000. This was in 1870. In the Fall of that year he took an interest in the old St. James Hotel. In May of the same year he became the President of the Gilsey House Company, being backed by William K. Vanderbilt and others. In those days it was thought that it was a fool's dream to erect so costly a hotel structure. He was also in 1872 at the head of the Metropolitan Hotel. He was lessee of the Grand Union Hotel in Saratoga at about this time.

"In 1876 he assumed charge of the Southern Hotel in St. Louis. This burned down, a hard blow to him, but he was at its head when it was rebuilt. For five years he was the lessee of the Brighton Beach Hotel, and in 1883 took charge of the Oriental and Manhattan Beach Hotels. He built the Breslin at Lake Hopatcong. From 1896 to 1900 he was at the head of the Edgemere Hotel. At the end of thirty years in charge of the Gilsey he gave it up and made possible the hotel across the way which bears his name and the Hotel Wolcott. He was the ideal hotel man."

JUSTICE SMITH'S FUNERAL.

A Notable Gathering of Jurists at the Services at Patchogue.

Special to The New York Times.

PATCHOGUE, L. I., March 31.—Following elaborate funeral services here to-day, the body of the late Supreme Court Justice Wilmot M. Smith was placed in a receiving vault at Cedar Grove Cemetery, to await the building of a family mausoleum there.

The funeral services were held in the Congregational Church, which was filled with persons who came to pay their last respects to the dead jurist. After the benediction permission was given those present to file by the coffin and look at the face of the dead man.

A special train came from New York with court officers and prominent members of the bar throughout the Second District, including representatives from Kings, Queens, Nassau, Suffolk, Richmond, Westchester, Rockland, Orange, and Putnam. They were received at the station by a committee of Patchogue citizens and members of the Suffolk County Bar. Most of the business houses in Patchogue were closed part of the day, flags were at half-mast, bells tolled, and funeral draperies were on many houses as well as on all the public buildings.

The front pews in the church were reserved for Judge Smith's relatives and intimate friends. In these pews were Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals Edgar M. Cullen, Justices Martin J. Keogh, Samuel T. Maddox, and Garret J. Garretson of the Supreme Court; Gen. Horatio C. King, ex-Surrogate Nathan D. Petty of Suffolk County, County Judge Walter M. Jaycox of Suffolk County, and Walter John B. Ketcham, who was Justice Smith's stenographer.

The service was opened by the Rev. Sherman W. Havens, pastor of the Congregational Church. The Rev. John W. Maynard, pastor of the Patchogue Methodist Episcopal Church, an intimate friend of Justice Smith, delivered the funeral oration. The Rev. S. V. Robinson, pastor of the Patchogue Baptist Church, pronounced the benediction.

OKONITE JUST CAPTURES OXNARD DINNER STAKES

August Belmont's Colt Runns Gamely to the Finish.

POTOMAC PURSE FOR LACKEY

Warning's First Victory for "Father Bill" Daly—Nutwood, at 50 to 1, in Lead at Benning.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—In a cold, penetrating rain, followed by a driving snowfall, the races were run to-day at Benning. The feature of the card, of course, was the Oxnard Dinner Stakes, for two-year-olds, at four and a half furlongs. There were fifteen subscribers to the event, and, of the colts entered, eleven faced the barrier. August Belmont's entry, Okonite, was played as if the race were already run. He closed at 3 to 5, and fully justified the confidence of his backers. He went to the front at the rise of the barrier and never was headed.

The start was bad, and Donna Elyria was left at the post. Okonite, Manila, and Lady Vera raced together around the big turn and entered the stretch with scarcely a length separating them. The finish was the closest of the meeting thus far, the three horses, in the order named, passing under the wire so close that a blanket would have almost covered them. The time, while not fast, was fairly good, in view of the condition of the track, which was fetlock deep in sloppy mud. The race was worth $950 to the winner.

Of importance only second to the Oxnard Stakes was the fifth race, for the Potomac Stakes. eBn Hodder opened as favorite, at 4 to 5, but Lackey, on his good race of last Monday, was so heavily supported that his odds fell from 2 to 6 to 5 at post time. Hodder's price went up, and the two closed as even favorites. Hodder was left at the post and simply galloped over the course. Morris took Lackey out in front at the start, and he never was in danger, finishing strong, easily stalling off Fancy Bird, which beat Sir Brinkley for the place.

Winchester won the first handily, Judge White, the favorite, not being even a contender. Sais seemed to those in the stand to have run third by a good head, but Echodale received the position by the judges.

A 50-to-1 shot, Nutwood, took the third event in the good time of 1:10. Fustian, made the favorite on the strength of the jockey, Radtke, did not figure in the result, Monte Carlo getting the place handily, with Cannon Ball third.

In the steeplechase the odds-on favorite, Tom Cogan, fell at the first jump. Lexy threw his jockey badly at the fourth hedge, and Tibo fell at the fifth. After that nothing in the race could head Kassil, which won easily from Croxton, with Black Death third.

"Father" Bill Daly scored his first win of the meeting in the sixth with Warning. In his last race Warning got a bad ride. There was some grumbling over it, as the horse was the favorite. To-day the stewards suggested a change of jockeys, and Miller was put up instead of Clare. Warning won on the bit without being extended, with Zany second and Tarlac third. Summary:

FIRST RACE.—Selling, for three-year-olds and upward; seven furlongs, Columbia course. Winchester, 95 pounds, (Kienck,) 8 to 1 and 3 to 1, won; Jack McKeon, 98, (Radtke,) 2½ to 1, and even, second; Echodale, 105, (C. Morris,) 15 to 1, third. Time—1:32. Ladsarion, Setauket, Sais, Cottage Maid, Lady Des Demona, and Judge White also ran.

SECOND RACE.—The Oxnard Dinner Stakes, for two-year-olds; four and a half furlongs, old course. Okonite, 109 pounds, (J. Jones,) 3 to 5 and out, won; Manila, 109, (T. Burns,) 10 to 1 and 4 to 1, second; Lady Vera, 109, (Shaw,) 3 to 1, third. Time—0:58. Donna Elyria left at the post. Mary Custis, Merry Lassie, Flip, Alegra, Piedmont Belle, Melting, and L'Orpheine also ran.

THIRD RACE.—Selling, for three-year-olds and upward; five and a half furlongs, Columbia course. Nutwood, 92 pounds, (C. Morris,) 50 to 1 and 20 to 1, won; Monte Carlo, 97, (Kienck,) 7 to 1 and 3 to 1, second; Cannon Ball, 108, (Shaw,) 4 to 1, third. Time—1:10. Plantagenet, Sheriff Bell, Royal Window, Hyperion, Fustian, Dixie Andrews, Gentian, and Riggs also ran.

FOURTH RACE.—Handicap steeplechase, for four-year-olds and upward; about two miles. Kassil, 138 pounds, (Slaughter,) 4 to 1 and 2 to 1, won; Croxton, 130, (Robinson,) 20 to 1 and 6 to 1, second; Black Death, 133, (Bowser,) 8 to 1, third. Time—4:28. Yama Christy and Howard Lewis also ran. Tom Cogan, Tibo, and Lexy fell.

FIFTH RACE.—Potomac Purse, for three-year-olds; six furlongs, Columbia course. Lackey, 108 pounds, (C. Morris,) 6 to 5 and out, won; Fancy Bird, 103, (T. Burns,) 4 to 1 and 4 to 5, second; Sir Brinkley, 106, (Miles,) 60 to 1, third. Time—1:17 4-5. Ben Hodder and Vernnese also ran.

SIXTH RACE.—For maiden three-year-olds and upward; seven and a half furlongs, Columbia course. Warning, 91 pounds, (Miller,) 1 to 2 and out, won; Zany, 108, (Robbins,) 5 to 1 and 4 to 5, second; Tarlac, 91, (P. Walsh,) 50 to 1, third. Time—1:40. Topright, Hanover, Hornpipe, Kolaneka, and W. W. Pierce also ran.

ODDS FOR BIG HANDICAPS.

First Future Books Open on Great Spring Races.

The first future betting books of the season on the three great handicaps of the New York racing year, the Brooklyn, Suburban, and Brighton Handicaps, have been opened in partnership by George C. Bennett, the Memphis turfman and poolroom keeper, and B. J. ("Kid") Weller of Cincinnati and Hot Springs, Ark., to be operated from an office maintained in Cincinnati.

The odds offered against the horses in the three races have been adjusted for the opening, and prices announced by the bookmakers stand through to-morrow, the odds, of course, being subject to change when the betting market is established. In the bookmakers' prospectus they announce their willingness to make a million-dollar book, and state that they intend to establish their Winter or future betting business as a permanent thing in turf speculation.

The first prices posted are figured close enough to leave no danger of financial injury to the bookmakers, the odds offered for the opening of the betting ranging from 6 to 1 against the favorite, Sysonby, in all the races up to 200 to 1 against the last chance outsiders in the Brooklyn and Suburban, and 100 to 1 against the outsiders in the Brighton.

Sysonby, top weight in the three handicaps, and at 6 to 1 in each event, is followed in the betting by Artful as second choice, the filly being quoted at 10 to 1 through the series of races. Burgomaster is equal choice with her at 10 for the Suburban and Brighton. Ram's Horn holds the place of equal second choice with Artful in the Brooklyn, but is 15 to 1 in the Suburban and 20 to 1 in the Brighton. The horses next in betting are Doctor Leggo, 12 to 1, and Hermis, Delhi, The Picket, Roseben, Tanya, and Phil Finch, 15 to 1 each in the Brooklyn; Security, 12 to 1, and Ort Wells, Oiseau, Agile, and Tanya, 15 to 1 each in the Suburban, and Security, Ort Wells, and Oiseau, 12 to 1 each, and Agile, Wild Mint, Tanya, Doctor Leggo, Ormondale, and Perverse, 15 to 1 each in the Brighton.

Columbia's First Lacrosse Game.

Columbia's 'Varsity lacrosse team met the alumni team in the first game of the season on South Field yesterday afternoon and had little difficulty in winning, finishing the contest with the score 12 to 1. The veterans were game from the start, but the youngsters had the advantage in not having so much superfluous avoirdupois and in having more practice. E. Stewart of the College of Physicians and Surgeons played the best game for the 'Varsity, scoring four goals. Haynes, a one-time 'Varsity player at Stevens, and Evans also played well. The line-up:

Varsity, 12.	Position.	Alumni, 1.
Saqui	Goal	Kebler
Algeltinger	Point	Kafka
Willis	Cover point	Barlow
Temple, Hill	First defense	Benjamin
Richards	Second defense	Ashley
Moore	Third defense	Castare
Adams	Centre	Coggeshall
Renner	Third attack	Reid
McKinlay	Second attack	Ray
Haynes	First attack	R. Adams
Evans	Outside home	Greschen
Stewart	Inside home	Moran

Referee—Charles Stewart. Time of halves—Twenty minutes.

OLYMPIC TEAM ARRIVING.

Western Contingent Expected To-day and the Boston Men To-morrow.

With the exception of the Boston contingent the American Olympic team to sail for Athens on Tuesday will be completed this morning. The four Western men coming from Chicago were expected to arrive last evening, but up to a late hour had not reported to Manager Halpin. They are expected to report this morning.

With the exception of the case of Martin J. Sheridan, whose ability to get leave to go to Athens is still uncertain, the last doubtful man was cleared up yesterday. D. A. Sullivan, who is going to compete in the all-around championship, has adjusted matters so that he can go with the team, and has reported as ready to start.

Joseph A. Forshaw, the St. Louis distance runner, who will be the American mainstay in the Marathon race, is here, and was out yesterday on the West Side track. For a man who four years ago was a third-class runner, with no pretense of style, he shows the most remarkable improvement. The ability he has recently shown is explained in the light of his change of form.

The four Westerners expected yesterday were Hugo Friend and J. J. Lightbody of the University of Chicago, A. B. Glover of Purdue University, and H. J. Bornemann, the Chicago Athletic Association diver. Bornemann's success in the recent swimming championships at the New York Athletic Club, when he won the diving title, marks him distinctly enough in the minds of New Yorkers.

There is some curiosity to see Friend and Glover perform, neither having ever competed in New York. Friend is a stocky built, well proportioned, and well developed chap, whose speed and agility take him over the hurdles in good form and good time, while his broad jumping style is hardly as good as Prinstein's. Collegians know him through his visit to the Pennsylvania relay championships last year. Glover, too, was at that meet the previous year. He is a lanky chap, rather angular, but well developed in those muscles peculiar to vaulters. It was he whom knowing ones first picked in the West, after Dvorak had failed, to make a new world's mark in the pole vault. Lightbody's physique and style are familiar to those who marked him especially when he came East last year, heralded widely and deservedly for his wonderful middle distance running.

There is considerable curiosity to see G. H. Tueryrouze, the New Orleans sprinter, who comes this morning. He is the first Southerner who has ever shown first-class ability in the sprints.

YACHT CLUB PROTESTS.

Formal Objection to Stringent Regulations Filed with Capt. Harris.

Formal protest was lodged yesterday by Assistant Secretary Williams of the New York Yacht Club with Supervising Inspector of Steam Vessels Capt. Ira Harris against the stringent Government regulations which the Inspectors propose to enforce against yacht owners in common with the ordinary traffic steamboat. The protest recites that the regulations are unnecessarily severe and a hardship upon private vessels and without the scope of the intention and spirit of the law. Various provisions were specifically recited wherein the law operated to the disadvantage of owners, but Capt. Harris declares that the law is the law and must be enforced irrespective of whether the boat be the property of the commercial concern engaged in traffic and carrying passengers or whether it be a private vessel carrying guests. Safety was the determining consideration, he declared, and not the question of revenue.

The law requires among other things that explosives may not be stored in the manner in which they are carried by power boats, that the Captains of the yachts must display their licenses conspicuously in the pilot houses, and that no person may enter the pilot house at any time who is not a regularly licenses pilot. The question of explosives is a serious one, and must be adjusted in some way, while to bar an owner from his own pilot house, for the reason that he does not possess a regular license, is matter of serious restriction to most yachtsmen. The display of licenses framed on the walls is a trivial matter that may be readily adjusted.

No solution of the trouble was reached yesterday, and another effort will likely be made this week to secure the alleviation of the conditions before the local Inspectors begin their annual inspection of pleasure craft for 1906.

YACHT DREAMER IS LAUNCHED

C. W. Lee's Power Boat Takes to the Water at City Island.

Charles W. Lee's handsome power yacht Dreamer took the water at City Island yesterday from Jacob's yard, where she has been building, in view of a distinguished attendance of personal friends of the owner and prominent yachtsmen. The boat was christened by Mrs. Charles W. Lee.

Among the guests of her owner were Commodore Alphonse H. Alker, Vice Commodore A. C. Clarkson, and Rear Commodore and Mrs. C. M. Gould of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, whose anchorage will be the Dreamer's home port; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Gwatmey, Jr., Mrs. C. F. Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. Elder Adams, the Misses Cone, Ira Parsons, E. C. Cone, Dr. Lee, Maurice Selar, Edward M. Wells, and Henry M. Gielow, her designer.

The craft is 61 feet over all, 54 feet 8 inches on the water line, 10 feet 9 inches beam, with 3 feet 6 inches draught, and equipped with a forty horse power Standard engine capable of developing a speed of eleven miles an hour. The boat is fitted as suited to her purpose, as a cruiser and Summer home for her owner, with a double stateroom, a main saloon, a generous forecastle and galley, and a good-sized engine room.

She will be enrolled in the New York as well as the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, and will probably accompany the New York cruise in August.

CASINO TENNIS TEAM WON.

Overwhelmed Seventh Regiment Experts Upon Armory Courts.

By remarkably acurate racquet work combined with strategical play the lawn tennis team of the Brooklyn Heights Casino yesterday administered defeat in four matches out of five against the team of the Seventh Regiment. The competitions were played on the fast board courts of the Seventh Regiment Armory, Sixty-sixth Street and Park Avenue, and only in one of the three singles contests was the regimental player able to win, William B. Cragin, Jr., defeating C. M. Bull, Jr., in straight sets.

The overwhelming victory of the Casino players was not expected in these matches in the armory. Upon the board floor the ball takes a long sliding bound that few but experienced men are successful in making fair returns. Both Frederick B. Alexander, the ex-Princeton expert, and Hugh Tallant, formerly of Harvard, knew the conditions of the courts and they scored in straight sets, the former against Robert T. Bryan, the Seventh Regiment champion, by the score of 6—2 and 7—5, while Tallant won over Arthur M. Lovibond by 8—6 and 6—3. Cragin's victory was also won in two sets at 6—3 and 6—4.

Rapid volleying and high lobbing provided the features of the doubles matches. Alexander and Tallant paired against Robert T. Ryan and Morris C. Clark in the first of the contests, and the rallies at the net in the first set were prolonged and only terminated by a passing or place shot. In this match the volleying strokes of Alexander surpassed those of any of the other men. It was his steadiness of play that resulted in the first set being won by the Casino team after deuce had twice been called. Bryan and Clark were unable to keep up the fast pace in the final set and lost the match at 8—6 and 6—1.

D. V. Robertson and L. P. Frothingham represented the Casino in the remaining doubles match against Lovibond and Cragin. Throughout both of the sets played this competition was closely scored. The Casino pair worked the ball skillfully along the side alleys for passes upon every opening and earned the majority of their points. Lovibond and Cragin used the lob effectively in the second set and from 5—3 games in favor of Robertson and Frothingham they forced the games to deuce at 5 all. The Casino pair came up to the net and by spirited play won the match at 6—4 and 7—5. The Casino team won seven matches out of the ten contests in the dual series.

One-Design Power Boats for Gravesend

The New York Canoe Club has arranged to build a class of one-designed power boats similar to that which furnished admirable sport for the Knickerbocker Yacht Club last year. The boats are from the design of John R. Brophy of the Bensonhurst Yacht Club and will measure 21 feet over all, 20 feet on the water line, 1 foot 9½ inches extreme draught, and 4 feet 10 inches beam. They will be equipped with a two-cylinder Touquet engine, two cycle, developing 5 horse power, and driving an 18-inch propeller, with 25.2 pitch.

The boats are built on a white oak keel, 6 inches wide by 1¼ inches thick, with a false oak keel extending two-thirds of the length of the boat from the forward end. There are two keelsons extending the entire length, and bilge stringers and sheer clamps. The frames are oak and spaced eight inches apart, with white cedar planking. The cockpit is roomy and comfortable.

From ten to twelve will be built.

FOOTBALL COMMITTEE ANNOUNCES NEW RULES

Revised Code Finally Adopted by the Murray Hill Meeting.

MANY NEW POINTS DECIDED

Arranging the Order and the Elimination of Contradictions to be Finished in Fortnight.

The American Intercollegiate Football Rules Committee finally passed all the changes to be made in the playing code for next year before adjourning at the Murray Hill Hotel last evening. During the next two weeks Walter Camp of Yale, editor, and William T. Reid, Jr., of Harvard, Secretary, will codify and arrange the code, inserting the various articles in the old rule. A meeting of the committee will be held at the Murray Hill Hotel on Saturday, April 14, at 10:30 A. M., at which this codification will be presented. The committee will then make such alterations as are necessary (1) in wording for clarification, but not in sense; (2) to remove inconsistencies, and (3) such other changes as may meet with the unanimous approval of those in attendance. The present code as passed was announced in toto.

There were a number of minor points that were settled in yesterday's meeting. The question of retaining the punt out after a touch-down for a try at goal was decided favorably. Had it been acted on adversely the goal posts would have been widened. The question of allowing the punter out to make a fake kick to draw his opponents offside before actually kicking was settled affirmatively. Other similar questions were decided.

The rule changes made provided for forward passes or kicks going over the goal line, for player or ball going out of bounds, defined the point where a fair catch was made, defined tripping, and similar points. These changes were as follows:

A forward pass by the side which does not put the ball in play in a scrimmage shall not be allowed.

A forward pass that goes over the goal line on the fly shall count as a touchback for the defending side.

A kick which goes over the goal line on the fly or after striking the ground before being touched by a player of either side shall also go as touchback for the defending side, except that a place kick or drop kick for goal that goes over the cross bar shall count as a score, and that a kickoff may be run out as formerly if it goes over the line.

When a player is out of bounds at the time the ball is put in play the ball is brought back and put in play again without penalty.

In kicking a goal the kicker may adjust the ball in the hands of the holder.

After the ball has gone out of bounds it shall be brought to the place where it crossed the side line, and the player must walk out with it with the referee, not less than five nor more than fifteen yards, and there put it down at the direction of the referee for a scrimmage.

On the new rule requiring men to be on the line of scrimmage the addition was made: "When a man is supposed to be on the line of scrimmage he shall be on the line of scrimmage in a bona fide way." The way will be specifically prescribed.

In the new rule defining holding, a definition is to be prepared for the words "the arms close to the body," indicating permissible blocking.

In the new rule regarding the mark for a fair catch it was provided: "That the mark of the catch shall be the spot at which the ball is actually caught."

To old Rule 21, requiring that the distance of a down be measured to the forward point of the ball, the addition was made: "And the referee shall not rotate the ball before measuring its forward point."

The remainder of the new provisions of the code formally approved follows:

Disqualification.—Striking with the fist or elbows, kneeing, kicking, striking the runner carrying the ball in the face with the heel of the hand on defense, meeting with the knee, striking with the locked hands by the men in breaking through and roughing the full back after he has knicked the ball shall be punishable by the disqualification of the guilty player for the rest of the game, and the offending team shall lose half the distance to its own goal line. We further recommend to the institutions playing under these rules that upon being disqualified a second time in a season the player shall be declared ineligible to play football for one year from the date of the second offense; also that this same penalty apply to the deliberate injury of an opponent, not including the offenses specified or included in the next succeeding section.

Unnecessary Roughness.—To include piling up, tripping, tackling the runner out of bounds, and all other acts of unnecessary roughness. The penalty shall be the loss of 15 yards.

Unsportsmanlike Conduct.—To include use of abusive or insulting language to opponents or officials. The penalty shall be suspension for the remainder of the game.

It shall be the duty of all officials to penalize for the above offenses.

Not more than six men shall be on the line of scrimmage on defense, the balance to be clearly behind the feet of all of the linemen and inside the men on the ends of the line.

Six men shall be on the line of scrimmage at all times; the five centre men shall always be on the line, except that one of the centre men may drop back at least five yards or more, another man to take his place in the rush line.

There shall be no tackling below the knees except by the men on the line of scrimmage on the defense, and of these, the two men on the ends of the line of scrimmage cannot tackle below the knees. The penalty for tackling below the knees shall be the loss of five yards.

A tackler who has tackled a runner above the knees shall not be penalized if after such a tackle his arms or hands slip down below the knees.

Neutral Zone.—In a scrimmage the holder of the ball shall place it flat on the ground and put it in play with its long axis at right angles to the line of scrimmage, and until the ball is put in play no part of any player, except of the man who puts the ball in play, shall be allowed to be ahead of the point of the ball nearest his own goal.

There shall be a referee, two umpires, and a linesman for each game.

Note.—In games of minor importance, or where the question of expense becomes important, the second umpire may be dispensed with at the discretion of the two institutions involved.

It shall be the duty of the referee to impose the penalty for violations of the rules reported to him by either of the umpires or the linesman.

The team on the offense shall gain ten yards in three downs or forfeit the ball.

One forward pass shall be allowed on a play provided the ball does not touch the ground before being touched by a player on either side—such a pass to be made by any man who was behind the line of scrimmage when the ball was put in play, except for the two men playing on the ends of the line. A direct lob over the line within the space of five yards on each side of the centre shall be unlawful.

The ball shall be considered dead when any portion of the person of the runner with the ball, except his hands or feet, touches the ground when in the grasp of an opponent.

Either Captain may ask that time be taken out three times during each half without a penalty. If, thereafter, however, either Captain requests that time be called, his side shall be penalized by a loss of two yards for each time unless the player be removed from the game. The distance to be gained and the number of the down in this case to remain the same as before. The referee may suspend play at any time at his own discretion without penalty to either side.

Holding.—The players of the side that has possession of the ball shall not hold, block, or otherwise obstruct the opponents, except with the body.

Holding or unlawful obstruction includes (a) grappling the opponent with the hands, (b) placing the hands upon an opponent to push him away from the play; (c) circling in any degree any part of the opponent with the arm; (d) any use of the arms to lift an opponent in blocking.

The only allowable use of the arm in blocking or obstructing an opponent is with the arms close to the body. A player running with the ball may ward off an opponent with the hands. The penalty for holding shall be the loss of fifteen yards.

Hurdling in the open field is prohibited. Such hurdling to consist of jumping over an opponent who is still on his feet. Hurdling through the line is prohibited. Hurdling the line is jumping or attempting to jump over a player on the line of scrimmage, with the feet or knees foremost, within the distance of five yards on either side of the point where the ball was snapped. The penalty for hurdling shall be the loss of fifteen yards.

A fair catch consists in catching the ball after it has been kicked by one of the opponents before it touches the ground, or in similarly catching a "punt out" by another of the catcher's own side, provided the player making the catch has signalled his intention of making a fair catch by raising his hand clearly above his head and takes not more than two steps after making the catch. It is not a fair catch if the ball after the kick was touched by another of his side before the catch. Opponents who are offside shall not in any way interfere with a player who has an opportunity for making a fair catch. Nor shall the player be thrown to the ground after such catch is made, unless he has advanced more than two steps after making the catch. The point where the catch is actually made shall be the mark, and the side making the catch may put the ball in play from that point either by a place kick or a scrimmage. If on a fair catch the catcher takes more than two steps after catching the ball, his side must put the ball in play by a scrimmage at a point five yards back of the mark of the catch.

Penalties which would carry the ball over the goal line shall carry the ball back to the one-yard line. Thereafter the distance to the goal line shall be halved for each offense.

The Referee shall decide whether a fair catch is made and whether there is interference with a fair catch, also whether the catcher is thrown.

The penalty for coaching from the side lines shall be the loss of 15 yards.

In a scrimmage the snapper back shall be entitled to full and undisputed possession of the ball. The opponent must neither interfere with the snapper back nor touch either him or the ball until the ball shall be actually put in play. The penalty for such interference shall be the loss of five yards.

If a kick or a forward pass goes out of bounds before crossing the opponent's goal line it shall belong to the opponents at the point where it crosses the side line. If, however, it strikes any player who is on side and then goes out of bounds it shall belong to the player who first obtained possession of it.

When a ball has been kicked, any player of the kicking side shall be on side as soon as the ball touches the ground. In case of such kicked ball thus striking the ground it shall not be kicked further or kicked at from its position on the ground or while bounding by any player on either side.

The length of the game shall be sixty minutes, divided into two halves of thirty minutes each, exclusive of time taken out. There shall be ten minutes intermission between the two halves.

Rule 23 of the old rules was amended to read:

A side which has made a touchback or safety must kick out from some point inside the twenty-five-yard line. The kickers' side must be behind the ball when it is kicked, and the opponents must be on the twenty-five-yard line, or nearer their own goal.

Exception—If the ball goes out of bounds before striking a player it must be kicked out over again, and if this occurs a second time it shall be given to the opponents as out of bounds on the thirty-five-yard line on the side of the field on which it went out of bounds.

Note—This abrogates the former provision on tries at goal on the first down within the twenty-five-yard line, and the provision for a second touchback occurring before four downs have intervened.

Rule 9 of the old rules referring to charging rescinded.

Rule 15 of the old rules referring to charging amended by substituting for the word "charging" wherever it occurs, the words "starting forward beyond the restraining line."

COURT TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP.

Jay Gould Favorite for Tournament Which Begins on Tuesday.

The annual tournament for the court tennis championship of the United States will be held this week on the court of the New York Racquet and Tennis Club. Jay Gould, who recently won the gold racquet at the Tuxedo Club, is a big favorite for the championship. Peter Latham, during his visit to this country, predicted a brilliant career for young Gould and pronounced him the most finished racquet expert in the country. Gould's victory over Charles E. Sands for the gold racquet proved this, and, although he will be required to meet the best amateur exponents of the game this week, he is expected to win out.

The entry list, while small, represents the playing strength of the East and includes: Jay Gould, Tuxedo Club; George R. Fearing, Joshua Crane, Jr., J. J. Caorns, and Austin Potter, Boston Tennis and Racquet Club, and Charles E. Sands, New York Racquet and Tennis Club. Sands is the National champion, and Fearing, with Scott, won the doubles racquet championship last week.

Jay Gould has been practicing at the New York Racquet and Tennis court during the past week, where his work has excited the admiration of George Standing, "Tom" Pettit, "Alf" Tompkins, and other noted professionals. Should he succeed in capturing premier honors, h will be the youngest player to hold the championship.

The matches, which will start on Tuesday, will be the best of five sets, and the drawings were made under the Bagnal-Wilde system, which resulted in George R. Fearing and Joshua Crane, Jr., drawing a bye. Jay Gould will face J. J. Cairns in the first match and Charles E. Sands will meet Austin Potter in the second. The sechedule of games folows:

April 2, at 1 P. M.—Jay Gould, Tuxedo Club, vs. J. J. Cairns, Boston Tennis and Racquet Club; at 3 P. M.—Charles E. Sands, New York Racquet and Tennis Club, vs. Austin Potter, Boston Tennis and Racquet Club; Joshua Crane, Jr., and George R. Fearing, Boston Tennis and Racquet Club, byes.

April 3, at 2:30 P. M.—Joshua Crane, Jr., vs. winner of Gould-Cairns match.

April 6, at 2 P. M.—Final Round—Winner of April 3 vs. winner of April 4.

WOMEN'S CHESS TOURNAMENT

First Open Competition Ever Held in America Planned for May.

For the first time in the history of chess in America, women are to receive an opportunity to compete in an open tournament during the second week in May. At the suggestion of a prominent member of the Women's Chess Club of New York, which has its headquarters in the Martha Washington Hotel, 29 East Twenty-ninth Street, invitations are being sent to the fair players of the country to compete in the tournament in this city for handsome prizes. Souvenirs are to be presented to all the competitors, irrespective of the scores they may make.

Among the better known women players here are Mrs. J. W. Showalter of Georgetown, Ky., wife of the former United States champion; Mrs. Harriet Worrall of Brooklyn, winner of the third prize in the international women's chess congress held in London several years ago; Mrs. F. W. Lynn of Chicago, a regular competitor in the championship tournaments of the Chicago Chess and Checker Club; Miss Rosa Jefferson of Memphis, Tenn.; Miss L. M. Seguin of New Orleans, Miss Estelle Whitney, formerly of the Brooklyn Heights Chess Club; and Miss Eva Brenzinger of Staten Island, daughter of the Treasurer of the Staten Island Chess Club.

After defeating Mordecai Morgan, Walter P. Shipley, and Herman G. Voigt in successive match games at the Franklin Chess Club of Philadelphia during the week, Geza Maroczy, the Hungarian chess champion, succumbed to S. Warren Bampton on Friday, this being the first defeat administered to the noted visitor in a serious encounter since his arrival in this country over a month ago.

A new organization, the Rice Chess Club, has sprung into existence with handsomely furnished headquarters at the Café Boulevard, Second Avenue and Tenth Street, this city. It was named in honor of Prof. Isaac L. Rice, the well-known chess patron, and will be the headquarters of the Rice Gambit Association during his absence abroad this year.

Mrs. Paterson Wins Golf Trophy.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., March 31.—In to-day's final round of the sixth annual United North and South championship tournament for women, Mrs. Myra D. Paterson of Englewood defeated Miss Julia R. Mix of Baltusrol by two up on the home green after a pretty contest. Miss Mix was five down at the turn, but she rallied coming in, reducing the score to dormie one on the seventeenth, but lost the match by seven strokes to five on the eighteenth green. A large and enthusiastic gallery followed the match. A big field of entries is assured for next week's championship tournament, which beigns Monday.

Yachts and Yachtsmen.

William Swan has bought from Howard Willets the racabout Rana. He has changed her name to Cedeux, and she will be sailed by his wife in all the Sound races. Mrs. Swan is one of the cleverest yachtswomen in New York waters, and is emply able to hold her own against the men competitors.

The Wollaston Yacht Club is to have a "kitten" class this year. Small one-design catboats they are, built from designs by F. W. Green, 18 feet over all, 16 feet 7 inches water line, with 400 square feet sail spread. They resemble closely the Indian Harbor cats designed by Morgan Barney. Seven are to be built for delivery May 30.

Aemilius Jarvis, the well-known Canadian yachtsman and skipper, has bought a Hollis Burgess launch for the Royal Canadian Yacht Club of Toronto. She is equipped with a Murray & Tragurtha engine. Commodore E. H. Nichols of the same club has bought a 40-foot launch designed by Theodore D. Wells and equipped with a Lozier motor.

E. Walter Clark has bought the sloop Bat, owned by Charles Francis Adams 2d, for local racing.

Gen. Charles J. Paine's new 21-foot racer has been launched by Burgess & Packard and promises to be speedy. She is to race against the Crane boats and the Barnacle, as well as the new Herreshoff Buzzard's Bay class. She measures 39 feet over all, 21 feet water line, 8 feet beam, and 5½ feet draught.

Lawley has finished the speed launch he is building for Charles W. Foss. She is 33 feet over all, 30 feet water line, 5 feet 5 inches beam, and 2 feet draught. She will carry a twenty-five horse power engine, Standard, that will develop twelve miles an hour speed.

Still another Lipton Cup yacht is ordered. Fred Lawley has been commissioned to design a 21-footer for Milwaukee interests.

The Seawanhaka-Corinthians approved the racing rules in special meeting Friday night. The Larchmont Yacht Club approved them at a special meeting last night, completing the list of clubs in New York required to make them uniform for New York waters.

The Morgan Barney-C. D. Mower Lipton Cup boat, building at Jacob's yard for a Chicago syndicate, is progressing rapidly, and will shortly be shipped West.

G. B. Hopkins's new auxiliary yawl will be named Sieglinde.

Jacob's yard is building a 74-foot twin screw power boat for Noah Palmer.

Thomas W. Slocum's steamer Cayuga is being overhauled and will be in commission in a fortnight.

J. J. O'Donohue's sloop Alys, J. J. Flake's power boat Adria, and S. E. Vernon's sloop Vuran II. are overhauling at Jacobs.

WEST END AUTO BILL MEETS LITTLE FAVOR

Action of A. C. A. Governors Likely to Cause Its Rejection.

MANY LEGAL COMPLICATIONS

L'Hommedieu Bill Providing for Taxation by Weight Will Become a Law on June 1.

Automobile legislation in this State has never been so complicated as at the present time. More bills have been introduced into the Legislature than in any preceeding year and the final hearing next Wednesday in Albany is expected to be both lively and interesting. The decision of the Board of Governors of the Automobile Club of America to support the L'Hommedieu bill, which deals entirely with the taxation of motor vehicles, was a fruitful topic of discussion yesterday among automobilists who have been anxiously watching the fate of the Stanley bill, which provides for a general speed rate of twenty miles an hour under reasonable conditions throughout the State.

As the Stanley bill had been drawn up by a committee appointed by the Club Governors and then submitted to the West End Association for suggestions it had been supposed that before the bill came to an actual vote the Governors would unite firmly in its support. This seemed to be the case last week before the preliminary hearing on Wednesday. At the conference held at that time in Albany, it was conclusively shown, however, that the great majority of clubs thoroughout the State were opposed to additional legislation dealing with speed regulations, preferring to have the present law remain in force another year.

This tendency was discussed at length by the Governors of the Automobile Club of America last Friday night, and in view of the apparent impossibility of securing unanimous approval no attempt will be made by the club to secure the passage of the bill. It therefore devolves entirely upon the West End Association to support the law, thus occasioning a still more peculiar condition of affairs, in that an association hitherto noted for its opposition to automobiles is standing sponsor for the most liberal automobile law ever introduced into the New York Legislature.

John C. Coleman, counsel for the West End Association, said yesterday that while he was somewhat surprised at the recent action of the A. C. A. Governors, he was by no means discouraged.

"There is no knowing what the outcome may be on Wednesday," said Mr. Coleman. "More changes may be made by that time. I can show the legislators that the L'Hommedieu bill will entail a heavier expense upon the State to enforce the taxation requirements than will be the case with the Stanley bill. The latter bill provides for all the features of the L'Hommedieu bill and many more. Some prejudice has been aroused over the creation of an automobile commission, but its members will serve without salary, and its annual expense for clerical service will hardly amount to more than $10,000. The L'Hommedieu bill provides that the work shall be done by the Secretary of State, but his office is already so overburdened that a special automobile department would undoubtedly have to be established to take charge of the registry of machines and their taxation."

The L'Hommedieu bill, as it has been amended, provides that all automobiles shall pay a registry fee of $1 and a license or tax of $1 for every 500 pounds' weight. This is to go into effect June 1; all cars that are now registered will not be required to pay an additional fee. When it was proposed last year to tax automobiles, owners of motor cars stated that they would be willing to pay a reasonable tax if the money so obtained could be appropriated for the benefit of good roads. These principles have been embodied in the present bill. As there are now about 25,000 automobiles registered in the State, the tax on each car on an average of 2,000 pounds will be $4, thereby bringing in a revenue for good roads of $100,000.

The Coxe bill, which permits an automobilist when arrested to deposit a bond executed by a fidelity or surety company as bail for his appearance in court, has already passed the Assembly, and, as it has been universally approved, will become a law. This and the L'Hommedieu bill, therefore, are likely to be the only ones amid the batch of bills now in Albany that are likely to come before the Governor for his signature.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

The Automobile Club of America will join with the Aero Club of America in tendering a reception to Count Henry de la Vaulx, the Parisian aeronaut, next Tuesday night at the clubhouse, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street. Count de la Vaulx is Vice President of the Aero Club of France, and he will describe some of his balloon experiences of the last seven years. His talk will be illustrated with lantern slides and vitagraph pictures.

The New York Motor Club has a membership of 160, and, judging from the number of applications that are constantly coming in, Secretary A. B. Tucker believes the 200-mark will be reached in a short time. A special luncheon service for the members has recently been arranged at the Hotel Cumberland, Broadway and Fifty-fourth Street, where the club has rooms.

Miss Dorothy Rice, daughter of Isaac L. Rice, donor of the University Chess Cup, which is competed for annually by cable, is said to be the only woman in New York who rides a motor cycle. She is still in her teens, and uses a 1¾ horse power machine. She has just become a member of the Federation of American Motorcyclists.

At the annual meeting of the Automobile Club of Great Britain and Ireland, held early this month, it was reported that the membership is 2,840. The club is conducting a number of experiments, particular attention being devoted to the dust nuisance and unnecessary smoke emission, matters of vital automobile interest, which might well be considered here.

One of the prominent characteristics of all the automobile shows held this year has been the large number of commercial vehicles shown. The steady improvement that has been made in these cars has led to their adoption for business purposes by scores of new firms, and both gasoline and electric trucks are being ordered, in some cases faster than they can be turned out of the factory.

What is confidently looked on as a record for 1906 automobiles for this season of the year is that made by Edward Richards, who has just returned to Buffalo from England after a trip that has lasted ten weeks. Richards took a Thomas car last October and ran it in Buffalo. When the New York Automobile Show began it was shipped here. It was then used in a number of demonstrations in different cities, including Rochester, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Philadelphia, and Boston. At the end of the Boston show the odometer showed that the car had traveled 18,503 miles in the five months, an average of a little over 3,701 miles a month, or over 120 miles a day for five months. Richards will take his car to the Toronto show.

The new Panhard building, at Broadway and Sixty-second Street, contains 23,000 square feet of floor space. The building is four stories in height. In the basement are washstands and seven pits; on the ground floor are the show room with space for ten models, a motor-testing room and the offices of Andre de Magnin, the sales manager. On the second floor are the general offices and a shop in which all Panhard parts are kept in stock. A general workshop, a room for storage of tires, and chauffeurs' quarters occupy the third floor. The whole of the fourth floor is used as a machine shop.

All hotels and garages that gain a place on the official list of the American Automobile Association will be named and referred to in the route schedules and programmes published by the association during the year and in replying to inquiries about touring.

The demand for good automobile drivers is still apparent, especially in New York. In spite of the commendable work done by the automobile schools and the constant output of drivers from the factories, New York dealers say the supply is not nearly equal to the demand at the beginning of the touring season.

The Automobile Club of America is considering plans for several other tests to be held this season in connection with the efficiency test announced last week for which only two gallons of gasoline will be allowed for each car. Several plans have been presented to the governors, and definite action will probably be taken within a few days.

I. C. Kirkham, export agent for the Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Car Company of Tarrytown has just returned from a trip through Mexico, Cuba, and the West Indies. Mr. Kirkham states that the agency for the City of Mexico has been placed with the largest automobile dealers there, who conduct a large garage.

Recognition of the utility of electric carriages is demonstrated by the recent purchase by George L. Carnegie, a nephew of Andrew Carnegie, of seven Pope-Waverley electric cars of different types for use at "Plum Orchard," an island off the Florida coast at Fernandino, which is owned by the Carnegie family. The vehicles include three speed road wagons, a twelve passenger omnibus, an eight passenger break, a surrey, and a combination truck and passenger car. All of the machines are handsomely finished.

Grand Circuit Meet for Cleveland.

Harry K. Devereux, one of the leading amateur drivers in the country and an influential member of the Cleveland Driving Park Association, of which H. M. Hanna is President, is quite confident that Cleveland will have a Grand Circuit meeting this year. Of course there will be no pool selling, but it is believed that from $15,000 to $20,000 can be raised by subscriptions, which would insure a successful meeting at the Glenville track.

According to Mr. Devereux, the purses will range from $1,000 to $3,000. It is the intention to hold five races a day, best two in three heats. For the fast classes $3,000 will be hung up instead of $2,000, as heretofore. Mr. Devereux contends that the association cannot make any money without auction pool selling, but with the amount raised by subscription the promoters would come out about even. Cleveland is still a member of the Grand Circuit, but did not apply for dates at a meeting of Stewards in this city.

NEW YACHTS BUILDING PROMISE KEEN RACING

SCHOONER OUTLOOK BRIGHT

There are eighteen boats building for the Sonder Klass to contest in the German-American races for the Roosevelt Cup. E. A. Boardman and Nat Herreshoff have the bulk of the work, Boardman being especially favored because of his success with the Seawanhaka International Challenge Cup winner, Manchester, and other small boats. Boardman is to build five yachts, Herreshoff four, and Crowninshield three, while the others are divided, Burgess and Packard building one, Small Brothers one, William Gardner one, Clinton H. Crane one, and Cox & Stevens one.

The personnel of the men entering the class is surrounded with an unwonted mystery. The New York men building are Trenor L. Park and H. O. Havemeyer, and a third, whose name is held a profound secret by Cox & Stevens. Reginald Boardman, Charles Francis Adams, second, and Commodore Brewer of Manchester are three of the Boardman owners. Robert W. Emmons, second, F. M. Sears, and Thomas J. Paine are three of the Herreshoff owners, but the remainder are unknown.

The building work at the various yards is progressing. Herreshoff is understood to have promised Queen, the Maxwell schooner, for June 1, and the Clark sixty-footer for the same date. It is probable that the Queen will not appear in races until July 4, making her initial bow in the race for the Colt Cup at Larchmont on July 4 against F. F. Brewster's Elmina and Arthur F. Luke's Corona. These boats are sought eagerly by the Eastern Yacht Club for its ocean race, starting from New London June 30 and running to Marblehead, but the Larchmont officials are pretty confident of having them at their race.

It is also probable that L. J. Callanan's new Eclipse will make her début that day. She is scheduled for delivery May 15, and is expected to be pretty able. She will have her work cut out for her against the smaller schooners, several of which are being altered with the idea of making an active campaign. This is particularly true of Robert Olyphant's Verona and James B. Ford's Katrina. Charles Smithers's Muriel and J. M. Richmond's Valmore are also likely to do more active racing than for several seasons.

The schooner Mavis, owned by William M. Lovering, is also likely to do more racing in New York waters, since she has been sold to Derbin Horne. Although enrolled before in the New York Yacht Club fleet, she only raced in the cruise, being a Boston boat.

The appearance of the Clark sloop will be awaited with keen interest. She is expected to race at the Atlantic Yacht Club annual regatta on June 12 for the first time. She will meet the new Gielow designed Effort, owned by F. M. Smith. The racing of these two is expected to be the most interesting on the Sound. Gielow is plainly staking high hopes on beating the Herreshoff boat. Should he do so there are likely to be some interesting developments.

Two days later these two will get their first opportunity to race against the old 60-footers, Weetamoe and Neola, in the New York Yacht Club annual regatta. If the new boats are as much superior as expected it will be a great triumph for the rule, and is quite likely to encourage the building of large boats to the new rule that will relegate the old to the rear.

The Effort was publicly viewed at City Island for the first time yesterday. Heretofore she has been carefully covered by a shed, concealing her dimensions and characteristics from public gaze. Now that the racing rules are fixed, however, there is no hesitancy in showing her. It was evident from what was seen and what was announced as to her sail spread that she will rate nearly as high as the old boats, though she will have her advantage of a bigger water line and sail area, due to her greater displacement.

The assurance that Mineola will be in commission will be good news to yachting men. W. Ross Proctor has decided to place her in the hands of Frank Bourne Jones to race in event of his going abroad. It is probable that Addison Hanan will sail her, with Harry Maxwell handling Yankee, and these amateur skippers will be pitted again Charley Barr on the Rainbow. The races of the three should develop the keenest sort of rivalry and interest.

GIANTS AT LOUISVILLE.

Find Baseball Park Under Water and Get but Little Exercise.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 31.—Because Eclipse Park is under water, the New York National League champions did not play the Louisville team to-day, but Manager McGraw led his players to the ground and after picking out dry spots gave them exercise. The Giants reached town from Memphis at 1 o'clock this afternoon. All are in splendid form. While at Memphis the Giants had four days' training on the diamond. Steady work with the big push ball, however, hardened the players' muscles and made their wind good.

Christopher Mathewson has recovered from the nasal diptheria and says he will duplicate his marvelous record of last season. Cecil Ferguson, the pitcher secured from the local team, is getting the "glad hand" all around. Ferguson is a heady and speedy boy and should make good.

"Rasty" Wright, a former Louisville plaer now with the Giants, expects to be side-tracked here. The Giants will play here to-morrow, go to Indianapolis for a game on Monday, play Tuesday and Wednesda at Columbus, Ohio, and Thursda at Wheeling, West Va. They will be in New York next Friday night.

RAIN AGAIN FOR AMERICANS.

Griffith and Players Move from Birmingham to Atlanta To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 31.—It was the same old tale in the same old way this afternoon. Rain rendered the diamond unfit for use. Griffith and his Greater New York players leave for Atlanta to-morrow morning, and from that point will continue their journey homeward, playing games en route. Lajoie brings the Clevelanders to Birmingham to-morrow.

The New York baseball team visited Birmingham in the wettest March in the history of the city. While here only two games were played, netting the manager about $210. Griffith's expenses have aggregated about $2,500. Elberfeld, who is in Tennessee enjoying a few days' vacation, will join his teammates in Atlanta Monday.

The New Yorkers are pronounced in excellent shape, and will be ready for the championship games as soon as they receive a little more field exercise. Griffith states that he will try Birmingham again in case satisfactory terms can be made with the local management, and it is certain that such arrangements can be made. The Americans won many friends here, and there will be a number of loyal "fans" to bid "Happy Jack" Chesbro, "Smiling" Al Orth, and others good-bye when their train leaves in the morning.

Brooklyn H. S. Baseball Victory.

The baseball teams of the Boys' High School of Brooklyn and the East Orange High School were not to be deterred from playing their first scheduled game of the season by reason of the almost freezing weather, and in quite an interesting exhibition the Brooklyn boys won. The score:

Boys' Club Defeated Burns F. C.

The Boys' Club defeated the Burns' Football Club at Columbia Oval yesterday in the cup tie for the American Association Cup by 3 goals to 2. The game was a spirited one throughout, but the Boys' Club held the game safely from the start. Witchwick scored the first goal after ten minutes' play from a corner kick. Tabor followed with a long, low shot which completely beat Moore, the Burns' goalkeeper. At the end of the first half the Boys' Club led by 2 goals to 0.

In the second half Williams tallied for Burns from a scrimmage, and Tabor added a third goal for the Boys' Club from a difficult angle. In attempting to "head" the ball one of the Boys' Club backs sent it through his own goal posts, scoring a goal for his opponents. The line-up:

Boys' Club, 3.	Position.	Burns F. C., 2.
Hax	Goal	Moore
O. W. Zensing	Right back	Jennings
Otto Bensing	Left half back	White

E. Bensing	Right half back	Dunlop
Elliott	Inside left	McNeil
Tabor	Centre	Williams
Kessler	Inside right	Stiles
Estofito	Outside right	Haldame

Goals—Tabor, (2,) Witchwich, Williams. Referee—F. H. T. Reyers. Linesmen—A. Savage and J. C. Jenkins. Time of game—Two thirty-minute halves.

Stevens Beat C. C. N. Y. at Lacrosse.

Stevens Institute defeated the College of the City of New York yesterday at the St. George's cricket grounds, Hoboken, in the first lacrosse game of the season by the score of 10 to 0. Within 30 seconds of the start Murray scored for Stevens, and followed with a second goal one minute later. Gayley caged the ball for the third time for Stevens in the first half. The play in the second half was confined to the visitors' territory, Murray, Wiley, Davis, and Davey scoring. Line-up:

C. C. N. Y., 0.	Position.	Stevens, 10.

Goals—Murray, 3; Gayley, Wiley, Davis, 4; Davey. Referee—Mr. Davis, Stevens Institute. Timekeepers—Mr. Jackson, C. C. N. Y., and Mr. Thayer, Stevens Institute.

Girls in Basket Ball Game.

An exciting basket ball game between girls was played at Savage's gymnasium, Fifty-ninth Street and Broadway, last evening, the young women of the St. Thomas Girls' Friendly Society being beaten by the team from St. Michael's Church by the score of 9 points to 6. Blanche De Vries, in trying to catch a long pass, twisted her ankle, but after a short rest continued her playing. Line-up:

St. Michael's, 9.	Position.	St. Thomas, 6.
Amelia Effler	Right forward	Maud Lowe
Lillian Blum	Left forward	Bl. De Vries
Gussie Siebel	Centre	Emma Lowe
Dorothy Meyer	Left guard	Minnie Marks

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Firm—Bank Surplus Reduced by $1,232,000.

Week's Decrease in Cash Holdings Only Half of Preliminary Estimate.

The disposition to make the best of rather unfavorable matters was again in evidence in yesterday's stock market which displayed continued indifference to the coal strike situation and scored a substantial advance in spite of a bank return disclosing a loss of $1,232,000 in surplus reserves. Little additional news bearing on the strike situation came to light beyond the definite acceptance by the bituminous miners of the proposition to keep such properties open as are willing to abide by the 1903 wage scale promised amelioration of the effects of a strike at other properties, conservative estimates having it that under these conditions 50 per cent. of the bituminous output will be uninterfered with. Practical assurance of our ability to obtain large amounts of gold from Germany, as announced in this column yesterday, contributed materially to the optimistic sentiment of the day, while working to this same end was the fact that the loss of cash revealed by the local banks was little more than half that commonly indicated in preliminary estimates of the currency movements of the week. While the strength in prices was fairly general, exceptional firmness was displayed by the United States Steel issues, this being traceable directly to the assurance that its chief source of fuel supply will be undisturbed in any case, and in the Rock Island shares, whose course is influenced no less by the present policy of the management of this property than by the excellent earnings recently reported by its subsidiary companies. The Copper shares were also strong, as was Brooklyn Rapid Transit, St. Paul, and Great Northern.

Chief interest in the bank statement attached, of course, to the change in cash holdings, where the loss was much less than that forecasted, owing largely to the receipts of gold on engagements already announced, as well as to unreported movements of the week. The extension of foreign credits through the week was responsible for much of the reduction of $3,820,000 in the loan account, as a result of which, coupled with a decrease of $8,780,000 in deposits and a corresponding decrease in reserve requirements, surplus was diminished by only $1,232,000. Surplus now stands at $5,131,275, compared with $8,664,575 in 1905 and $27,755,050 in 1904. With the surplus of earlier years the present position allows favorable comparison. Reports from clearing houses throughout the country, as published yesterday, show that total clearings for the week were $2,603,628,870, against $2,789,486,141 in the same week last year. This makes the third successive decline registered by the country's clearings from the levels established a year ago, reflecting, of course, hesitation in business, mainly in the steel and iron trades, where the prospect of a strike in both the anthracite and bituminous regions has been the influencing factor. Another matter of interest yesterday was the announcement of issues of notes by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and a new road in which the 'Frisco is interested, the security for these notes consisting of bonds which under present bond market conditions are not so readily saleable as notes. That similar note issues are likely to become general, pending such a business situation as will lead to investment in securities rather than the use of capital in the maintenance and expansion of business itself, is altogether probable. Any radical decline in the volume of business the country over would result, of course, in appreciably easier money conditions and would bring funds into the market for investment in bonds and other securities.

NEW LINE TO CONNECT DENVER AND THE GULF

$7,500,000 Note Issue by Col. South., New Orleans & Pacific.

SYNDICATE TO TAKE IT ALL

New Road a Yoakum Enterprise—Speyer & Co. Buy $6,000,000 Rock Island Improvement Notes.

Notes to the amount of $7,500,000 issued to cover the cost of the construction of the Colorado Southern, New Orleans and Pacific Railroad, which has entered into a traffic agreement with the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, it was learned yesterday, have been sold to Blair & Co. and the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston. A syndicate, of which Blair & Co. and the Old Colony Trust Company will be managers, is now being formed to take over this issue of notes. It was stated in banking circles yesterday that the earnings which the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific will derive from its traffic agreement with the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway, will be sufficient to meet the fixed charges on the company's bonds.

The construction of the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific's line, operated in connection with other lines already built, will form a new line from New Orleans to Houston and westward from that point to Denver. The Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific, in other words has undertaken the construction of a line which will connect the Yoakum lines in Texas with New Orleans. Upon the completion of this new road, both the Colorado & Southern and the St. Louis & San Francisco, in both of which the Yoakum interests are largely concerned, will have a new line extending from Denver to the Gulf, both at Houston and at New Orleans.

The $7,500,000 notes which have been sold for the construction of the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific carry 5 per cent. interest and mature in five years. A clause in the notes, however, permits their earlier retirement upon notice to the holders. It is said that in all probability the notes will not be outstanding for more than eighteen months, when they will probably be replaced by the sale of the road's long-term bonds. The notes are secured by $8,000,000 4½ per cent. bonds of the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific Railroad and by the entire capital stock of the company. Payment for the notes is to be made in installments as the work of construction progresses.

The line to be built by the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific will extend from De Quincy, La., to Baton Rouge, a distance of about 250 miles; a branch line having a length of 50 miles is also proposed. From Baton Rouge into New Orleans the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific proposes to run over the tracks of the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad, which is part of the Illinois Central system. At De Quincy, La., it is expected that the road will make connection with the Kansas City Southern, and from there run over the tracks of that road to Beaumont, a distance of 47 miles. From Beaumont to Houston it is proposed to use the tracks of the Beaumont, Sour Lake & Western. At Houston the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific will connect with the line which the Fort Worth & Denver City, which is part of the Colorado & Southern system, is constructing from its present terminus at Fort Worth to the Gulf at Houston and Galveston.

In addition to this financing in which the St. Louis & San Francisco is interested, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, which is the other system controlled by the Rock Island Company, has arranged an issue of $6,000,000 two-year 4½ per cent. collateral trust notes, which have been sold to Speyer & Co. The Rock Island, Arkansas & Louisiana Railroad has absorbed the Arkansas Southern Railroad, which was acquired by the Rock Island about eighteen months ago. The Rock Island is now building a connection from a point on the Choctaw, Oklahoma & Gulf to Eldorado, where a junction will be made with the Arkansas Southern. This line, together with other branches, added to the original mileage of the Arkansas Southern, will form a line 257 miles long. The bonds which secure the note issue are a first lien on the 257 miles of road and on the road's equipment.

The notes sold to Speyer & Co. have already been placed by them with banks and trust companies here and abroad. The notes, it is stated, were sold at 98⅝, at which price, if they run to maturity, the notes will yield about 5¼ per cent.

TRANSACTIONS IN MARCH.

Transactions in stocks on the New York Stock Exchange for the month of March aggregated 19,329,949 shares, a sharp falling off from the totals of the preceding months. There were only two days on which the transactions exceeded a million shares, the 5th and 9th, and the total on the first-named date, 1,466,390 shares, was the heaviest of the month. The smallest day's sales occurred on the 15th, 517,380 shares. The largest Saturday total was 486,545 shares on the 10th, and the smallest 138,017 shares on the 17th. Last month's total of 19,329,949 shares compares with 21,687,579 shares for February, 38,547,868 shares in January, 31,408,900 in December, 26,884,067 in November, 17,742,584 in October, 16,002,702 in September, 20,253,170 in August, 18,018,538 in July, 12,536,767 in June, 20,538,324 in May, and 29,372,190 in April.

The following table gives the total transactions in stocks for March and since Jan. 1 this year, as compared with the corresponding periods in each year back to 1890:

THE COTTON MARKET.

Better Weather Induces Selling of the New Crop Deliveries.

After a week of turmoil, in which the bull leaders used all their ingenuity to advance prices, with the bears hardly daring to be aggressive, the contest in the cotton ring ending at noon Saturday might well be declared a draw. Like a pendulum the market has swung both ways, stopping where it started. The range of prices for the week was 29 points in July, from 10.93 to 11.22, and 28 points in May, from 11.02 to 11.30. May closed one week ago at 11.15, and was 11.16 at the finish Saturday. The notable feature in the fluctuations is the change in the relative positions of May and July. A week ago July was 1 point above May. On Saturday May was 9 points above July.

All the arguments on the situation have favored the bulls—incessant bad weather over the Cotton Belt, prosperous trade conditions at home and abroad, large Liverpool spot sales, and a loss in the total visible supply of cotton for the week of 133,774 bales, against a decrease of only 23,000 bales for the corresponding period last year.

Skepticism about the insufficiency of supplies and a belief that the next crop will be abundant have been the chief reliance of the bears. The net results would indicate that the latter excel in courage.

The market opened Saturday about unchanged to 2 points lower, May at 11.23, July 11.10, and October 10.45; sold up 3 points, and then steadily declined 8 to 10 points, closing at 11.16 for May, 11.07 for July, and 10.40 for October. There was more selling of the distant deliveries on clearing weather over the South.

A private cable from Liverpool said: "Mills well supplied. Think present advance artificial." The Liverpool market closed steady, at 7 points advance. Spot sales there were 7,000 bales, at 4 points advance, of which 6,000 bales were American.

The Fall River and New Bedford mills are said to have sufficient supplies for immediate needs, and are holding off for lower prices. It is said that they have considerable cotton to buy yet, which they will have to take at any price later on. The spot market here declined 5 points Saturday, middling being quoted at 11.65, against 8.15 last year, and Gulf at 11.90, against 8.40 last year. Receipts at New York were 847 bales.

The port receipts for the week were 101,482 bales, against 109,772 last week and 202,712 last year. Total receipts since Sept. 1 were 6,694,909 bales, against 7,871,335 last year. Exports for the week were 85,097 bales. Port stocks are 774,734 bales, against 679,364 last year. Receipts at the thirteen principal interior towns were 6,799 bales, against 5,020 last week and 18,456 last year. Shipments, 12,741 bales, against 10,026 last week and 14,208 last year. Estimated receipts for Sunday and Monday are: Houston, 3,000 to 3,500 bales, against 4,219 last week and 9,218 last year; Galveston, 3,000 to 4,000, against 5,011 last week and 9,193 last year, and New Orleans, 800 to 1,500, against 4,266 last week and 8,674 last year.

Cotton Opinions.

SPRINGS & CO.—The trading of the week has indicated that those who have been prominent in advocating higher prices, while buying the May option, have been large sellers of the July and Fall options, and will eventually be arrayed on the bear side of the market. Taking a broad view of the situation, and until the season is further advanced, we believe that sales are likely to prove profitable at this level or on any further advance.

SANGER & EDDLESON.—Cotton on its own merits is just as healthy as it was a week ago, and there are no signs of any break in prices. Owing to the inherent strength of the article itself, we favor the purchase of cotton on every weak spot.

HUBBARD BROTHERS.—We think a large portion of the short interest in the new crop is the cotton which has been sold by planters as a hedge against the prospective crop, as present prices insure a handsome profit.

BAILY & MONTGOMERY.—The statistical situation appears to be encouraging bull support independent of the doings of the bull leaders, but without their persistent efforts we do not believe it possible to advance prices permanently without a long period of bad weather.

J. S. BACHE & CO.—The outside interest is showing more desire to get into the game, but is acting wisely by placing buying orders when they can be executed only on recessions, and we believe this will result in profit, as we think all the price-making factors point to a higher plane of values.

T. A. McINTYRE & CO.—We would advise against loading up with cotton.

JOHN MUIR & CO.—Evidence of professional manipulation has been very apparent during the entire week, the most noticeable feature being the widening of differences between the May and July option. This has left the impression upon the public mind that leading bulls are not nearly so confident of their position as it appears.

Following are the opening, highest and lowest, and closing prices:

Market closed quiet and steady. Estimated sales 60,000 bales. New Orleans closed 6 to 9 points lower; May at 11.15, July 11.26, and October 10.33. Tone steady.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—The wheat market developed a good deal of weakness. The Eastern longs were said to be dumping more May wheat on the Chicago market, while conditions in the Northwest were such that most of the trade was bearish and inclined to hammer the market. Stocks at Minneapolis were reported to be increasing, flour trade dull, and receipts heavy. At Northwest points, the latter were 398 cars, compared with 196 cars last year. None of the foreign markets showed any important changes. Liverpool was ¼d higher, Paris unchanged, and Berlin only ¼ mark lower. Exporters reported that bids from the other side were nearly a cent out of line. No. 2 red in New York closed 83c elevator and 88c nominal free on board afloat; No. 1 Northern Duluth, 88c free on board afloat.

CORN.—While the early corn market was steady and without much change from the previous night, it later in the day shared the wheat heaviness, notably in Chicago, where the price declined under the previous night. Locally, the regular close was partly ¼c net higher, although this was lost on the curb. The principal bull factors were the steadiness of Liverpool and the continued light movement in Chicago. On the other hand, seaboard clearances were only 153,000 bushels. No. 2 corn in New York was quoted 54½ elevator and 52c free on board afloat; No. 2 white, 53c, and No. 2 yellow, 53c free on board afloat.

WANT LARGER C. & O. DIVIDEND

Movement Begun to Get an Increase Over Present 1 Per Cent. Rate.

Dick Brothers & Co. and several other prominent Stock Exchange houses have joined in a movement to get a larger dividend on the stock of the Chesapeake & Ohio Road, which is now paying only 1 per cent. The minority interests in the Chesapeake & Ohio, which is controlled by the Southern Railway, have for a long time contended that they were entitled to more than 1 per cent. a year on their stock, and the purpose of the present movement is to present formally to the road's management the arguments upon which the minority interested claim an increase in the dividend.

Figures compiled by bankers interested in the plan to secure an increase indicate that the Chesapeake & Ohio is actually earning something like 7 per cent. on its stock, an income which the minority interests feel warrants the payment of at least 3 per cent. a year.

WILLIAMS SYNDICATE BUYS.

Gets Several Small Roads in Georgia—May Fight the Seaboard.

Purchases of several small railroads in Eastern Georgia have given to a syndicate of which John Skelton Williams is said to be the organizer an almost unbroken line of track from a few miles south of Augusta to a point close to the Florida line.

Mr. Williams left the Chairmanship of the Executive Committee of the Seaboard Air Line about a year ago, after bitter disagreements with the powers in control, and it is suggested that the syndicate purchases in Georgia, which practically parallel the Seaboard through that State, are the nucleus of a system which Mr. Williams intends to use to fight his old road in this territory.

Associated with Mr. Williams in the syndicate, according to report, are J. W. Middendorf of Baltimore and a number of Southern capitalists. The International Trust Company of Baltimore is also one of the participants.

Starting at Keysville, about ten miles southwest of Augusta, the roads thus far acquired are the Augusta & Florida Railway, a line of about thirty miles running south to Midville on the Central of Georgia; the Midville, Swainsborough & Red Bluff Railway, which connects the Central of Georgia, and the Stillmore Air Line at Swainsborough and the Millen & Southwestern Railway, a line of about fifty-three miles running from Millen on the Central of Georgia, a few miles east of Midville, southwest and south through through Stillmore to Vidalia.

A gap of twenty-five miles separates Vidalia from the starting point of the Ocilla & Valdosta Railroad, which runs south fifty-three miles from Hazelhurst on the line of the Southern Railway to Valdosta, which is at the junction of the Atlantic Coast line and the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad. Valdosta is close to the Florida border and offers a choice of several routes to the Gulf. It is said that the Williams syndicate will build a new line of road from Valdosta to Tallahassee to connect with the Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway, which reaches the port of Carrabelle.

It is though probable that the distance from Valdosta to Tallahassee will be spanned by a new road which, instead of making connections with the Georgia, Florida & Alabama, will continue straight to the Gluf. Besides this construction work there will have to be built about eighty miles of links in Georgia to give the syndicate a continuous line through the State.

John Skelton Williams was the organizer of the Seaboard Air Line, and he has a strong personal following among Southern capitalists.

UNION PACIFIC EXTENSION.

Now Admitted It Is Building Into Hill Territory in Washington.

J. D. Farrell has been appointed to represent the interests of the Union Pacific in the Washington Northern Railway Company, which is building a line from the Columbia River to Puget Sound ports. This announcement made formally by the Union Pacific Railroad Company yesterday supplies the first formal admission on the part of that road that it was interested in the Washington Northern. It has generally been known, however, that the Harriman interests were back of the Washington Northern, and that the road is one of those planned to develop the Northwestern Territory in the interest of the Union Pacific.

The Washington Northern's line is to run from Kelso to Tacoma and Seattle, and thence to Everett, running through Lewis, Thurston, Pierce, and King Counties. The Union Pacific interests have already acquired terminal lands at Tacoma and Seattle in preparation for the construction of the Washington Northern to those ports. The building of this line will bring the Harriman roads into still more active competition with the Hill lines in the Northwestern territory, a fact which emphasizes the correctness of the statement made some time ago by E. H. Harriman that a period of competitive railroad building was at hand.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Stock Markets Cheerful, but Business on a Small Scale.

Uncertainty Regarding the Money Market Induces Caution—Mines Improve, It Being Believed That the Government Is Getting Sick of Interfering in South Africa.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, March 31.—The stock markets have been rather cheerful this week, but business has been on a very small scale. The cheerfulnss was undoubtedly occasioned by the good news from Algeciras, and the dullness was probably due to a large extent to the uncertainty as to the trend of the money market.

It was predicted that the Bank of England would lower its rate very soon, possibly next week, but talk of withdrawals of gold for Paris and New York and of a number of new loans pending here and on the Continent discounted to a large extent the good influence of this prediction, suggesting to operators that there might be a reduction of the bank rate without accompanying easy money.

Gilt-edged stocks have improved, and without exception are well above the closing figures last week.

In the foreign Government section there has been no notable change in quotations for leading European securities, the settlement of the Moroccan difficulty apparently failing to cause any marked movement on the Continental Bourses. Stocks have been firm in Paris and Berlin, but not booming.

Good reports from the traffic departments of the British railways did not have much effect on their securities. A number of stocks are quoted higher than a week ago, but the recorded gains were made on very small transactions.

Little has been done in Americans except on arbitrage account, operators on this side of the Atlantic deeming it prudent to avoid committing themselves heavily during the prevailing uncertainty about the situation in the American coal fields.

Mines have been rather better this week. To account for this it is suggested that the Government is getting rather sick of meddling in South African affairs, and is likely to take a course from now on less disturbing to the mining interests.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, March 31.—Money was much wanted in the market to-day for calls and dividends, totaling nearly $15,000,000. About $5,000,000 in bar gold will be available April 2, and it is expected that most of it will go to France. Discounts were easy. An early reduction of the bank rate is expected.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was rather more cheerful, but the usual week-end slackness prevailed. Consols were in fair demand and rallied slightly on the monetary prospects. Home Rails were easy. Americans opened quiet and recovered to well above parity. Union Pacific was the feature. Though prices were not maintained at the best quotations of the day they closed steady.

Foreigners were quietly firm on Paris advices.

Kaffirs were idly steady.

Japanese imperial sixes of 1904 were quoted at 104⅝.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £409,000.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 15.62; Lisbon, 4.50.

ST. LOUIS TRACTION MERGER.

Philadelphia Company to Manage New System—$14,000,000 Stock Issue.

A merger of two of the traction lines of St. Louis is proposed by E. W. Clark & Co. of Philadelphia, who have prepared to manage the new system. Stockholders of the East St. Louis & Suburban Company and of the Alton Granite & St. Louis Traction Company have been invited to deposit their stock under the merger plan before April 10, receiving in exchange stock in a new holding company, to be incorporated in New Jersey, with a capitalization of $14,000,000, of which one-half will be preferred stock. All but $425,000 of the new preferred and $360,000 of the new common will be paid in exchange for the stock of the traction companies. This stock Clark & Co. offer to buy at $425,000, paying cash to that amount into the treasury of the holding company, which will serve as working capital.

The East St. Louis & Suburban Company is capitalized at $5,000,000. The Alton Granite & St. Louis Traction Company has outstanding $500,000 of preferred and $2,150,000 of common stock. An extension between Alton and East St. Louis, which will be put in operation this year, is expected to add materially to the earnings available to the holding company.

Aurora, Elgin & Chicago Plans $25,000,000 Issue.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 31.—A call was issued to-day from the offices of the Mandelbaum Syndicate in this city for a meeting of the shareholders of the Aurora, Elgin & Chicago Railway Company at Chicago June 30 next to vote on a proposition to issue bonds to the amount of $25,000,000.

Coupled with the notice is another calling upon shareholders to pass upon a proposition to enlarge the scope of the present charter so as to enable the company to acquire a network of lines covering practically all of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin.

Meetings and Elections.

To the Stockholders of THE MINNEAPOLIS & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY.

A meeting of the stockholders of The Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad Company has been called by the Board of Directors to be held at the office of the company, Metropolitan Life Building, in the City of Minneapolis, Minnesota, on the 11th day of April, 1906, at twelve o'clock noon of said day, for the purpose of taking action on the proposal (1) that this company aid Minnesota, Dakota & Pacific Railway Company in the construction of its line of railroad connecting with the railroad of this company at Watertown, South Dakota, and extending thence to or near Lebeau, South Dakota, with a branch from or near Conde to Leola, in said State, the estimated length of said line and branch being approximately 240 miles; and (2) that, to raise the funds necessary to pay in whole or in part the cost of the aforesaid construction of said line of railway, this company issue and sell five million dollars face value of the five-year five per cent. gold notes of this company, said notes to be issued under and secured by a trust indenture executed to Central Trust Company of New York, as trustee, under date of February 1, 1906. The stock books of this company will close on March 27, 1906, at 3 P. M., and will reopen at the opening of business on April 12, 1906.
EDWIN HAWLEY, President.

APRIL 1906

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

Bullish sentiment was somewhat more aggressive at the close of the week—more aggressive, perhaps, than at any previous time since January.

On the announcement Friday morning that the anthracite miners had been ordered to strike, together with other developments which left practically no room to doubt that the bituminous industry would be seriously crippled, the stock market immediately started up and continued to advance through the whole of that day's session and through the two hours of Saturday's trading. Doubtless the opinion widely held among laymen that the stock market is by nature contrary, and may be depended upon at all times to behave in a contradictory manner was strengthened by this response to a piece of news which had been awaited with general uneasiness, but Wall Street people understand that it is the way of the market to discount the effect of things beforehand. News that takes the market unawares has the simple and direct effect which the layman might expect, but news that has been foreseen is almost invariably found to have been properly discounted.

The prospect of a coal strike had been a restraint upon bullish activity for about two months; in the end the stock market not only was prepared to receive the news complacently, but was ready to turn and go the other way on the theory that the worst had come.

There was a large short interest, especially in the coaler railroad stocks and the steel shares, created with the idea that stocks sold at higher prices could be covered to advantage on the announcement of a strike. Buying of this character was in evidence continuously after the opening on Friday. It was most pronounced, perhaps, in United States Steel common, which advanced about 2 per cent. from the price at which it closed on Thursday. It is understood that certain large capitalists who sold the stock heavily around 45 repurchased their holdings around 40.

The improvement last week was most pronounced in stocks which have a wide appeal to speculative sentiment, notably the United States Steel shares, Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, and Amalgamated Copper, besides which might be mentioned also a few of the lower-priced issues, such as Rock Island common. The strength and activity of the Harriman stocks acted very favorably upon the whole market. Indeed, it was the leadership of Union Pacific to which the market responded most willingly.

The most aggressive buying of Union Pacific on the advance, from around 153 to above 157, was of highly speculative character, houses like Gates & Co. and Wolf Brothers and traders like Field and Manning participating in it very prominently, but the reason for its being so effective was that there had been excellent buying of the stock on lower levels, diminishing the floating supply. Since Union Pacific sold at 160½ in January (its high record price) a dividend of 3 per cent. has come off the stock, and on Saturday it was quoted at 157¼. There is perhaps no other active railroad security in the whole market that has held to an equal degree the confidence of the market through the countless disappointments and difficulties of the last two months. Counting the dividend that has been deducted from the price of the stock since January, as traders do for purposes of comparison, Union Pacific is now selling at practically its high record, whereas the weak bull account which existed in January has been presumably eliminated.

It is not clear whether the professional speculators who took hold of Union Pacific last week had any inside assistance or not; in other words, it is not yet clear that the interests controlling the movement of Union Pacific have elected to turn it aggressively to the bull side of the market, but certainly the men who bulled it last week in so effective a manner were unopposed by the insiders.

A corresponding demonstration in Southern Pacific gave some color to the belief that the Harriman party, so-called, was willing to see its securities made more prominent. Brokers who have watched Southern Pacific attentively in the last few weeks assert that the stock has been steadily accumulated. It is understood that Mr. Harriman refuses, even within his immediate circle, to commit himself to a dividend policy concerning Southern Pacific.

Everybody knows, however, that the property is being handsomely developed out of earnings, that such development has reached an advanced stage, and that dividends cannot, in all propriety, be withheld from stockholders much longer. So far as a speculative campaign in the stock is concerned, the announcement of a definite dividend policy is not essential, so long as people can be made to believe that dividends are reasonably near at hand. A stock bulls better on the prospect of dividends than on dividends declared.

The strength of the Rock Island issues last week, accompanied by the most satisfactory exhibit of earnings that the Rock Island system has made for a long time, drew attention to a property which, in the judgment of its friends, has turned the corner. It is now reflecting the results of the conservative financial policy inaugurated with the passing of the dividend on the preferred stock.

Rock Island common was relatively stronger than the preferred stock, giving rise once more to the hope that the common stock eventually will be invested with voting rights. If this were done it would put Rock Island common on an altogether different plane. It has always occupied an anomalous position, possessing nothing but the right to exist and represent the future development of the property. Control of the vast system has been lodged in a relatively small amount of preferred stock.

The flurries in call money incident to the financing of the quarterly disbursements were much less incommoding than had been expected. There were many reasons for this, the most interesting one, perhaps, being that the outside demand for money was somewhat less urgent than bankers had been led to anticipate. In relation to this fact it is asserted by those who feel the pulse of business through the medium of the money market that the pace is letting up a bit. The abnormal tension under which business has been conducted in the last few months could not be supported indefinitely. This is the time of year when, after a period of extreme activity, business is wont to slow up somewhat.

It often happens that a moderate abatement of business activity stimulates speculation in Wall Street. Men who have made a great deal of money in business find time to think of other things, for example, of speculation, and sometimes employ in the stock market the funds which are temporarily unemployed in the channels of trade. It needs to be presumed, of course, that signs of a serious reaction in business are wanting. Bankers, especially those of Wall Street, would welcome a breathing spell in general business throughout the country, and would prefer, no doubt, normal rather than bumper crops. Immense crops, with business going ahead at the pace it has kept in the last few months, would probably lead to money market difficulties of a very serious nature in the Autumn.

The stagnation of the bond market may force railroad corporations to issue short-time notes to meet their urgent requirements for money. Such notes are already appearing.

BOSTON COMMERCIAL

Have you read the series of analytical articles on GREENE CONSOLIDATED in THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL for six weeks past?

More accurate, reliable and profitable information concerning Coppers, the active stocks, the mines and the metal market is to be found in THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL than in all other publications combined.

It always contains WALKER'S WEEKLY COPPER LETTER in full. Those who know of the record made by this letter during the past three years will tell you that no copper share holder or other investor can afford to be without it.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL is edited by Geo. L. Walker, who makes frequent personal visits to the mines and writes with full knowledge of his subject. He is a recognized authority on coppers.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL also contains each week extended and comprehensive articles on Bonds, Street Railways, the Boston and New York Stock Markets, the Business Situation and the Commercial Markets—Wool, Iron and Steel, Hides and Leather, which are prepared by experts in each line.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 31.—New York exchange was at par. Time and call loans, 5½@6 per cent.

Bids from influential interests in the local stock market for Chicago Edison shares, on which comment was made here early this week, had the effect to-day of sending the stock up to 153. Yesterday the closing price was 150, and the recent low price was 148. This recovery was on small transactions and suggested a belief in the permanence of the 8 per cent. dividend rate of the stock recently brought into question.

Other stocks which suffered from somewhat general pressure on local issues following the traction decision were quiet and rather steady. Match sold up from 131¼ to 132. Illinois Brick went at the steady figure of 62. North Chicago sold at 30, South Side Elevated lost a point, but it was on a two-share trade. Subway was only moderately active.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, March 31.—The trading to-day was dull with scattering sales in some of the unactive issues. Prices were inclined to move upward. West Virginia Central 6s advanced ⅝, Norfolk Railway and Light 5s were ¼ higher. Seaboard 4s near the close came in for ¼ advance. United Railways free and pooled incomes, also United Railways 4s were all fractionally lower. Atlantic Coast Line of Connecticut rights, which have recently been prominent, sold at 55. Western Maryland 4s at the close advanced ⅝, to 87¾.

APRIL 1906

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Loss in Cash Only Partly Offset by Reduction in Deposits—Surplus Smaller by $1,232,500.

The reduction in loans and deposits reported by the banks yesterday was insufficient to offset completely the decrease of $3,427,700 in cash held by the banks, and the surplus therefore showed a falling off of $1,232,500. Net deposits were smaller by $8,780,800 and loans by $3,829,700. The changes in cash showed that the banks increased considerably their holdings of legal tenders, which served to cut down the much larger loss which occurred in the specie item. The reduction in surplus resulting from last week's operations leaves the banks with $5,131,275 cash in excess of the required 25 per cent. reserve. A year ago at this date the surplus amounted to $8,664,575.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of April 1, 1905, follow:

FINANCIAL NOTES.

Atwood, Violett & Co. will occupy new quarters at 5 New Street to-morrow.

The Bronx Savings Bank, of which William E. Aitken is President, has opened offices at 319 Tremont Avenue.

Commencing to-morrow the Colonial Trust Company will transfer the stock of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company.

Leonard Snider has resigned from Lawrence Barnum & Co., whose New York bond business he conducted for a number of years. He will transact a general bond brokerage business, with offices at H. L. Horton & Co., 66 Broadway.

The People's Trust Company of Brooklyn opened its new building, 181 and 183 Montague Street, Brooklyn, for business yesterday. Edward Johnson is President and Charles A. Boody, Secretary. The company's capital and surplus is $2,700,000.

The Directors of the Mexican Telegraph Company have authorized an increase of the capital stock from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000, to capitalize betterments. A shareholders' meeting has been called for May 8 to pass upon the issuance to themselves of the new stock as a dividend.

The Lyman D. Morse Advertising Agency has changed its name to the Morse International Agency. On May 1 this agency, which is now situated at 38 Park Row, will move to the Revillon Building, at 19 West Thirty-fourth Street. The Morse Agency was founded in 1849.

It is announced that the copartnership of Harrison & Smith, who have been doing a commission business in stocks and bonds at 71 Broadway, expired yesterday by limitation, and that the new firm of Smith, Heck & Co. will continue in the same business at the same address.

T. Suffern Tailer will liquidate the Stock Exchange contracts of Baring, Magoun & Co., which has been dissolved upon the retirement of Thomas Baring. Mr. Tailer has formed the banking house of Tailer & Co., at 27 Pine Street, consisting of himself, Grenville Kane, and Charles Ames, with George Crocker as special partner. Hugo Baring and George D. Hallock, with Albert Mason, will form a new firm of Baring & Co., and will have offices at 15 Wall Street.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 31.—The local money market is quiet and fairly easy, considering the nearness of the time for the April dividend disbursements.

Call loans, 5@6 per cent.; time loans, collateral, 5@5½ per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 5@5½ per cent.; Clearing House loans, 5 per cent.; New York funds, 10c discount. Clearings, $27,430,116; balances, $1,789,465; Sub-Treasury debit, $38,656.

For the week: Clearings, $142,720,714; balances, $9,790,942.

The dividends and interest money to be disbursed in April, payable in this city, will be over $22,000,000, including bank dividends, the largest amount in the history of the city for April disbursements.

The Boston stock list did not respond very well to the upward movement in New York. Old Dominion went off, the other coppers were firm, but there was little demand for them, and the local industrials received little attention. No explanation is given for the transfer of 280 shares of Connecticut River Railroad stock at the bid price, 298.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, March 31.—The local public utility stocks were, for a short day, fairly active, with Philadelphia Rapid Transit as the leader. It advanced nearly a point, but later receded and lost nearly the whole of the gain on profit-taking sales by the room-trading element. The buying was based largely upon the assertion that the Philadelphia & Western Road will abandon its subway in Chestnut Street.

The political situation is said to be also more favorable for the public utility companies, and it was due to this that Philadelphia Electric and United Gas Improvement displayed marked strength. The anthracite stocks were very quiet, but held well.

Total sales, 21,691 shares.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

New characteristics were wholly lacking in last week's business, and with one or two exceptions, such as the sale of the Euclid Building and that of the Curtis properties on Forty-second Street, near Fifth Avenue, the individual transactions of importance were surprisingly few in comparison with the total volume of trading. Small business properties, both downtown and in the region between Fourteenth and Forty-second Streets, continue to engage a fair amount of attention, but the proportion of current gossip having to do with the cheaper grades of flats and tenements is, if anything, larger than ever.

There is, however, some question as to how far the transactions in these classes of property announced from day to day actually reflect the present condition of the market. The practice of making public around the first of the month deals of varying degrees of antiquity is well known, and there are many observers who say that they can notice a very decided tendency toward a decline in the widespread activity in flats and tenements.

If this shall prove to be a fact, it need occasion no regret. This movement has been in progress, sustained by one cause and another, almost uninterruptedly for over two years. That it has continued as long as it has may be attributed to two circumstances, namely, that conditions have been such as to place Manhattan tenement properties on a generally more profitable basis than ever before, and that there has been an unusually large number of small investors ready to provide an ultimate market for these properties. To say that recent tenement activity has been largely speculative is, of course, ridiculous. It could not have reached one-quarter of its volume or have been sustained through even one season on any such basis, and if now the investment demand shows signs of being to some extent temporarily satisfied, it will not be surprising if speculators see fit to curtail their operations for the time being.

It will probably be pointed out that there were landed at Ellis Island one day last week nearly 12,000 immigrants, for a good many of whom quarters will have to be provided on Manhattan Island, but it is also worth noting that Supt. Maxwell's report, submitted to the Board of Education on Wednesday, showed that the public school attendance in Manhattan is less than it was a year ago—the first time in many years that any such decrease has developed—while there are more part-time pupils in Brooklyn than in Manhattan. Do not these figures afford some indication of the decentralizing of population that has already begun, and will go on even more rapidly with the completion of transit improvements now under way?

LATEST DEALINGS BY BROKERS.

Pease & Elliman have sold for F. R. Bain the six-story Euclid Building, at 564, 566, and 568 Fifth Avenue, adjoining the northwest corner of Forty-sixth Street, on plot 52.8 by 100, to C. Grayson Martin. This building faces the Windsor Arcade, and is one of the more prominent Fifth Avenue improvements north of Forty-second Street. Mr. Martin, the present buyer, originally purchased this property from three individual owners six years ago, paying less than $225,000 for the plot. He now repurchases the property at a price which is nearly three times the figure which he formerly paid for it.

Edward A. Le Roy, Jr., with Post & Reese, negotiated the sale of 4 and 6 East Forty-second Street, and 5 and 7 East Forty-first Street, for Dr. B. Farquhar Curtis. The buyers are L. S. and M. S. Korn.

Block Front on Convent Avenue Sold.

N. W. Godnick has sold for J. H. Beals, Jr., to Golde & Cohen the block front on the west side of Convent Avenue, between 128th and 129th Sts., 225 by 114 by 244 by 76.5.

Hall J. How & Co. have sold for Samuel McMillan to Charles Hensle the plot of over six lots at the southeast corner of Riverside Drive and 135th Street. Mr. Hensle will immediately improve the property by the erection of a high-class apartment house covering the entire plot.

Equitable Sells Broadway Corner.

Julius Friend has sold for the Equitable Life Assurance Society the southwest corner of Broadway and Fourth Street, 80.5 by 74, known as 693, 695 and 697 Broadway, and for Baruch Wertheim, 4 and 6 West Fourth Street, adjoining, 36 by 80. The buyer is Frank A. Seitz.

The Cornell estate has sold 141 and 143 Hudson Street, two four-story buildings on plot 57 by 78, opposite the New York Central Railroad freight depot. The property is bought by a large grocery concern, which will erect a seven-story building on the site for its own use.

John H. Berry negotiated the recent sale of the northeast corner of West Broadway and Walker Street, a seven-story building, for John W. Condit.

The Stock Quotation Telegraph Company is the buyer of 28 Beaver Street, recently reported sold.

Deal for Seventh Avenue Corner.

Bernard Naumburg has bought through M. Morgenthau, Jr., & Co., from S. G. Rosenbaum and others, the southwest corner of 118th Street and Seventh Avenue, known as 1,952 to 1,956 Seventh Avenue, and 200 to 204 West 118th Street, a plot 100 by 99.9, with three double apartment houses, with six stores.

Shaw & Co. have sold for the John Dwight estate 32 Mount Morris Park West, a four-story dwelling, 24 by 100; also, resold for Edward J. Welling his twelve-year lease on 112 West 125th Street, a four-story building, 20 by 100, for about $20,000.

John Stich has sold to Aaron Simon 266 West 123d Street, a five-story triple flat, on lot 25 by 100.

C. F. W. Johanning has leased for N. A. Elsler the store at the northwest corner of Eighth Avenue and 115th Street, for four years at an aggregate rental of $10,000; also, for E. G. Hantsche the stores at 2,102 Eighth Avenue, for three years for about $5,000; also, for A. J. Hoffman the store at 2,570 Eighth Avenue, for a term of years; also, for William O. Egner the store at 2,451 Eighth Avenue.

J. A. Myers has leased space in the S. F. Myers building, 49 Maiden Lane, to the Elk Jewelry Company, S. Praiger, R. Classons, L. Lehr, and the Waterbury Clock Company.

To Build on Madison Avenue.

The All Souls' Church property, at the northeast corner of Madison Avenue and Sixty-sixth Street, is to be improved with an eleven-story apartment house. The new structure will be erected by the Parkview Company, of which C. F. Rogers is President, from plans by Schwartz & Gross. It will contain two apartments of eleven and twelve rooms each on a floor, and will cost, according to present estimates, $400,000.

East Side Houses Find Buyers.

S. J. Taylor has sold for Annie E. Delaney the two-family house, on the west side of Creston Avenue, 219 feet north of 196th Street, 25 by 100.

Buyers at Bedford Park.

Charles Munster has sold for Frederick Schaepering a two-family house on the south side of 201st Street, near the Grand Boulevard and Concourse, to H. F. Wintrich; also, for Annie Davis, a two-family house at the corner of Valentine Avenue and 202d Street, to C. Eggenspieler.

The Geiszler-Haas Realty Company has sold for a client to Rosenberger & Feller the northwest corner of Briggs Avenue and Fourth Street, 115 by 110.

The Sound Realty Company has bought, through Hall J. How & Co., from Richard R. Maslen, three lots on the east side of White Plains Avenue, north of 239th Street, known as Lots 18, 19, and 20 on the map of South Mount Vernon; also, on the east side of White Plains Avenue, south of 239th Street, the two lots known as 8 and 9 on the map of South Mount Vernon; also, from John D. McCarthy the southeast corner of White Plains Avenue and 220th Street, 114 by 81.

The Sound Realty Company has sold to a client of William C. Lester the entire block front on the west side of Fifth Avenue, from 225th to 226th Street, 228 by 105.

New Owner for Mamaroneck Farm.

Maxwell S. Mannes has sold to the Warranty Realty Company the Burtis estate farm in Mamaroneck, fronting half a mile on the White Plains Road and running through to Mamaroneck Avenue. The tract contains eighty-eight acres and had been held for five generations by the Burtis family before Mr. Mannes bought it, about a month ago. The price obtained was a little less than $1,000 an acre, which is said to be a record figure for that section.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

The price paid at auction for 83 Nassau Street—$144,000—is apparently about on a par with other recent considerations in deals in the same neighborhood. Nos. 82 and 84 Nassau Street, 50 by 100, were transferred last year for $235,000, and about two years ago No. 81, 25 by 106, was sold to its present owners at a reported price of $140,000.

The Nassau Street sale was only one feature of a very successful day's business in the auction room, when Joseph P. Day disposed of over twenty small properties to speculators and investors for a total of nearly $600,000. Offerings on the following day, Thursday, although less numerous, were hardly less successful.

Several auctioneers seem to have hit upon the plan of limiting their large offerings to alternate weeks, so that after last week's long schedule the list for the next few days presents a comparatively meagre appearance.

For Wednesday Bryan L. Kennelly announces an executors' sale of 194 Houston Street, running through to First Street; 47 and 49 Carmine Street, near Bedford Street, and 135 East Ninety-second Street, near Lexington Avenue. A partition sale, down for the following day, covers 24 Albany Street, near West Street and opposite the site of Gen. Howard Carroll's new skyscraper, as well as 339 West Eighteenth Street, running through to 340 West Nineteenth Street.

To-morrow the six-story apartment house at the northwest corner of West End Avenue and Seventieth Street will be sold under foreclosure.

Long Branch property, consisting of the hotel on North Bath Avenue, owned by the estate of Gustav Reismann, will be offered on Thursday by Joseph P. Day.

One of the most important offerings announced for the near future is to be conducted on April 20 by Auctioneer Lewis Phillips of L. J. Phillips & Co. The properties involved are 401 Broadway, northwest corner of Walker Street, formerly owned and occupied by the National Citizens' Bank, and 407 and 409 Broadway, formerly the home of the Ninth National Bank.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR WEEK.

There were recorded last week 388 mortgages for $3,977,046; of which 6, for $1,608,146, were at 6 per cent.; 80, for $1,147,000, at 5½ per cent.; 59, for $2,147,[illegible] at 5 per cent.; 8, for $245,000, at 4½ per cent., and 4, for $14,500, at 4 per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 611 mortgages for $10,518,002; of which 241, for $2,176,371, were at 6 per cent.; 3, for $18,500, at 5½ per cent.; 118, for $3,076,414, at 5 per cent.; 51, for $1,313,500, at 4½ per cent., and 17, for $592,000 at 4 per cent.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Reduction Ordered in Duty on Spirits Under French Reciprocity Treaty.

In a decision by Judge Somerville the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday set a precedent, which hereafter will govern all importations of spirits used in the preservation of fruits from France. The board, following a ruling of the Circuit Court of Appeals, holds that the reduction in duty provided by the reciprocity treaty between this country and France applies to the spirits as well as to the fruits. The effect of the decision is to reduce the duty on the spirits from $2.50 per gallon to $1.75 a gallon.

The board denied petitions submitted by B. Altman & Co., J. R. Simon & Co., M. Doob, Sons & Co., R. Tuck & Sons Co., De Blois & Ballut, and others, Simpson, Crawford & Simpson, H. Boker & Co., Henry Hummel & Co., Thomas Irwin & Sons, F. W. Woolworth & Co., R. F. Downings & Co., and Henry Stern, New York.

F. B. Vandegrift & Co., Chicago, and H. Hamano and others of Honolulu, won their suits against the Government, while a claim filed by Salomon & Phillips, Boston, was dismissed.

The board partially sustained protests filed by Hunken, Neele & Forbes, New York, and Wedeles Brothers, Chicago.

ADVANCING VALUES SOUTH OF 23D STREET, BETWEEN FIFTH AND SIXTH AVENUES

Twenty-second Street Block Being Transformed Rapidly—Tunnel Through Which One Firm Receives Goods on Twenty-first Street—Recent Deals and Prices.

To any one who has not kept closely in touch with recent developments on Twenty-second Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, the transformation of that block into a retail trade thoroughfare will appear to have gone on at a surprisingly rapid rate.

It is not over three or four years ago—when Stern Brothers made extensive purchases on the north side of Twenty-first Street, with only a single lot on Twenty-second Street—that it was generally believed that Twenty-first Street presented the greater future possibilities, and that twenty-second Street was destined to become little more than a receiving and shipping space for the big Twenty-third Street stores. The fact is that this order of things has been to a very large extent reversed. With more and more of the carriage trade of Twenty-third Street establishments using the Twenty-second Street entrance, the south side of the latter has become steadily more popular with the small retailers, and is attracting more of the overflow from Sixth Avenue than any other of the side streets. Its lot prices are decidedly higher than those on Twenty-first Street.

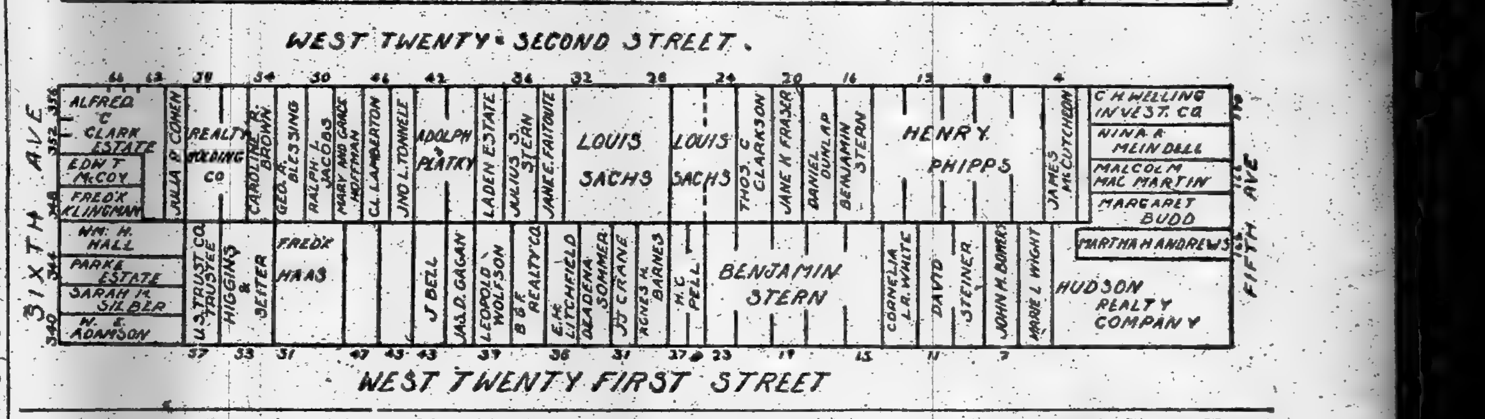
When Benjamin Stern acquired the five lots from 15 to 23 West Twenty-first Street it was supposed that the plans of the concern would ultimately show a new store building on this site to be connected with the main building through the Twenty-second Street lot and by tunnel under Twenty-second Street. This tunnel has been built, but is used so that all goods are received—not in Twenty-second Street—but at 15 West Twenty-first Street, whence they are transported through the block and under Twenty-second Street.

Henry Phipps's large purchases have also served to attract attention recently to this Twenty-second Street block. Mr. Phipps's representatives have as yet given no intimation as to what use he intends to make of these properties, but he is already in control of a plot large enough to admit of some very substantial form of improvement, and it is said that he is also in negotiation for abutting property on Twenty-first Street.

According to well-informed brokers in the neighborhood, values on the south side of Twenty-second Street are close to $100,000 a lot, and in two or three instances recently offers very close to that figure are known to have met with slight consideration. This is, roughly, an advance of $25,000 or $30,000 over the prevailing prices of three or four years ago and $40,000 over those of five or six years ago. No. 4 West Twenty-second Street, 26.3 by 98.9, now owned by James McCutcheon, was sold in 1901 by the Higgins estate for $71,600 and in the following year, according to the revenue stamps on the deed, Benjamin Stern paid $82,000 for 16 West Twenty-second Street, 27 by 98.9. No. 10 West Twenty-second Street, of the same dimensions, was also sold in 1902 for $70,000, and was resold, together with the adjoining parcel, No. 12, for $160,000.

A representative price of six years ago, on the block, is found in the sale of the property of the French Church du Saint Esprit, at No. 28 to 32, now the site of a loft building owned by Louis Sachs. The church sold this plot, 82.9 by 98.9, for $200,000, or about $60,000 a lot. In the same year 40 and 42 West Twenty-second Street, 46 by 98.9, were transferred for $125,000. In 1899, N. L. McCready bought 12 West Twenty-second Street, 27 feet front, for $63,000.

Twenty-first Street prices have by no means been standing still recently, but have followed the general upward course of values that has been felt all over the area bounded by Fourteenth and Twenty-third Streets, Fourth and Sixth Avenues. Properties on this block sold within the last few months have commanded all the way from $60,000 to $70,000 a lot, and it is said that an offer of $80,000 was recently refused for one of the old dwellings on the north side of the street, just west of Fifth Avenue. Four years ago the Evangelical Lutheran Chuch sold its site at 45 to 49 West Twenty-first Street, 110.5 by 98.9, for $200,000, or at the rate of about $45,000 a lot, and in 1901, Higgins & Seiter bought their 46-foot plot at Nos. 53 and 55 for $60,000.



LONG ISLAND ACTIVITY.

Jamaica Property at Auction—New Development Enterprises.

The Pettit Hotel property at Jamaica will be sub-divided into lots and sold at auction by S. M. Van Allen on April 14.

One of the largest of last week's sales in Long Island City was made by S. Osgood Pell & Co. to the Everett Realty and Construction Company, involving about 100 lots between East and Van Alst Avenues, and Ninth and Nott Avenues. A part of this property will probably be used for a park.

The same brokers have also sold to the same company a whole block front on Jackson, Graham and Seventeenth Avenues, and have resold for the Everett Realty Company seven lots on Steinway Avenue, to Harry Holt.

A. Ducret, in conjunction with F. B. Trimm has sold to a syndicate the Michael O'Connor farm of sixty-three acres on Jamaica Road, for $150,000.

Klawonn & Co., in conjunction with James W. Jacobus, have sold for the Thayer estate the country seat known as Robbinshurst, near the depot, at Port Washington, L. I., and extending to Hempstead Harbor. The property consists of about 300 acres with a water front of over one mile.

The same brokers also recently sold in the same neighborhood several other large tracts, including the Willet farm at Manhasset, consisting of 110 acres, the Smith farm at Port Washington of about sixty acres, the Simonson farm at Glen Head, and several other smaller properties.

The Federal Land and Improvement Company has sold thirty-three lots at Amityville, L. I., for $7,665.

The Carrollton Realty Company, which has been successful with the development of several Long Island tracts, will open next Sunday its newest sub-division known as Ormonde Park, at Rosedale. This property, which consists of 1,200 lots, formerly owned by the Roeckel estate, is just outside the city limits and has a large frontage on the Merrick Road. The third rail improvement of the Long Island Railroad has been completed to this point and the time to Manhattan by electric service will be sixteen minutes. The property is within seven minutes walk of the railroad station and is also reached by trolley.

At Freeport, next Sunday, the Long Island Realty Company will hold the first of its sales for this season. With a permanent population of 6,000 and with many improvements of high character, Freeport has become known as one of the most prosperous and progressive towns on the south shore of Long Island. Water and electric light plants have recently been built at a cost of $60,000. The Long Island Realty Company's new property is known as Freeport Heights and fronts on the Hempstead and Babylon Turnpike.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

BELL PIANO COMPANY.—Bell Piano Company of 553 East 140th Street made an assignment yesterday to J. Fred Mosby of 76 William Street. The company was a New York corporation, and succeeded in November, 1905, a company of similar name, which in turn succeeded the Gamble Piano Company. Antonio Nigri is the President, and Frank V. Romaglia the Secretary of the company.

JULIUS LEOPOLD & CHARLES FRANK.—A petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against Julius Leopold and Charles Frank, copartners in a restaurant and cafe known as the Auditorium, at 236 West 116th Street, by George F. Fish, $113; Samuel Bascom, $369, and the Harlem Steam Laundry Company, $200. The claim is made by the petitioners that the defendants committed an act of bankruptcy in giving chattel mortgages to the amount of $16,000 on furniture, draperies, glassware, &c., while actually insolvent. The liabilities are said to be about $30,000. Judge Holt appointed Marshall S. Hager temporary receiver and fixed his bond at $5,000. Leopold and Frank were former employes of a cafe at Columbus Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street. The Auditorium opened Christmas Day, 1905.

EDWIN C. HEATHCOTE.—Schedules in bankruptcy of Edwin C. Heathcote, jeweler of 7 Maiden Lane, show liabilities of $7,213 and assets of $2,312, consisting of stock in hands of receiver.

UNIVERSAL KEROSENE ENGINE COMPANY.—A petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against the Universal Kerosene Engine Company of 6, 8, and 10 First Street, by Joseph N. Patterson, $27,941; Fritz T. Richter, $300, and the Transcendent Lamp Company, $4,760. The officers of the company are: Joseph N. Patterson, President, and F. T. Richter, financed and controlled by Mr. Patterson, was financed and controlled by Mr. Patterson, was incorporated under the laws of New York State in 1903 with a capital of $100,000.

LEONARD HYAMS.—A creditor's petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against Leonard Hyams, formerly a dealer in artificial flowers, at 878 Broadway, by Edward L. Kaufman, judgment creditor for $1,703. It is alleged that the defendant committed an act of bankruptcy in confessing judgment on March 26 in the sum of $3,028, an execution being issued to the Sheriff on all his property at 878 Broadway, the same being advertised for sale on April 2.

H. BIBER & CO.—A creditor's petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against Herman Biber and Emanuel Coopersmith, doing business as H. Biber & Co., buyers and sellers of cloth, at 131 Eldridge Street, by Herring Brothers, $501. It is asserted that an act of bankruptcy was committed by the defendants in transferring a part of their stock of goods on hand with intent to prefer certain creditors. H. Biber & Co. had been in business for fifteen years.

Out of Town.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va.—The Old Dominion Brewing and Ice Company of Newport News has executed a general deed of assignment to J. A. Massie, trustee, conveying all its property for the benefit of all creditors without preference. O. D. Batchelior, representing the creditors, filed a petition in the United States court yesterday to put the company in bankruptcy. The tangible assets are $500,000, and liabilities about $250,000.

BALTIMORE.—J. W. Putts & Co. of Baltimore, dealers in household goods and fancy wares, made an assignment yesterday to John W. Fry, trustee. The trouble is said to be only temporary, and to be due primarily to the great fire in 1904, in which the firm's property was destroyed. They erected a large new building, the paying for which has tied over $400,000 out of the business.

BOSTON.—By his petition in bankruptcy, filed yesterday, Edward E. Perry of Gardner, a stockholder and Director of the E. E. Perry Company of Gardner, now in bankruptcy, shows liabilities of $21,536.73 and assets of $350.

CAMPAIGN OF AUCTION EDUCATION

To get owners to offer their property at public auction, and then dispose of it at a good price, proves that the methods I employ bring more than ANTICIPATED RESULTS.

This was demonstrated by me the past week in the sale of a parcel which had not been offered for sale in over 100 years, and which crowded the Exchange Salesroom to overflowing, and after the most spirited bidding was sold at a price far beyond the expectations of the most expert appraisers, as well as the parties in interest.

NO. 85 NASSAU STREET

Another Big Auction Sale of Real Estate

On WEDNESDAY, April 25th, 1906, and if sellers of property would call and see me I would be pleased to show them how my successful plan of advertising is placed before the prospective buyer.

JOSEPH P. DAY, 31 NASSAU ST., N. Y.

Auctioneer's Note.

TO THE PUBLIC:

Should you be unfamiliar with purchasing property at auction call and ask for my INFORMATION DEPARTMENT. I will also be glad to see you personally and give you a full explanation.

NEW YORK'S OLDEST NEWSPAPER.
WILL PUBLISH ON Saturday, April 7th, 1906,

A Special Edition DEVOTED TO Suburban Real Estate

COMPREHENSIVE and authoritative articles of vital importance to real estate interests will be printed in this edition. A full and complete analysis of present and future transit facilities will be presented, and the probable effect of the new tunnels, bridges, subways, and surface roads on land values will be discussed in a conservative and intelligent manner.

The edition will be freely and appropriately illustrated, and in connection with it will be published showing the location of the more important suburbs and places where the most noteworthy movements in real estate developments are taking place.

This map will also be printed in colors on fine heavy paper—27x39 inches in size. It will be issued for private distribution and sold to the public for 25c. a copy at the office of the Globe. Mailed to any part of the U. S. or Canada, on receipt of 35c.

Advertisers in this issue of THE GLOBE are assured a maximum of publicity. Rates for Real Estate advertising will be 20 cents a line. Copy for advertisements must be in hand not later than April 3d.

FOR SALE.

In the History of Suburban Real Estate

THERE HAS NEVER BEEN SUCH AN OPPORTUNITY FOR PROFITABLE INVESTMENTS AS WE ARE NOW OFFERING AT

Floral Park

20 Minutes from Broadway

ON COMPLETION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA R. R. SUBWAY

EVERY DOLLAR OF THE MILLIONS OF WHICH THIS RAILROAD AND THE BELMONT TROLLEY SYSTEM ARE SPENDING FOR QUICK RAPID TRANSIT TO LONG ISLAND MEANS AN ADVANCE IN THE VALUE OF LOTS AT FLORAL PARK.

FLORAL PARK is in the centre of all the gigantic transit developements of Long Island, and as soon as the new transit facilities are in operation residents of this town will be able to reach Herald Square in less time than residents of the Bronx do now.

Then the History of Bronx Real Estate Will Be Repeated In FLORAL PARK

You know what happened in the Bronx a little over a year ago, when the Subway was opened and the public suddenly realized that the basis of all real estate values outside of the congested centres of Manhattan is transit facilities.

FLORAL PARK has now every advantage and convenience for the commuter. It is less than 15 miles from New York City, on the main line of the Long Island R. R., on which electric trains are now being operated from the Flatbush Ave. Station in Brooklyn. Forty trains a day.

FLORAL PARK has all city improvements, several good hotels and a number of stores. Its churches comprise the leading denominations. Its public school is one of the finest on Long Island, and its Fire Department is a model of its kind.

We have developed a large tract of land within a few blocks of the railroad station, and are offering

THE WALTERS PIANO CO.
Manufacturers of
HIGH-GRADE PIANOS,
226 & 228 East 63d St.

Messrs. Bloomingdale Bros.

Gentlemen:—We accept your order for 500 of our beautiful Walters Belford Pianos, to be delivered to you in time for your Easter sale.

These pianos are the finest that skilled labor can build. The design of the cases is original, beautiful and attractive. We have put our expert knowledge into every detail of these Walters Belford Pianos. They are creations in piano construction and

Masterpieces of Piano Building

We do not know of a piano (and we are acquainted with almost every piano that is manufactured) at double the price you are going to offer these pianos for that will equal them in tone, durability, beauty of design and workmanship. It is an opportunity rarely heard of where one can become the possessor of the highest grade piano at ONE-HALF ITS WORTH, on such liberal terms as you offer.

These Walters Belford Pianos are one of the handsomest and most beautiful pianos we have ever made. Their tone is one of the main features, being rich, mellow and resonant; the touch is exceptionally elastic and responsive.

The 500 pianos we are making for you will be sold very quickly, and it will be the cause of making lifelong friends for the house of Bloomingdale Brothers. Yours respectfully,

The Walters Piano Company.

SEVEN ATLANTIC LINERS REACHED PORT TOGETHER

Customs Inspectors and Post Office Taxed to the Utmost.

SHIPS HAD PLEASANT TRIPS

For the first time in many months, seven liners, all the transatlantic ships due in New York on Saturday, got in on time yesterday. The result was the heaviest kind of a day for the Customs Inspectors, the Post Office men, and the baggage companies. The vessels that reached port were the Hamburg-American ship Amerika, from Hamburg; the Atlantic Transport liner Minnehaha, from London; the Cunarder Etruria, from Liverpool; the American liner St. Louis, from Southampton; the French liner La Touraine, from Havre; the Barbarossa of the North German Lloyd line, from Naples, and the Hamburg-American liner Bulgaria, also from Naples.

The St. Louis, the first of the vessels to dock, reported a pleasant passage for this season of the year, and her story of calm seas and gentle winds was duplicated by the others as they followed her in quick succession to their piers. The St. Louis brought fifty-four saloon passengers, among them being A. J. Brower, Thomas Fountain Harper, William C. King, Mr. and Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Iven Lincoln, the Rev. J. H. McKenzie, Dr. and Mrs. R. Lloyd Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Pike, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Tamblyn, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kemp Ward, and C. H. Whiting.

On La Touraine arrived, among others, E. C. Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Brown, R. M. Cameron, Dr. F. R. Gillette, Henri Mouquin, Giorgio Stoppani, Mrs. G. W. Thompson, and Mrs. J. Van Voorhis. On the Minnehaha were Haddon Chambers, the playwright, whose new play will be presented in New York after its London production; Dr. and Mrs. F. D. Bowne, Dr. and Mrs. John Bibby, Edward S. Baring-Gould, Mrs. Nelson R. Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Cotterill, George A. Drew, Mr. and Mrs. Westmoreland Davis, Dr. and Mrs. S. W. Hoopes, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Larned, Miss Louise M. Maury, H. R. Payne, Mr. and Mrs. Henry O. Taylor, and Newton Wallis.

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Mrs. George Law, and Prince André Poniatowski were among the well-known people who came over in the Amerika. Others on this vessel were Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred B. Ayers, Mr. and Mrs. Hazen J. Burton, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel D. Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Dana, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Godfrey, Vice President Charles Hays of the Grand Trunk Line of Canada, Mrs. Hays and the Misses Hays, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Hitchcock, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan B. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Loomis, Gen. S. V. S. Muzzy, the Baroness von Neufville, Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Phillips, and Mr. and Mrs. Grant Watson. The Amerika was detained in Quarantine nearly three hours, owing to a case of smallpox in the steerage. The occupants of the affected compartment were detained for observation.

On the Barbarossa it was said that at least twenty persons had birthdays during the voyage. The result was a birthday dinner for some one every day. Among the passengers were the Rev. Thomas F. Barry, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hogart, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Elliot, Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Mabec, the Rev. James H. O'Leary, Mrs. George H. Robinson, Jacob H. Vanderbilt, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry V. Whittacker.

On the Etruria, the last of the vessels to dock among the arrivals, were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brown, Walter L. D'Aeth, P. R. O'Neill, and H. A. Whitcomb.

BROKER DIES IN MIDOCEAN.

Heart Disease Kills Willard Bruce Mack on the Liner Amerika.

Willard Bruce Mack, a broker with offices at 15 Broad Street, died in midocean on board the Hamburg-American liner Amerika last Monday. Death was due to heart disease. The body was brought to port yesterday. Mrs. Mack was also a passenger on the Amerika.

Mr. Mack, who was about 35 years old, lived at the Ansonia, and was a member of the New York Yacht, New York Athletic, and Coney Island Jockey Clubs, and of the Pennsylvania Society.

OPENED THE BALLOT BOX.

Voorhis Wouldn't Take the Risk, but Assemblyman Grattan Did.

The right of the Assembly Committee on Privileges and Elections to compel the production and opening by the Board of Elections of the ballots box of the Fifty-fifth Election Precinct of the Seventh Assembly District of Kings County was brought up yesterday at the meeting of the committee, held in the Cadillac Hotel. Assemblyman Grattan, Chairman of the Committee, presided, and when President Voorhis of the Board of Elections produced the ballot box, but declined to open it without a Supreme Court order, Mr. Grattan took the responsibility and opened it himself.

The question at issue was whether the committee should apply to the Supreme Court for permission to open the box. By a vote of 100 to 13 the Assembly gave the committee the right, last Thursday, to open the ballot boxes, and the committee declined yesterday to waive its right and seek aid from the courts. The Chairman tore the shield from the box and unlocked it. A too close gathering of members of the committee and newspaper men following this action on the part of the Chairman, brought up the question of the examination of the contents being left to a committee of three members or to the committee in executive session. The latter plan was adopted.

Eleven ballots in the box are alleged to be void by Thaddeus Hyatt, who was defeated by M. J. Grady for the Assembly, and who is ostensibly contesting the latter's election. Eleven votes will not make a change in the result in this contest, but it may mean the opening of other ballot boxes and the furnishing of groundwork for a resumption of the fight of W. R. Hearst against Mayor McClellan. The box was presented to the committee under protest of Mr. Voorhis.

The identity of the box was fully established. Evidence was given to show that it had been regularly taken to a police station and later removed to the Eagle Storage Warehouse in Brooklyn.

CROTON WALL GIVES WAY.

Crashes Into Yonkers Dwellings—Inmates Rescued Through Hole in Roof.

A sixty-five-foot section of the retaining wall, which is twenty-two feet high, built over the Croton aqueduct between Carlisle Place and Garden Street, Yonkers, gave way early yesterday morning and fell with about ten tons of earth and rock against the rear of the houses at 33, 35, and 37 Garden Street, smashing in the clapboards and breaking the windows throughout the buildings.

No person was injured although it was necessary for Fire Truck Company 2 to use sixty-five-foot extension ladders, axes, and picks before seventeen of the fifty inmates could be gotten to places of safety.

Partolman Schall heard the preliminary rolling of the smaller stones. He rushed to the rear of the houses and saw the huge stones trembling. Pulling his revolver, he fired all the cartridges, yelling at the same time as loudly as he could. This served to awaken a few people, but before they could gather their clothing and make their escape the avalanche was upon them and all hope of getting out through the rear entrance was shut off. The buildings are three-story frame tenements. A panic was narrowly averted by Schall, who telephoned for assistance. A hasty muster of the inmates of the buildings was made, and it was learned that the families of Thomas Humphreys and John Lyons were still within the houses. The dwellings seemed to be on the verge of falling, and fears were entertained for the safety of the seventeen people inside. As soon as the situation had been explained to the crew of Fire Truck 2 the firemen ran out their long ladder, bridging the gulf between Carlisle Place and Garden Street. With axes and picks they cut their way in through the roof and carried the Humphreys and Lyons families out over the ladders. It is thought that the recent thaw and the heavy rains caused the wall to give way. It was built forty years ago.

BLASTS KILL 1, HURT 9.

Two Accidents on Pennsylvania Railroad Work Two Hours Apart.

When the Bureau of Combustibles declared a few days ago that dynamite was handled in New York more carelessly than in any other city in the world, and advised contractors to use greater caution, it was thought that the warning might prevent further loss of life in blasting for a time, at least.

Yesterday morning, however, there were two explosions within two hours of each other, in which one life was lost and four men were seriously and five slightly injured. Both explosions were on work for the Pennsylvania Railroad. One took place at Seventh Avenue and Thirty-third Street, where Philip O'Hanlon, a timekeeper employed by the New York Contracting and Construction Company, was killed, and the other was in Shaft No. 13 of the Pennsylvania tunnel, being built by the United Engineering and Construction Company at Thirty-third Street and the East River.

The explosion under the East River was declared by the police to have been the result of negligence. A charge of dynamite had been placed in the wall of the shaft on Friday night and left there. Louis Frari bored directly into the forgotten blast, and when it exploded nine workmen were hurt.

Frari, Angelo Elfano, Cegaro Ounarto, and Parisi Anfano had fractured skulls. The other five men were bruised. Bernard Connors of 461 Lexington Avenue, in charge of the workmen, was arrested.

Two hours later O'Hanlon was killed by being struck on the head by a piece of rock from a blast. He had been warned, but did not get under cover.

TRYING TO DISBAR JOSEPH.

Lawyer Faces Charges of the Merchants' Protective Association.

The testimony of two witnesses was taken yesterday before Referee Michael H. Cardozo, at 128 Broadway, in disbarment proceedings against Abraham H. Joseph. Joseph, a lawyer of this city, is defending himself against charges made before the United States District Court by the Merchants' Protective Association. There are five points against him, one of which is that he "was unfaithful to the court, to his clients, and unworthy of public confidence."

Referee Cardozo did not permit reporters to attend the hearing. He said that both sides desired that newspaper men should be barred. The examination was continued until Tuesday afternoon.

REBUKE FOR "BIG SIX."

Violence Never Disclaimed, Court Says in Continuing Injunction.

Justice Greenbaum, in the Supreme Court yesterday, continued the temporary injunction restraining members of Typographical Union No. 6, known as "Big Six," from interfering with non-union printers working for members of the Typothetae, pending the trial of an action which has been begun.

In continuing the injunction, the Justice says that the many acts of violence alleged to have been committed by members of the union have never been repudiated by the union as a whole, nor has the union reprimanded the [illegible].

A REAL MONTE CRISTO OF PROMISERS, THIS DON

EVEN THE FLATIRON THEIRS

$120,000,000 Piers on Brooklyn River, Too—Yarn Cost Them $2,500—Jury Disagrees on the Case.

That Don Pedro Suares de Moreno is a most wonderful weaver of romances was unanimously agreed by a jury who spent Friday and yesterday in Judge Foster's part of General Sessions listening to the tales told of and by the defendant. But they couldn't agree on the question of the romancer's guilt or innocence from a legal point of view. Six voted for conviction, holding that Don Pedro's tale on the witness' stand was too good to be true. The others voted for acquittal, but that didn't necessarily mean that they believed his story of a $500,000,000 estate in this city, and on which he is alleged to have obtained a good sum from credulous people in Brussels whom he convinced were the rightful heirs.

The jury having disagreed, Assistant District Attorney Train announced that Don Pedro will be reindicted on a more explicit charge.

Don Pedro is a plain school teacher in spite of his noble name. He is a man in the fifties, but he has preserved much of his youthful vivacity. He talks well, and he loves to talk.

The very antithesis of the eloquent Don Pedro is Jean Emile La Pierre—a slow-spoken but credulous merchant of French extraction, who was last Fall living in ease in Brussels with his family. There Don Pedro appeared, and the tales he told were related so well that M. La Pierre and Mme. La Pierre and their friend, Mme. Valve Reddon, who is a woman of business herself, could not help believing.

It was a tale of an estate left by Jean Tessier, a Frenchman, said to have died in 1844 in Bellevue Hospital, in New York City, friendless and childless, but very rich. That Bellevue Hospital did not exist in 1844 the La Pierres could not very well know, and they swallowed it all in open-eyed wonder. The estate, according to what M. La Pierre and Mme. Reddon told on the witness stand in General Sessions yesterday and the day before, amounted to a sum that made them dizzy. In American money it exceeded $500,000,000. All this wealth, kept by the Yankees for three-quarters of a century in the absence of known heirs, belonged in reality to a little group of Belgians, among whom Mme. La Pierre was one. And to help her collect her share of the estate Don Pedro asked only 10 per cent. There was some haggling over the commission, but it was agreed on at last.

The Tale Enlarges.

Then Don Pedro returned to this country with a promise to send additional details from this side. The additions improved the original tale considerably. Don Pedro drew without stint on his fancy, and sent a big book of photographs, including pictures of most of the principal buildings in Manhattan and of some in the other boroughs.

The Flatiron Building was there, with the added information that it was worth $7,000,000, and would be worth $5,000,000 more if not located outside of the city proper. There was the Vanderbilt houses, and the caption under them said:

"This shows your uncestral manor, located beautifully on a site overlooking the Hudson River."

The complete list of the items of real estate and personal property making up the estate was read by M. La Pierre on the stand, and this is how it looked:

Land in Central Park ceded to the city	$5,000,200
Gold deposit in the National United States Bank	25,000,000
Nos. 100-118 Broadway	5,000,000
Hotel Savoy	8,000,000
Hotel Netherland	20,000,000
Coal mines in Texas	9,000,000
Petroleum wells in Pennsylvania	6,000,000
Share in Mexican silver mine	15,000
Pleasure house in Florida	500,000
Property facing Central Park	12,000,000
Other property similarly located	30,000,000
Two Canadian railways	40,000,000
A steamship line	100,000,000
Dock and pier on "Brooklyn River"	120,000,000
An uncollected debt	40,000
Deposited with the City Chamberlain	5,000,000
Total	$385,555,200

The difference between this total and the $500,000,000 was represented, Don Pedro is said to have explained, by stocks acquired and interest accumulated since the drawing of the will under which Mme. La Pierre became an heir.

M. La Pierre and Mme. Reddon came to this country to investigate in person and were taken around New York by Don Pedro, seated on the top of a sight-seeing automobile. And what they saw made them willing to advance the very reasonable expenses for which Don Pedro presented carefully itemized bills. In all, according to testimony given on the stand, the Spanish school teacher got $2,500 out of the Belgian visitors. The last sum was $472, paid on Jan. 5, and that was made the basis for the formal complaint drawn when M. La Pierre, regretfully but firmly, caused the arrest of Don Pedro on Jan. 6. He had then had a talk with the District Attorney and learned a few things about the true ownership of the Borough of Manhattan.

Plot for a Novel, Don Says.

When it became Don Pedro's turn to tell his side of the story yesterday on the witness stand, he informed the court and the jury that the whole accusation made by the complainant was woven out of air, as M. La Pierre was fully aware that the story of the estate was the basis for a plot of a great novel picturing modern American life. This novel, Don Pedro testified, was to be written by himself and published by M. La Pierre in French, Italian, and Spanish simultaneously. The money paid by the Belgian was simply advance payment of the publication expenses.

When at last Mme. La Pierre was permitted to take the stand again she exclaimed excitedly about Don Pedro's story:

"By the heads of my children, every word he says is a lie."

Don Pedro was disinclined to give certain parts of his history on the ground that he was a prominent adherent of Don Carlos, the Spanish Pretender, and that his connection with various plots and rebellions on the other side made the details dangerous to his friends there. Thus he admitted that he was married for the second time, but he refused positively to say when and where he had been wedded to his second wife.

When the second Senora Moreno was placed on the stand she also refused to tell anything about the circumstances connected with her marriage to Don Pedro.

"Why?" demanded Mr. Train.

"It might incriminate me," rejoined the witness.

The new charge against Moreno will be made by Mme. Reddon, and will involve the sum of $188, for which Don Pedro is said to have given a somewhat carelessly worded receipt. In the meantime Don Pedro will remain in the Tombs.

J. P. Morgan's Annoyer Called Insane.

Dr. Gregory, an alienist attached to Bellevue Hospital, testified before Referee James J. Nealis yesterday that in his opinion Mrs. Ella B. Williams, the woman who was arrested recently in the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co., is insane. Mrs. Williams is now in a sanitarium, suffering, according to Dr. Gregory, from delusions resulting from paranoia. Her physical condition, the physician said, is perfect. She is 50 years old.

BALK AT CHOICE OF HOPPER.

When He's Named for Building Trades Head, Objectors Cry "Politics."

The Nominating Committee of the Building Trades Employers' Association has named the regular ticket to be voted on April 10. Isaac A. Hopper, ex-Superintendent of Buildings, heads the ticket for President, and Benjamin D. Traitel is named for First Vice President.

The other nominations are: Second Vice President—Ross F. Tucker; Treasurer—Paul Starrett; Chairman of the Board of Governors—Lewis Harding; Secretary—William J. Holmes; Finance Committee—W. A. Garrigues, A. S. Richey, Henry D. Moeller, and Bond Thomas; House Committee—George S. Holmes, George A. Just, Andrew N. Petersen, Leonard K. Prince, Ronald Taylor, and Stephen Mott Wright.

The nomination of Isaac A. Hopper for the Presidency has caused much comment, and there are those who declare that, in view of Mr. Hopper's resignation from the Superintendency of Buildings, it is equivalent to a slap in the face for the city administration. These protestants aver that the association should keep out of politics, and decry the nomination on this ground, although they have nothing to say against Mr. Hopper personally or against his fitness for the office.

"Under any other circumstances," said a complaining member of the Building Trades Employers' Association yesterday, "I would indorse the nomination of Mr. Hopper for any office, but the position he took as Superintendent of Buildings was such that Borough President Ahearn was forced to interfere, in behalf of the building trades, and to request Mr. Hopper to either modify his regulations or resign, and he chose to adopt the latter course.

"Now, in the face of these facts it is hardly diplomatic for us to elect Mr. Hopper as our head. Such action on our part would be almost equivalent to a slap in the face for those who stood by us and insisted upon our fair and equitable treatment. If Mr. Hopper's friends on the Nominating Committee want to get even with the city authorities for forcing Mr. Hopper's resignation they should not use the Building Trades Employers' Association for the purpose."

John Beattie is Chairman of the committee that nominated Mr. Hopper. Other members are Charles L. Eidlitz, Robert T. McMurray, Bond Thomas, A. G. Norman, and Frank E. Conover. Mr. Eidlitz is the man who suggested Mr. Hopper for the Presidency.

"There is not the slightest truth in the charge that politics played any part in the action of the committee in framing the ticket," said Mr. Eidlitz yesterday afternoon. "I suggested Mr. Hopper for the Presidency because of his popularity, his entire familiarity with the building trades, and the fact that he is in a position to devote his time and attention to the affairs of the association.

"There is another reason for the nomination. The mason builders are the strongest body associated with our organization, and they have never had a President. Mr. Hopper is their Vice President, and none stand higher in their esteem than he. Their recognition is nothing more than right."

NEED OF SCHOOL ATHLETICS.

Dr. Gulick Reports to Supt. Maxwell on Physical Training.

As an immediate result of the convention which the Public School Physical Training Society held in this city yesterday and the day before considerable attention has been attracted to the work in physical training that is being carried on in New York's public elementary and high schools. Dr. Luther H. Gulick, Director of physical training in these schools and President of the Physical Training Society, has submitted to City Supt. Maxwell a report on the purpose of physical training for the pupils. The report in part is as follows:

> The first aim of school gymnastics is to secure to each pupil good carriage of body. This has a commercial value. A boy's chances of securing employment are manifestly greater if he is erect than if he is slouchy in his carriage and slovenly in his gait. A girl who is graceful and gracious in manner has a great advantage over her sister who is not so. In the main this instinctive preference, which we all have for persons of ood carriage is justified, because good carriage, on the whole, expreses health, self-respect, and self-control. The tendency of long sitting at a desk is directly away from good carriage. It tends to bend the spine forward, to flatten the chest, and gives little opportunity for that general muscular development which is expressive of vigor. Thus for two reasons, one positive and the other negative—one because posture is so important from the standpoint of heath and character, and the other because the effect of school life tends so much against good posture—the attainment of posture is made one of the major objects of physical training in the New York schools.

FOR CITY SHIPPING PIERS.

Bill Backed by Mayor Gives Facilities to Independent Shippers.

There will be introduced in the Legislature to-morrow a bill designed to provide along the North and East River an adequate number of open piers, that is, piers not under lease to any individual or corporation and to be used for the accommodation of independent shippers.

The bill, which has the support of the Maritime Exchange, Dock Commissioner Bensel, and Mayor McClellan, provides that one or more piers shall be set aside in each of the twenty-nine Dockmasters' districts on the North and East Rivers, and shall be conveyed to the people in perpetuity. These piers must never be leased or divested from their use by independent shippers, unless the Dock Commissioner shall certify that they are no longer needed in that locality, and then only after an adequate advertising and public hearings.

A bill now pending in the Legislature with excellent chances, it is said, of being passed and signed by the Governor, confers power upon Commissioner Bensel to condemn eight piers on the North River, between Canal Street and the Battery. One or two of these will probably be turned over to the independent shippers.

BAD FIRE IN BAYONNE.

Five Buildings Destroyed and Twelve Families Lose Their Belongings.

Five buildings were destroyed and twelve families lost all their belongings by a fire in the Centreville section of Bayonne early yesterday morning. The fire started in the clothing store of A. Schwartz & Co., at 436 Avenue D, and gained great headway before it was discovered by Detective Patrick Gallagher and Patrolman John Gorman. They telephoned an alarm to Police Headquarters, and then rushed through the burning house to awaken the tenants.

The flames soon spread to 438, 440, and 442 Avenue A, and to a house in the rear of 436. A general alarm brought every fire company in the city to the scene.

GOOD USE FOR GIFTS OF $10.

Hebrew Charities Arithmetic Shows Just How It Is Expended.

The United Hebrew Charities organization, in its campaign for larger annual contributions from its members has hit upon the novel method of showing, by an example in arithmetic, just how each $10 of a member's annual contribution is divided. Here is the example:

For widows and children	$2.80
For deserted women, with children	1.40
For consumptives	1.70
For other sick people	2.10
For applicants over 60 years of age	.50
For other applicants	1.50
Total	$10.00

The organization is seeking to increase its working capital in order to be prepared to meet additional burdens growing out of conditions in Russia and the increased cost of living.

JEALOUS MAN KILLS RIVAL AND HIMSELF

And Mortally Wounds the Woman Who Abandoned Him.

TRAGEDY IN A TINY FLAT

Maggie Woods Had Been Reading "The Right of Way," but Hearn Recognized No Rights but His Own.

In the tiny parlor of the little three-room flat on the fifth floor of the tenement at 229 East Sixty-third Street, where a jealous lover early yesterday morning killed his rival, mortally wounded the girl, and then killed himself, there were four books on the centre table. One of them was Gilbert Parker's "The Right Way." But the lover in this story of real life didn't recognize the right of way of the other man, as did Parker's character.

From what has come out from acquaintances of the three principals in the tragedy, it seems that the story reaches back into England for its beginning. James A. Hearn, who was then of the Royal Fusiliers, loved an Irish girl named Maggie Woods. She was about 20, and he was two years older. That was ten years ago.

Maggie Woods loved Hearn, too, and lived with him there. After a while she fled to America and Hearn followed.

Hearn and Maggie lived together here, too. He did some work as a cab driver for a while, but it appears that he hadn't worked much recently. The couple lived at 340 East Seventy-fourth Street.

Some three months ago, the story goes, Maggie Woods heard that James Black needed a housekeeper to look after his three-room flat at 229 East Sixty-third Street. She got the job. He was a widower, 54 years old, who had worked as an upholsterer in Boston up to five years ago, when he came to New York to go into the store of Righter & Kolb, decorators, at 156 Fifth Avenue. He left three grown children in Boston.

The neighbors say that Black was a sober man. He earned $21 a week, bringing most of it home. He was never drunk, and he was good to the blue-eyed, brown-haired Maggie Woods.

James Black's six-by-eight parlor would tell that he was an upholsterer and decorator. There are in it two little gilt chairs on which nothing heavier than a child might sit. There are three or four other chairs with rich plush seats. A minute table with a marble top stands near the window that opens into the court, and on it is a single flower pot. There isn't room for more. There is a mirror over the mantel, and on the walls are three or four pictures—not too many—and they are not colored lithographs; they are subdued black-and-white sketches of country scenes.

Upon the little parlor table four books lay yesterday—a Bible, a Prayer Book, Dumas's "The Black Tulip," and Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way." The last was the newest. Maggie Woods and James Black had been reading it, perhaps thinking that Hearn was going to be like Parker's hero and go away and leave her.

It appears that Hearn did leave her alone for three months. Maggie Woods was very happy, the neighbors say, in her easier circumstances. But Hearn turned up on Friday just before midnight.

He banged at the door, demanding admittance. Maggie Woods asked who it was. The sound of her voice seemed to infuriate Hearn, and, saying "It's me," he began to break through the door.

Maggie Woods screamed at him to say that he couldn't come in. Then she opened a window and ran along a fire escape, to take refuge in the flat of Mrs. Joseph Wrexler, adjoining.

Black ran to the door. A bullet tore through his nose. He got outside, and there was a struggle in the hallway, each man trying to throw the other over the bannisters. Hearn ran away, but he must have hidden near to watch.

A neighbor ran with the story to the East Sixty-seventh Street Police Station. Dr. Wise of the Presbyterian Hospital dressed Black's wound, but he refused to go to the hospital. He said Hearn might come back for Maggie Woods. Detective Bonzer came over from the police station. He sat on guard with Black until 5 o'clock yesterday morning, and then, having looked all through the house and on the roof, he went away.

He had hardly gone when Hearn went creeping back up the stairs. Black had boarded up the front door, where the glass had been broken. Hearn began to lunge at the door. Black, who was still sitting up in the kitchen, the door of which opens into the hall, arose for fight. Maggie Woods jumped out of bed and began to scream.

Then Hearn got in with his pistol. He fired many shots and must have loaded his pistol twice. Maggie Woods couldn't raise the window to flee by the fire escape, and so she broke the glass. She wasn't quick enough, and Hearn got to her.

Some of the neighbors tell about her throwing herself in front of Black to receive the pistol bullets, but they don't know just how it happened. The woman was shot four times and is expected to die in Bellevue Hospital. Black was shot once in the head and died instantly. Hearn shot himself once in the mouth and died an hour or so later in the Presbyterian Hospital.

Russian Baron Here to Lecture.

Baron Nexkull, President of the Russian Baptist Union, and the Baroness were among the arrivals on the Hamburg-American liner Amerika yesterday. The Baron came over to attend various Baptist conferences, and to lecture on conditions social, religious, and political in Russia. The outlook for a democratic Russian Government, he said, is brighter. The people, he added, would eventually win in the fight for reform.

FINANCIAL INTERESTS FOR ODELL, HIGGINS SAYS

They Want Him to Direct the Coming State Campaign.

ODELL BUSY REDISTRICTING

Gov. Higgins, who remained in town all yesterday, declared that efforts had been made by financial and other interests to keep Benjamin B. Odell at the head of the Republican State Committee for the present at least, in the belief that his removal would weaken the party in the coming State campaign. The Governor made this declaration in reply to an expression of opinion by an Odell partisan that the trend of affairs lately had been Odellward.

The Governor was at the Manhattan Hotel. He said he had had no political callers, although he had seen many personal friends. He said that he would return to Albany after the Pilgrims' dinner in the evening. He was asked about the insurance bills pending in the Legislature.

"Well, the bills are in progress," he replied.

"How about the appointment of an Insurance Commissioner to succeed Francis Hendricks?" was asked.

"I have had lots of applications for the place, but I want a man to whom the salary is not the main consideration," said the Governor. "Most of the applications I have received have been from men who want the salary. I am in no hurry to fill the place, and intend to wait until I find the man I want. The position should be filled by a strong man."

"Will you put a practical insurance man there?" he was asked.

"A practical man, yes," replied the Governor, "but not necessarily an insurance man. A man with executive experience, whether he be a lawyer, an insurance man, a financier, or a business man, could fill the place just as a strong executive man could head a life insurance company. The detailed work always is done by the actuaries."

The Governor was questioned about the possibilities of an investigation of the State Banking Department.

"Until a few days ago I thought there would be such an investigation," he said, "but the Assembly does not seem to want to avail itself of its opportunity."

"How about an early meeting of the State Committee to oust Odell from the Chairmanship?"

"I have heard of no special agitation for an immediate meeting of the State Committee," said the Governor. "As for the Legislature, I believe it will adjourn sine die by May 1."

Odell was at the State Committee headquarters in the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday, but did not call on Gov. Higgins. His efforts were devoted to the new apportionment plans for the Senate and Assembly Districts in New York County. The State Chairman talked with Michael J. Dady of Brooklyn and Lemuel E. Quigg. He took a leading part in settling the apportionment for Brooklyn. No further details of the plans were made public.

While the Odell people were working on their plans in the State Committee rooms the Parsons contingent were at work upstairs in Parlor DR of the hotel on their apportionment plan for New York County.

The factions did not meet and no fatalities were reported.

HOBOKEN'S EXPLOSION SCARE.

Gas Tank Fire Stampeded Tenants Who Believed It Would Blow Up.

The Hoboken police are still guarding the burning tank of gas that since last Wednesday night has defied the efforts of the firemen to put it out. In some way a number of men who are spoken of as "gas experts" got it into their heads that the tank, or what was left of it, would explode yesterday, the result being a panic among the people who live near the tank.

The fright of the residents was brought to the attention of the police and a platoon of police was double-quicked to the scene of the fire to see that everybody who might be in danger was taken to safety. The police roped off a big space around the tank and kept everybody outside except those authorized by the municipal authorities to enter.

The "gas experts" had told the police that no power on earth could prevent the catastrophe which was due at any minute yesterday, and declared that the time of the explosion depended entirely on the rapidity with which the air accumulated in the burning tank. It did not make the slightest difference, they added, how much water was poured on the tank—the explosion was bound to come.

Nearly everybody who lives in Clinton Street, between Eleventh and Twelfth Streets, hurriedly vacated his home. Such a brisk moving Hoboken had never seen before. The tenants were so anxious to get away that they took only such things as they could pack away in handbags and satchels.

Thousands of people congregated outside the ropes all day yesterday awaiting an explosion. Late in the afternoon they decided that it wasn't going to happen. The police began to wonder if they were not the victims of practical jokers. They consulted with some real gas experts and were informed that there was no danger of an explosion. The tenants were told that they could return to their homes in perfect safety and they all moved in again.

The tank still contains 100,000 cubic feet of gas and will probably burn for several days, the firemen [illegible].

THE CORPORATIONS' SIDE OF IT

Standard Oil's Typical Case Told by a Man Who Knows---How That Corporation Operates and Why It Has Succeeded.

SITTING in the comfortable library of his home uptown, a man prominent in several of the most criticised corporations in this country talked with a Times reporter a few days ago about the present popular practice of corporation baiting, the cry for stricter governmental control of corporations, the situation which has brought about that demand, and what is likely to come of the inquisitions into corporate management already under way. Incidentally he revealed plainly, as he was eminently qualified to do, the view taken by the men who direct the great industrial combinations of this country of what the Government's share in their control should be.

It was not an interview, strictly speaking. The man who talked was troubled by a cold or some such slight ailment. He had been peremptorily ordered by his wife and his physician to rest for a day, and he was resting, sorely against his will, from the routine of his office. The reporter happened to catch him at leisure and he was ready to talk, not with the idea of molding public opinion, but because he felt like doing so. He was utterly careless whether his views should find their way into print or not. But on their publication with his name attached, he put his absolute prohibition.

"For," said he, "what's the use? Statements are continually made from our side, and how are they received? With derision. We can only wait, answer questions when they are asked with authority, and be patient until this has run its course."

So it was, as nearly as could be, a heart-to-heart talk with a man whose name carries as much weight as any downtown on the burning question of the day and what should be done about it. And here is its purport:

The Standard Oil Company and its responsible heads holding the forefront of current criticism, the conversation turned naturally upon the history of Standard Oil, the allegations against the company, and how much of them are true.

* * *

"Did you ever sift any of the charges against the Standard Oil Company?" asked the man. "Trace any one of these charges back to its source, and what will you find? It has come either from a discharged employe of the company—discharged for incompetency or dishonesty, for Standard Oil keeps its good men—or it has come from disgruntled oil men; men who had their opportunity of getting into the company in its earlier days and did not take advantage of it, and now, in the days of its success, would like to pull it down with a view to finding that opportunity over again.

"Go back to the beginning. I think the first pretentious criticism of the Standard Oil Company was Lloyd's 'Wealth and Commonwealth.' It was purely an ex parte statement of the case. Miss Tarbell's work was but little better.

"Take the charge of rebating. In all the investigations through which Standard Oil has passed, and there have been five or six, has there ever been produced any atom of credible proof that the company has sought or accepted rebates subsequent to 1884? Prior to that the company took rebates. So did everybody in the oil business who could get them—as is admitted. It was natural. If you are a clergyman, and you see another man in a clerical waistcoat announce that he is the Rev. John Blenkinsop, and thereby obtain a railroad ticket at half rates, you are pretty sure to claim and share in the same privilege. It might be fairer that the poor woman with a baby and only $5 in her purse should get the half rate instead of you; but that would hardly deter you from exercising your privilege, would it?

"Naturally it was the same with rebates prior to 1884. Then the practice was forbidden by law. I have never seen proof that the company ever received rebates from the railroad companies since that time. As a matter of fact it is far more likely that if any favors were shown by the railroads they went to the other side—to the Standard's smaller competitors. It is not so easy for a great corporation to come into close relations with the railroads as it is for the smaller concern. The small man gets closer to the officials. He knows the local freight agent; his wife knows the agent's wife, and their families are intimate. You may depend upon it that if any favors are going around he is going to get them, or if his larger competitor is getting a better rate than he he is going to learn of it, and will stop it or demand the same privilege.

"Then, again, there is the legal restraint, which must be considered. Would it be worth while for the great corporation to take the chance of law breaking with all the public odium which that entails? I think not.

"Yet, in spite of all denials, the story is constantly reiterated that the Standard Oil Company makes its profits out of secret rebates received from the railroads. That is nonsense. For one thing, it didn't need to. Its great profits began in 1876, and came from the export trade, in this way:

"The petroleum business of the world was then done entirely in this country, for we were the only producers. The foreign trade sought to control the business and the dealers here resented it. The Standard Oil Company, being strong, was foremost in the movement.

"The foreign trade in oil was in the hands of agents, who dealt in futures, as the cotton and wheat brokers do now. The Standard had a big stock of refined oil on hand. The foreign buyers held out for a low price, expecting that the refiners would be forced to come to their terms. The Standard instead marked up the price of oil and waited. In the long run the buyers had to come to the refiners' terms. It was a hard fight, and the outcome meant prosperity or dissolution for the Standard. The company won, and it then laid the foundation for the great business it has since had.

"The secret of the Standard Oil Company's success has been neither in secret rebating nor in coercion of its competitors. It lies in methods entirely apart from them. First of all, it is a young men's company. It was formed by men 32 or 33 years of age. It is managed now largely by young men. As fast as a man approaches 60 years of age or more you will see that he gradually retires from active participation in the Standard management.

"Then from the first the Standard Oil Company has stood for large sales and small profits. It takes the small things in business equally with the great ones. It will sell a gallon of oil as readily as it will sell ten million gallons. And its business never stops. It has 60,000 employes, and 30,000 of them are in positions of trust. It has a pension system by which at sixty years of age and after twenty years in the company's employ a man has the option of retiring on half pay for five years and quarter pay for the rest of his life—which serves the double purpose of keeping its force at full vigor and taking care of its men when their best days are past.

"Its profits, whenever they were needed, have always been turned back into the business. It never has had a piece of equipment, no matter what the cost, that it would not discard for the sake of getting a better. Its managers never heard of an invention or a man better qualified to deal with the oil business than any they had that they did not get both, at any price. It never took a chance of reducing sales for the sake of increasing profits. It always finds out what a thing is going to cost before embarking in it. Every day it knows exactly where it stands, and what are the conditions in every branch of its business.

"Its organization runs like a well-regulated clock. It never tells anything to its competitors, but it is awake and at work all the time. It is a business organization, run on strict business principles from the first letter to the last. Did you ever hear of any social influences in Standard Oil affairs? I don't think so, because there are none.

"Now, why should a corporation like that need to trust to secret rebates? Why should it be necessary to resort to any underhand tricks? With its methods it could not help but go ahead; it could not help but override competition. It has needed no help from the politicians. It need fear no investigation, though it may, and naturally does, dislike to reveal the details of its business for the benefit of its competitors. Look at them, and you will see in the Pure Oil Company of Pennsylvania that their success has been won by imitation of its methods."

"But how do you account for the public outcry against the Standard Oil Company, apart from these insinuations and open charges of competing oil men?" asked The Times man.

"Do you know the capital of the Standard Oil Company?" came the return question.

The reporter admitted that he did not.

"But you probably remember the amount of the last Standard Oil dividend."

The reporter did remember that it was at the rate of 40 per cent. for the year.

* * *

"Exactly; and there you have the answer to your question. Everybody remembers dividends; few remember on what capital they are assessed. Every man and boy in Wall Street knows that the Standard Oil Company is paying 40 per cent., but how few realize that the capital on which that is assessed is $50,000,000 less than that of the New York Central Railroad.

"People forget how small is the capital stock compared with the amount of money actually invested in the company's business. They forget the profits of past years put back into new plant and equipment, but not, in its case, shown in the capitalization on which the dividend is based. Therefore, every quarter, you see new scare headlines in the newspapers, 'Big Standard Oil Dividend,' fresh incitement to the envious, a new occasion for criticism. And all the critics of corporations solemnly agree that this one, which is actually paying 40 per cent., is a menace to everybody else and must be doing something wrong.

"So every now and then you have new charges brought, and a fresh investigation is begun. Commissioner Garfield, on behalf of the Federal Government, is about finishing one. He has gone into the company's business thoroughly, and his report is expected soon. I don't expect he has found anything very dreadful. The State of Missouri is having another. Ohio had a very vicious one several years ago, and Kansas has just got through. They begin with a great whoop and much space in the newspapers. Then by and by a paragraph appears in an obscure corner one morning telling that it is all over, as in the case of Kansas, which has just dropped all the suits it began with such a flourish. Nothing has been discovered. There was nothing to find.

"Speaking of dividends, here is another point. What has become of the dividends paid to the largest interests in Standard Oil? They have not been spent in extravagance at home or abroad. Instead they have been used to create and develop new enterprises all over the country. Of one State, Florida, it may be said that it was opened up by Standard Oil money.

"The trust, as they call it, has brought within reach of the poorest one of the greatest comforts of life—artificial light. It has turned back its profits into the commercial life of the country, creating new enterprises, new employment for thousands, and the men who manage it receive in return, from a large section of the press and the public—abuse.

* * *

"I have talked about the Standard Oil Company because it bears the brunt of this general condemnation of corporations for the reasons I have given. You might apply similar arguments to the cases of others—the Steel Corporation, for instance. This is a big country. It requires big organizations to handle its products. The time has gone by for individualism and competition. True economy is found in concentration of energy and unity of effort. Government regulation tending to handicap that natural concentration and unity of effort is so much governmental function wasted. The law of supply and demand will regulate matters for itself. A corporation which attempts to raise the price of a public necessity will fall of itself; for people will buy in the cheapest market, and countless rivals will rise up to menace its control, reduce its field, and drive it into bankruptcy.

"Take this foolish proposal that the Government shall fix railway rates. The New York Central Railroad, let us say, without undertaking to give exact figures, is able to haul a train of 2,500 tons of freight on its lines from New York to Chicago, as against the Pennsylvania, by reason of its more difficult route, being able to haul a train of only 1,000 tons. Shall the Government fix the freight rate to Chicago at the Central's figure, based on its lower cost, or at the Pennsylvania's higher cost? I say, better leave it to the practical railroad men to settle by natural competition.

"Or, if you are going to adopt this principle, why not apply it to the newspapers. There are 3-cent newspapers in this city. The Times, I understand, aims to supply the same news for one cent. Some people prefer The Times's news at one cent to the other fellow's at 3 cents. I don't see why you can't regard newspapers as a public necessity. Now, is a benevolent Government, at the request of The Times's competitor, to step in and make you sell your newspaper at 3 cents or make the other man, at your paper's request, sell his paper at 1 cent to equalize matters? Better leave it to the buyer—that is, the customer. If he prefers the other fellow's news at 3 cents, he surely has the right to buy it, and if he likes your news at 1 cent, he surely has the right to his choice."

"Then you would have the Government let the corporations alone," suggested the reporter. "Would you have no supervision or regulation?"

"England, our neighbor," was the reply, "is a great and a prosperous country. Her commerce is world-wide. In Asia, in Africa, in Australia—all over the world, her companies are doing business, her products are in demand and her industries are prosperous. Her Government says to her manufacturers, her merchants, and her transportation companies: 'Combine if you will; in that case take out a charter with us. We will then protect you abroad; we will police your property at home. In return you must show us your books and pay us once a year a just proportion of your profits to defray your share of the expenses of government. After that, your business, so long as you keep within the law, is your own concern.'

"That, in my opinion, is the true function of Government. Natural laws will adjust the rest. The unrighteous corporation will collapse of the dry rot within it. It is no business of the Government to spy into and interfere with business, so long as business men keep within the common law. Such interference will only result in commercial chaos and an increase of the very evils it is most desired to avoid.

"If England had had the prosperity we have enjoyed in the last eight years, can you imagine that she would be suffering now the unrest and the general disaffection that prevails here? I think not. Here are our savings banks loaded down with deposits; there never were so many new buildings being put up; there never was so much money being spent. Yet here we have a number of the newspapers and a section of our people bent on tearing down, not building up. England has not reached her present prosperity in any such way; and we, if our prosperity is to continue, must, like her, not tear down, but put our energies into building up."

The defender of the corporations signified that he had said all he felt moved to say.

* * *

"Just one more thing," urged the reporter. "If this country and its industries have grown so big that there is room in it only for big corporations to handle its industries, where does the poor young man without capital to admit him to the corporate ranks come in? Is he to be a mere employe of the corporations and to depend on them?"

"Don't make any mistake about the poor young man's chances," was the reply. "I solemnly believe them to be better than when I started in life myself as a young man without large means more than thirty years ago. We heard the same cry then, with just as little reason for it. If the young man has brains, industry, perseverance, and self-restraint, he need not fear the domination of the corporations. Don't be under any apprehension for the poor young man. If he has grit he can look out for himself—as he always has done."

ARE WE TO HAVE SIMPLIFIED SPELLING? DR. FUNK SAYS YES

POSSIBLY it was something in English that the Prince of Denmark was reading when he turned impatiently upon his mother, the Queen, and said, "Words, words, words!" Certainly it was the anguish of studying that English which Andrew Carnegie and others would simplify that drew this letter from Napoleon when he was confined in St. Helena:

"Since sixt week I learn the English, and I do not any progress. 6 week do fourty and two day, if I might have learn 50 word for day, I could know it 2 thousands and 2 hundred. It is in the dictionary more of fourty thousand, even if he could, must 20 bout much often for know it or 120 week, which do more 2 year. After this you shall agree that to study one tongue is a great labor, who must do it in the young aged. Longwood this morning the seven march Thursday one thousand eight hundred sixteen after nativity of Jesus Christ."

Recently many letters have been published in The Times protesting against the complex nature of English spelling in particular or advocating the adoption of measures of reform in English spelling, while not a few correspondents have protested against what they choose to term a desecration of our beautiful language.

Mr. Carnegie started the latest movement—for the movement itself is as old as Noah Webster. Dr. I. K. Funk, editor of the Standard Dictionary, and Robert B. Roosevelt, uncle of the President, were among those who indorsed the scheme of reform, pointing out that not only would such reform be beneficial, but the difficulties of its execution not insurmountable.

* * *

Those who raised their pens and voices in opposition wrote and said, for the most part, that the spelling reform advocated by Mr. Carnegie and his friends would rob English literature of much that was beautiful in it and destroy the illusion of such beauty as was left. It was contended, furthermore, that any board which undertook to pass judgment upon the spelling to be revised would most assuredly tumble over itself, and, indeed, run the grave risk of rendering itself anything but a grave council. A few hair-splitters suggested that the people of America learn the language of England before attempting to reform the spelling of its words.

The questions left undecided were three simple ones: First, when, if ever, would the matter of spelling be decided so that writer and reader might know whether either was illiterate or in line with fashion? Second, would the people adopt a reformed spelling of words decreed by a board of reformers in defiance of the natural processes of Time and Slang? And, third, that we might see into the possibilities of the future what had been the changes of the language in the past century.

* * *

In regard to when the spelling reform would be decided, it was ascertained a few days ago that the Board of Simplified Spelling was holding frequent meetings; that progress was announced, and that, far from there being a word of contest over the proposed reforms, the members of the board were unanimously agreed that simplified spelling was not only possible, but necessary.

Among the members of the Simplified Spelling Board it is interesting to note such names as Commissioner Harris, editor of the last edition of Webster's Dictionary; Benjamin Gunter, editor of the Century Dictionary; Charles P. G. Scott, editor of the etymological department of the Century Dictionary, and Dr. I. K. Funk of the Standard Dictionary. With the country's three great dictionaries thus represented and agreeing in the matter of reformed spelling the outlook seems certain.

* * *

Where the meetings of the Board of Simplified Spelling are being held has not yet been made public. Dr. Funk of Funk & Wagnalls said a few days ago that the public would hear in good time. In the course of a conversation about the reform measures Dr. Funk said:

"I believe that once the board has agreed to change the spelling of a word the public will accept the reform. It is for the good of the public.

"We are having and expect to have little difficulty in the matter of reforming the spelling of certain words. Our efforts will not be wild or a general onslaught upon the language. We suggest the dropping of a few silent letters, such as in the word 'rhyme,' which we would spell 'rime.' We would not, however, change the spelling of 'write' or 'wright' or 'rite' or 'right,' for there would be confusion in the path of confusion.

* * *

"From some words with double letters—as in 'traveller' and 'marvellous'—we would drop one of the letters when not preceded by a long vowel. At the end of the first participle we would suggest the change of 'ed' to 't,' as 'dresst,' 'chipt,' 'markt,' and so on. We would drop the silent 'ue' from the end of 'catalogue,' 'epilogue,' and similar words, while from 'hypocrite,' 'opposite,' and the like we would drop the final 'e,' retaining it only when the 'i' is long, as in 'finite,' 'polite,' and so forth."

* * *

Dr. Funk mentioned a number of other rules relating to the simplified spelling of such words as "programme," "cigarette," "fragile," "discipline," "promise," "measure," "weather," "repulsive," &c.

The American Philological Society, according to Dr. Funk, as far back as 1880 decided upon the simplified spelling of at least 3,500 words. Many, if not all, of these words are now printed with the originally spelled words in the dictionaries, with the society's name opposite in abbreviation.

"The simplified spelling has been taken up slowly but surely in past years," said Dr. Funk, "but many of us wish to see it adopted more swiftly. I suppose people have become used to spelling words in the same old way, or fear to accept a new spelling, fearful of the charge of ignorance.

"It needs a strong movement to drive the spelling reform acceptance to unanimity. I think that Mr. Carnegie, with such backing and indorsement as supports him, has started the movement that will win. Benjamin Franklin and Noah Webster, the late Max Müller, and Prof. W. W. Skeat, the famous etymologist of Oxford; the late W. E. Gladstone, and innumerable others alive or dead are, or were, in favor of this much-needed reform.

* * *

"That the people will accept the reform if the movement is persistently guided and the feeling over it is strong enough, is clear to all who look back at the changes that Noah Webster made in our spelling by persistently printing the reformed words in his dictionary.

"He, with Benjamin Franklin, simplified many words. From 'labour,' 'honour,' and such words, he dropped the 'u'; from 'traveler' he dropped an 'l'; in 'theatre' and 'centre' he transposed the last two letters. To be brief, Webster and Franklin, as we should do to-day, recognized that the course of simple language lay along the line of least resistance.

"Recently the chemical section of the American Society for the Advancement of Science put certain reforms in the spelling of medical articles into effect. Such words as 'bromine,' 'chloride,' and 'sulphide' are now written 'bromin,' 'chlorid,' and 'sulfid.'

* * *

"You see, it creeps on apace. I do not think there would be much difficulty with the masses after the first shock of sudden revolution of spelling. A man opening a magazine and beginning to read words from which a number of letters were seemingly dropped out would be surprised for a moment. When he became used to reading phonetics, however, he would exclaim that that was just how the teacher at school taught him to pronounce words. The teaching of phonetical spelling and the spelling of phonetical teaching opens another and bigger question, which will have to be dealt with when the time comes."

* * *

A man who did not wish to have his name appear in print, but who has been engaged in the executive work of compiling dictionaries for twenty years, said to the Sunday New York Times interviewer:

"This spelling reform seems to be amusing some people, but to one who comes into close touch with spelling matters it is a very serious question."

"Do you believe that the reforms will be effected?"

"Most assuredly. They are coming every day, and I do not think one need wait for Time's natural process. It is quite possible and commendable for a body of well-read men to hasten the natural process by the exercise of a little common sense. During the last few years the 'i' has been dropped from 'casuality,' an 'e' from 'ambidexterous,' and 'shewbread' has been changed to 'showbread.' These changes came naturally; why not aid others to get here quicker?"

Then the maker of dictionaries turned to slay an "e" which cropped up at the end of the word 'synonyme' in an English publication.

Queer Abodes of the Oyster.

ON a flaring patent medicine poster stuck on some piling near old Fulton Market was a startling picture of a big, gray octopus peering out of a huge chest that was supposed to have once contained the gold of some ancient buccaneer. The barnacled, brine-blistered waterman who was sitting on an upturned fish basket before a smoldering blaze of broken boxes dug his freckled hands further down in his faded blue trousers and said to the little crowd of loiterers who were sharing the warmth of his blaze:

"That's a mighty queer place for an octopus to hang his hat, but it can't come anywhere near the queer places an oyster will live in."

Then the old man grew reminiscent.

"When I was working on a dredge boat in the lower Chesapeake Bay," he related, "it was a common occurrence to fish up an old iron pot or a rusty teakettle and find it full of oysters. Sometimes the oysters would be packed in just like you had put them in by hand, and then again one big oyster would occupy all of the pot or kettle himself, just like some old bachelors live in big houses all alone. But pots and kettles weren't the only oyster houses by any means, for I remember one morning we pulled up an old coffee mill with oysters stuck around inside like electric bugs on the shade of an arc light. Demijohns and bottles full of oysters would come up every once in a while, and it always puzzled me how the oysters ever got inside the little necks. But the funniest oyster house that ever come down the river was an old plug hat. I guess it blew off some passenger on one of the bay packets, and when it had floated around on the waves awhile it got too soggy and slowly sank to the bottom. Then the oysters took possession of it, and when it came up in the dredge the Captain was so tickled by its comical appearance that he forgot to cuff any of the crew all day.

"But something even funnier happened when we brought up an old set of false teeth with a plump oyster stuck fast to the centre. Mr Oyster didn't relish losing his anchorage very much, and the culler had to give him a couple of stiff blows before he would part from the teeth. I wished afterward that I had kept it intact, because I could have won all kinds of money betting people an oyster had teeth. What do you think of a skull full of oysters? Sort of unsavory, eh? Well, one day we fished up a hoss skull in the dredge, and it was just brimming full of the finest bivalves that ever hung on a half-shell. Somebody had chucked a hoss overboard maybe years before, and the oysters had made a sort of an apartment house out of his cranium. But, as I said, mates, when it comes to queer places to live, the oyster can give the octopus cards and spades every time."

THE INFLUENCE OF A GOOD EXAMPLE

THE ferryhouse was desolate and barnlike, and the waiting passengers, principally women, were in all stages of irritability and shiver. An old woman of the usual type, shawl over her head and basket on her arm, let the swinging doors bang behind her, and stood for a moment as if uncertain as to her best mode of attack, so unpromising a front did the assemblage before her present. Then she timidly uncovered her wares to each in turn. A few took the trouble to shake their heads, but most of them merely continued to maintain their evident indifference to all the world outside of their personal interests, and these latter were in no way concerned with shoe laces, tape, and pins.

A deeper shade, if possible, of hopeless effort and baffled desire settled down over the wrinkled old face as its owner hobbled over to a seat and began to rub her hands together and blow on her fingers to warm them. She had made no effort to reach either of the radiators, surrounded three deep by shivering humanity. Some one has said that the most pathetic thing about the "other half" is their helpless passivity under the limitations laid upon them.

It was at that moment that a plain faced little body entered the waiting room and found a place to warm her fingertips over among her shivering kind. Then her glance fell on the old woman, and something like a quiver of pain passed over her face, as if she, too, had known what it meant to be cold, dispirited, and alone. Quietly and unostentatiously, as if unaware of any one about her, she slipped out to the "coffee stand" and brought a steaming cup and a "waffle" to the astonished old soul—3 cents' worth in all, but so simply and graciously given that it was really above price. For a minute the two talked together—yes, they were unusually nice-looking pins, and those shoelaces, they looked as if they might last a lifetime! Then the plain-faced little woman hurried on out into the baggage room.

She hadn't bought anything; it was patent to the most casual observer that even the pennies at her disposal must be few. But presently, a little shamefacedly, a well-dressed woman from the group about the nearest radiator came over and paid a quarter for two pieces of tape. A man asked for a pair of shoestrings, and in his embarrassment at the unaccustomed effort thanked the old woman and picked up a paper of pins! A young girl finally slipped a nickel over the edge of the basket, and smiled as she passed by on her way to the ticket window.

Less than a half dollar, all told, but there was somehow a different atmosphere in the dingy room—the radiators weren't giving out any more heat—the boat was still several minutes away from the icy slip—the prospect just as cheerless through the murky windows. But there were fewer frowns on the impatient faces on every side, and some of the harder lines had momentarily left mouths that almost smiled at the sight of the old creature's tearful joy. To this joy the majority had not contributed—perhaps they were as hard pressed in their lines of life as the old woman in hers—who can tell? Perhaps they had honest scruples about encouraging street vendors. But, as one sympathetic onlooker whispered to another—"anyhow, she's cold, and even if she is a fake a cup of coffee can't make her any more so! And I declare, it's made me feel as if, maybe, everybody isn't so mean and selfish after all!"

Certain it is, that simple, three-cent impulse of "human-togetherness" that morning was more than a passing influence in the lives of those that witnessed it.

REMOVING THE TREASURE TO CAIRO: THE BAGGAGE-TRAIN READY TO START

THE excavation in the Valley of the Kings, undertaken by Theodore M. Davis, for the benefit of the museum at Cairo, and directed by Mr. Quibell, the Government archaeologist superintending the Theban district, revealed early in February a flight of rock-hewn steps half hidden by ancient débris from the neighboring tombs of Ramses III. and Ramses XII. By the afternoon of the 12th the overhanging hillside was so far cleared away that one could go safely down the steps to a wall closing the entrance of a corridor leading to an unknown tomb. A break was found in the wall just under the corridor ceiling, and a boy was sent in, who discovered, just inside, a partly gilded chariot yoke, a scarab, and a slender, long, green staff circled with gilding near the top.

Now, these things, which no modern thief would have slighted, had clearly been dropped by a robber of long ago when only jewels and solid gold were worth the stealing; and as chippings from the neighboring tomb had been found on the steps, apparently in the very piles thrown there by the eighteenth dynasty workmen, it seemed certain that this tomb had lain undisturbed through the thirty subsequent centuries.

Expert hopes, therefore, ran high that the tomb would prove rich in all but the most costly funeral offerings, and native rumor swept from valley to valley with stories of a staff of solid gold taken from a tomb full of hoarded gold and silver, and glimmering with the light of a thousand jewels. This was regrettable; for the neighboring villagers, tempted generation after generation by the presence of royal tombs, are, now, by habit and inheritance, the most inveterate of thieves. Let one of them drop his turban, and you may be sure that, when he winds it again about his head, the folds will hide a scarab which he has spied on the ground. Nor are the natives capable of peccadillos only.

When prospects of rich loot dazzle their imagination it is well to guard against sins. So, after the yoke and staff and scarab were taken from the corridor, six gaffirs, or native guards, were set to watch over the tomb, and, for fear some venality should lurk even in these, an Englishman with two Americans stayed through the night, on the desert sand, watching now the semi-circle of natives around them, now the ancient steps that led, between the piled-up sand and débris, down out of the starlight into darkness.

By nine next morning, when Mr. Davis arrived from his dahabiyeh, only the absence of Mr. Quibell and of M. Maspero, official head of all such explorations in Egypt, delayed the final entrance into the tomb. Mr. Quibell was detained by official duties. M. Maspero, however, soon arrived. Joining Mr. Davis, the famous Frenchman, who selected the site for digging, went down the steps and slowly on through the rock-hewn descending corridor. It was barren. No works of funeral art strewed the floor; and the walls, unlike those of other tombs, were bare of both carving and painting. At the end of the corridor, where a second staircase was flanked by shelves, a mere bundle of ancient onions lay on the rock. But on one of the steps a roll of papyrus met the explorers' eyes. Just beyond it they found a wall plastered with mud and sealed with the priestly seal. This alone separated them from the tomb itself, and the top was so broken that they could peer into what for centuries on centuries no eye had seen; a confusion of dark forms shimmering mysteriously here and there with a touch of gold or silver.

Squeezing their way between the wall and the rock ceiling, M. Maspero and Mr. Davis were soon in the midst of such a medley of tomb furniture that, in the glare of the lighted candles, the first effect was one of bewilderment. Gradually, however, one object after another detached itself from the shimmering mass, shining through the cool air, dust-free and golden. Against the wall to the left stood a chair, and beyond it a gilded coffin cover lay upside down. In it was a conventional mask that gleamed golden through dark veiling, and the mummy whose head this mask had covered lay further off, its body partly encased in gilded open-work. Against the wall to the right leaned two "Osiris beds," flat surfaces on which seed had been sown, which, in sprouting had outlined the figure of the god. Not far off, along the wall opposite the door, stood a row of boxes, like tiny, closed sentry boxes, each containing a statuette. In front of these rose, shoulder high, the oblong black mass of a "sledge," the outermost case for a mummy. To the left stood a bed. Nearer again lay a silvered mummy case; and on this, and on a mummy beyond it, the second in the tomb, a shaft of cold blue light struck down from the outer day.

By daylight, then, mingled with the light of flickering candle flames, the discoverers examined the second mummy. By candle light alone they searched the first. Both had been plundered by the thief of long ago. First breaking one of the "sledges," and throwing mummy cases hither and yon, he had taken from both mummies everything of intrinsic value except a plate of gold closing the aperture through which the heart of one had been removed by the embalmers. Not a jewel, and only part of one necklace, remained of all those with which the dead must once have been bedecked. But if such trophies were lacking, others of surpassing splendor and significance still packed the tomb chamber from wall to wall. In the bottom of a mummy case, from which the thief had moved the cover, he had left a cushion and a graceful alabaster vase. In another mummy case he had neglected an alabaster jar and the cover of an embroidery box, which he must have carried across the chamber to a second bed, on which it now lay beside a superb gilded chair. Nearby, where the floor suddenly fell one deep step to a lower level, he had thrown among a multitude of sealed jars half of the gilded openwork casing which had encircled one of the mummies. Near these jars again he had propped a coffin cover against one corner of the tomb. Here, too, he had left a third bed, and one of the most important of all finds in the tomb—a chariot, the curving front and wheel-rims of which shone through the darkness golden and scarlet.

Except for its broken pole and the partly bare spokes of its gilded wheels, this chariot was in perfect condition; with the yoke already found in the corridor, and a whip soon to be discovered, it lacked nothing to be complete; and, as M. Maspero later pointed out, it illustrated a dashing theory of his about the ancient Egyptians' funeral rites and their views of the life after death. M. Maspero, baffled by the tomb itself, went back to the mummies of its occupants; and, candle in hand, studied the hieroglyphics on their gleaming mummy cases. "Tioua," he read after a time; and after further study he went on, "Ioua, hereditary Prince, chief friend among the friends of the sovereign."

Ioua and Tioua—these were the names of the dead in the tomb, and these dead, as M. Maspero therefore knew, had been the father and mother of Tii, a much-discussed Queen of the eighteenth dynasty, whose changing of the national religion had once caused such an uproar and violence that the burial of her parents in the sacred Valley of the Kings would have had to be hasty and secret.

The probable history of the tomb, accordingly, was clear. During a period of unrest, Queen Tii, who wished a royal burial for her father and mother, either chose an old tomb on which work had been abandoned, or stopped work on one which was being specially hewn out. In it she had placed the mummies, with the funeral offerings, till the tomb could be reopened and finished, and its contents transferred to a fitter resting place. Quiet times had perhaps never returned during her reign; and, however that may be, the tomb had been reopened, not by Queen Tii, but first by a robber, and now, at last, by modern archaeologists.

Their wish, of course, was less like the thief's, to seize on treasure, than like Queen Tii's, to move the funeral offerings and mummies of the dead to a place of honor and safety. The first survey over, M. Maspero and Mr. Davis left the tomb, accordingly, in charge of Mr. Quibell. With one of the Anglo-American guard of the night before, he got the necessary records in hand; and, with the same and other helpers, both English and Italian, he was soon carrying the objects in alabaster, bronze, and gilded or silvered wood cautiously out into the dazzle of Egyptian sunlight.

⁂

After such long burial alabaster is at first curiously fragile, then firm again and strong, and gold leaf is so delicate that it may peel off at a touch. Yet alabaster and gold leaf—cloth, too, and veiling—were almost absolutely uninjured. The graceful alabaster vase, three beds, three chairs, the mummy-cases, came glowing, flashing, and glittering into the day. A box containing "canopic" jars of alabaster—jars, that is, in which the viscera of the dead are preserved; the little sentry-boxes, each of them holding a ushapti figure, or image of a servant, for the dead; tarred objects of vague form, recognizable by archaeologists as the boxes containing mummies of ducks, legs of mutton, and other meats; seventy-two sealed jars full of fruits—all these things and more emerged from their long burial as fresh and dustless as when the tomb had first been closed. And as a certain alabaster pitcher appeared, a wasp came buzzing up and sipped what M. Maspero maintained was the still fluid honey poured into it more than three thousand years ago to satisfy the immortally human cravings of Ioua and Tioua.

Such munificent provisioning has hardly been surpassed, unless in the tomb of Ptahhotep, at Sakkara. There the walls are superbly carved with a pictorial bill of fare, stating how many ducks, geese, and so forth, are at Ptahhotep's disposal. Of the geese, for instance, there are just five thousand and six; but as they consist of one stone goose in bas-relief, plus the hieroglyph for five thousand and six, the larder suffers the eclipse of a certain unreality when compared with these solid meats, these fruits, and this perennially fluid honey. So a trivial onlooker might have reflected.

But when the mummies of Ioua and Tioua were carried up the steps, their faces bare to the sky, their closed eyes warmed by the sunlight, then even a hardened triviality must have failed. Dark and somewhat shrunken as they were, their look compelled awe. So living was it in its stillness, so changeless in its vitality, that death seemed only the sleep of immortality. Each face, as in life, was individual; the woman's delicate, almost wistful; the man's strong-featured and keen, with a smile of strange adroitness. And the contrast was not transient, but immutable. The essence, the very soul of each, was stamped on the body as if for eternity.

When the treasure was at last safely housed in the museum at Cairo, great was the wonder and many were the controversies which it aroused. Into these last, the sport and the dueling of archaeologists, only a curiosity akin to malice could have prompted one to hurry. But some study of the treasures themselves, and of their meaning, was too alluring to postpone.

After the sheer mass and splendor of the whole, the importance of individual specimens was what most impressed the mind. Four of the alabaster canopic jars, with their covers delicately carved into heads, with the eyes painted white and black, were not only fine in workmanship, but almost unsurpassed. Among the ushapti figures, a few of which were wooden, one of alabaster, two gilded and two covered with silver, made exquisitely iridescent by time, at least one figure showed a perfection of modeling that ranked it very high. The impassive gold mask which had covered the face of Tioua was held by some to possess the unique importance of being the only one ever found covered with veiling, and though competent authorities pooh-poohed this whole contention, the simple beauty of the head itself, and the richness of its jasper, carnelian, and lapis lazuli inlaid necklace were patent to all. The three beds, graceful of frame, with bottoms of braided flax, marvelously intact, and heads and corners white with ivory or bright with gilded hieroglyphs and grotesque gods, were surely not to be outranked.

Of the three chairs, one, as M. Maspero said, seemed almost in the style of Louis XVI., and another in the style of the French Empire. All, in fact, were strangely modern; but all were of an elegance or a solidity which ranked two of them among the very few fine specimens in the world, and placed one perhaps second only to the superb chair of Hatshepah in the British Museum. Finally, the chariot, with the flower-like ornaments of its gilded front, with its crimson-rimmed wheels, its pole, and its yoke, stood out complete and excelled, if at all, only by the somewhat larger gaunt car in Florence.

To the non-professional observer, however, intrinsic beauty made a more spontaneous appeal than questions of relative ranking, and beauty abounded both in these and in the rest of the trophies. Four small metal heads, topping the mummied contents of the canopic jars, were modeled with a formality not lacking in charm and ornamented harmoniously with gold and brick red and two shades of green. On a larger scale, and with greater wealth of material, the mummy-cases had much the same characteristics. Perhaps the finest of them, the mummy-like gilded figure which was one of the coverings of Tioua, had a face whose sweetly reposeful mouth was strangely uncontradicted by the steady gaze of the jet-black shining eyes. These gained only solemnity from the hard, dark-blue lines of enamel eyebrows and eyelids inlaid in the gold surrounding them. The same blue, inlaid with carnelian and jasper, enriched a collar-like ornament like that of the veiled mask, but ending at each shoulder in a chubby little bird's head, with deep blue eyes and bill. Where the clenched hands were crossed on the breast, this color, with carnelian and jasper again, was inlaid in a braceletlike design, emphasizing the glow of the surfaces around; and these stretched to the figure's very feet, smooth, golden, untouched with color, yet varied with delicate, very flat reliefs; first, below the breast, Osiris, kneeling with arms outstretched and wings spread beneath them; then, like the binding cloths of a mummy, one longitudinal and three widely separated transverse bands, all curiously wrought with hieroglyphic eyes, tools, owls, and stars.

The skill through which such strange charm and splendor had been achieved showed itself also in the inlaying of enamel and of semi-precious stones in the vigorously drawn vulture of another superb mummy case. This skill was evident again in a little embroidery box, the surfaces of which, tinted with skylike blue, had been partly covered with gilded plaster bas-reliefs—among them the kneeling Osiris—framed with wood and ivory in a design whose straight brown and white lines bordered and separated alternate gay squares of bright blue and red. A more homely skill appeared in the perfection of many minute implements, models of hoes, water buckets, and tiny yokes to carry them. Finally, with an aspect of startling modernity, this varied Egyptian skill cropped out in the build of a ventilated rush trunk and of a large blue embroidery box, each of which was upheld not merely at the corners by legs, but at intervening points by wooden rods in the trusslike forms of a steel bridge.

This identity of forms more than three thousand years ago and to-day made time seem to shrink and shrivel; and as one turned from trunk or embroidery box to the blue, glazed pencil of hollow earthenware from which Tioua may have taken paint for her toilet, or to the goose-feather pillow against which she may have leaned, or the chair on the worn arms of which Ioua's hands may have rested; then she and he seemed alive again, their closed eyes seemed to open, and their gaze to meet the gaze of the mind's eye.

Fantastic as the impression was, it had a certain justification in one aspect of the objects which it called up. Unlike the vast majority of offerings found in the Egyptian tombs, many of these were not mere models or symbols of meat, vases, beds, and chairs, but the things themselves. In contrast with the few small plaster models found in his tomb, the seventy-two sealed jars were hollow, real, and well filled with provisions. The vase and the honey pitcher were equally genuine. While the charming little "Louis XVI." chair was obviously a model lightly built and covered with gilded low reliefs in fragile and thinly gilded plaster, the "Empire" chair, with its solid wooden back deeply carved with grotesque gods, was so strongly built that, in spite of light gilding, it was almost certainly real. The third chair was doubtful; but the graceful beds must all surely have come from a house of the living. In short, as M. Maspero put it, the find, on the whole, suggested that some storeroom crowded with furniture had been emptied into the tomb.

Ability to See Everything.

A SURGEON of this city, says The International Journal of Surgery, occasionally takes an applicant for a position on the house staff of the hospital with which he is connected, and bids him look out of a window and describe what he sees. Some men practically see nothing at all; others notice but a few things, not always the most important, while the balance appear to observe everything. It is from among the latter that the successful candidate is commonly chosen. It is to the men who see everything that every art and science is indebted for whatever progress they have made, and the surgeon's method of gauging the probable value of a young man's service has nothing in it that is trivial and unimportant.

Something Lacking Somewhere.

WHEN Dumbly was told that the answer to the conundrum, "Why are W. R. Hearst and Anna Gould much alike?" is that "Both got bum counts," he hurried home and asked his wife if she could answer the question. She asked him to tell her the answer, and he informed her it was because each was defeated. Now he is convinced that Mrs. Dumbly has no sense of humor because she didn't laugh.

THREE stitches, you say, and then drop one? But is it as pretty as that work you did last year?"

"It's a smoking jacket. My husband will not wear a boughten one; says mine fit better and that my embroidery shows up so well."

"Just a little sherry in the gravy, you said? Somehow I always manage to get a bit too much pepper in mine."

"Yes, she had the croup last night. I thought I should never get her to breathing properly again. It's so hard when a child takes to having croup. No, I never had it, but her father was subject to it when he was a boy."

"My pet aversion? Why, darning my stockings, so you can imagine the awfulness of having to darn my husband's as well."

"I prefer the French drip for coffee making. I'm never quite sure of the result when I try the American method, with it ground coarse."

"Such a love of a waist as that is! Made here by that Irish dressmaker? And yet I should have declared that it came directly from Paris. Yes, I think the striped effect is better for you than the checks."

It was not at an afternoon tea party amid clatter of spoons and cups, nor yet at a meeting of the Dorcas Society, nor of ladies gathered together to plan for a charity bazaar. From the conversation you would have thought so, but when you looked about you noted a profusion of trunks with the tills open and in front of every trunk sat a woman in the first or middle or last stage of dressing or crocheting or writing down a cookery receipt.

You, a woman from the every-day world, find you are merely in a large dressing room in the midst of the ladies of the circus.

They are pulling on tights or taking them off, sticking a peculiarly waved hairpin in the hair, dashing a bit of black on an eyebrow or a streak of pink to the cheekbone; or, perchance, here and there is a girl with a variegated-looking towel and a pot of cold cream rubbing the make-up off her face. It seems to take her but the fraction of a minute to transform herself from circus girl to an ordinary-looking, well-dressed matron ready for a trip from Madison Square Garden to the shopping district. A minute ago she was wearing yellow tights and pumps, flying through the air, turning a somersault, bowing her acknowledgments to the applauding crowd in seats and boxes. Now she is wearing a brown cloth dress, a modest hat to match, a pair of rubbers over her heavy walking shoes, and off she goes, saying, "Now to buy the beefsteak for dinner."

⁂

They are in New York "permanently," that is to say, for five weeks. This is a long while, so many of them, with the love of home in their hearts, have started up housekeeping.

With the exception of perhaps a half dozen young girls, the women are married. Their husbands are circus performers. They go in families. You will find father, mother, sister, brother, son, daughter, aunt, and uncle doing "family turns" in the ring.

Before J. M. Barrie wrote that delightful playlet, "Pantaloon," he must have spent some time in the circus and behind the scenes as you are doing now, his description of the tragedy and comedy of the circus life being so real. That motley fool in flour and red paint and bulging pantalets down in the ring, making your little boys shriek with laughter, is a grandfather, who after the performance will dance his latest grandchild on his knee. Up there among the fliers on the trapeze is his wife, doing a turn in conjunction with her daughter, and underneath them, flying through the air on a bicycle, is her son-in-law, and behind the large doors where stand the elephants and horses ready to come on and do their turns, you will find a grandson and granddaughter, a bit "under age," yet looking forward longingly to the time when they shall have turned 16, so that the law will allow them to join the party of acrobats and thus make the circus family complete.

Up in the dressing room you have come across a little five-year-old daughter of a performer, telling you of her wonderful toy trapeze and offering to do a somersault for you; a boy of the same age will tell you about his wonderful pony, and how she carries him safely through a standing ride.

Girls do not get circus-struck as they get stage-struck. They are born into the circus of circus parents, whose parents and grandparents and great-grandparents were in the circus. Tiny children will look at you in amazement if you ask them what they expect to do when they are grown, and will tell you, "Why, I'll go into the circus, of course." And just as they will go into the circus, "of course," they will marry into the circus, of course, and after them their children will go into the circus.

Going about in the women's dressing rooms of the Barnum & Bailey Circus you will perhaps find but one woman who was not born to the circus. She is Isabelle Butler, the young American, who does "The Dip of Death," looping the gap in an automobile. Two years ago she was teaching elocution. Though not born into the circus, she married into it. Privately she is Mrs. Butler, wife of the champion bicyclist. In the automobile act she is Miss Isabelle Butler. In both capacities she is certainly one of the most beautiful women in America. She is queenly in her walk and in her carriage. She wears her hair parted in the middle, Madonnalike; she speaks softly and sweetly, and is adored by her horse, Dolly, whom she rides in the spectacular procession. Always in her trunk, in the topmost till, handy of access, you will find a box of cream chocolates for Dolly, who loves them above sugar and carrots, although also neatly wrapped in tissue paper you will find a carrot beside the chocolate box. Dolly has an astonishing capacity for chocolate creams, and when she has eaten such a number as seems compatible with proper digestion and her mistress's purse, she is fain to fill up with a carrot whatever gap remains in her appetite.

In the till of another trunk, a half dozen removed from Miss Butler's, you will find something charmingly dainty and alive—little Fifi, the dog mascot, of the Silbon-Seigrist Venetian troupe. All during the act when her mistress is performing and while, she dresses and undresses, Fifi sits in the trunk till with her big brown eyes watching intently and her neck clasped in a solid gold collar. Although she has a few little tricks of her own she is not a circus dog; that is to say, she does not perform in the ring. It is her business merely to watch over the destiny of the Silbon-Seigrists. Over in another trunk till you will find another diminutive doggie pet of another performer.

What you will note most particularly about the inmates of the dressing room is their femininity, absence of pose, and neatness. If you have not examined into the recesses of the circus traveling trunk, you will never know what a really neat-looking trunk can be like, and you will also know nothing of the real niceties of trunk packing. Your idea of the "artistic nature" will be, doubtless, that of a trunk which is stirred with a broom handle when anything is wanted in the hope that the desired article will finally come to the top.

Go through one of these trunks and learn the true art of packing, so that you can go in the dark and find what you want. The invisible hairpins are in their own niche, the bone hairpins in theirs, handkerchiefs never vary in their position a fraction of an inch, here are the safety pins, here the common ones, neatly tied in a bag are the tights, in another bag is the white bodice, wrapped carefully in muslin lies the pink skirt, just here the pumps, there the slippers; and in that corner the sash. In the room you note neither hustle nor bustle nor hurry. With a little mirror safely balanced in a corner of the till, each lady brushes, combs, buckles, and fastens calmly and leisurely. When it is time for their turns they walk out quietly and down into the arena. Never would you suppose they were going there to stand on their heads, fly through the air. Over tights they throw a cloak as they go from dressing room to the entrance of the arena, and to keep their pumps clean they haul over them a pair of old slippers. In the dressing room they wear kimonos as they sit about doing fancy work.

When she has done her turn and is ready for the street, there is no possible way that you could tell a circus performer from a quiet, home-living woman, unless it may be by her graceful walk. Throughout all the world there is a certain style of get-up and dressing, which, happening upon it in the street, makes people exclaim, "A theatrical person, probably!" Not so with the circus girl. When she goes out she leaves the circus behind her in so far as her appearance is concerned.

"Pick that up for mamma, dear, will you?" said some one in yellow tights to some one in pink the other day when I sat chatting in the dressing room. The some one in pink looked about 18 and very pretty, and she picked up for the lady in yellow the rabbit's foot she had dropped, in the process of "making up." Mother and daughter, they went into the ring together; mother and daughter, divested of tights and dressed, each suitably for her years, they went out into the street and round the corner to match some broadcloth. It was such a little incident, and yet somehow it had the effect of making one wish to go out into the highways of society and bring in certain mothers who dress themselves as young as though they were their own daughters, and robe their grown-up daughters in fourteen-year-old style, to take lessons in the art of growing old gracefully.

They hate to break a looking glass in the dressing room. If it gets cracked en route the owner feels that she has no part in it, but if from her own hands it falls to the floor and to bits, she feels a certain uneasiness that is entirely womanly.

One woman will face danger on a flying trapeze in the ring, and then come back to her dressing room to exclaim in horror at a beatle, and Mlle. Octavie La Tour, who every afternoon and evening does "The Limit" act in her blue and white automobile, twirling through midair, upside down, then righting herself and it on a platform, takes to her heels at sight of a mild-eyed mouse. The greatest and most dangerous and most desperate act ever performed in a circus is done by this chic French lady, somewhat bigger than your thumb. Twice a day spectators tremble for her, twice a day they hold their breath when the car strikes the platform, watching to see if she is able to shake out her tumbling hair and stand upright after her perilous performance; but when it is all over and she is ascending to the dressing room she does not want to find a mouse along her route.

When she goes down for her act she goes as calmly as for a walk in the park, and when she is turning the somersault she looks at her father up in the audience and recognizes him. Over in France she was born into the circus, the daughter of circus people and the granddaughter. Before she did "The Limit" she was an acrobatic artist, and it is on account of her acrobatic skill now that she is able to manage her auto car.

At home in her apartments she can prepare for you the most delightful bits in a chafing dish, and as she waits about in the dressing room she fills in spare time learning English and doing crochet work.

Mrs. White, a dear, motherly woman, who is growing old in the service of the wardrobe, is the matron of the dressing room department, and has the care of all the wardrobe. She it is who sees that clothes are made in time, kept in repair and free of soiling. Under her direction work a dozen seamstresses. Her greatest pride is in the costumes worn in the opening spectacle, where a hundred thousand dollars' worth of magnificence covers men, women, and horses. Sitting up in the balcony near the door of the sewing room she will discover that one of the velvet, gold-embroidered mantles covering a horse "dips" so that its fringe touches the sawdust, and straightway a message is sent down to have the mantle adjusted.

In the dressing room the women are all her "children," though she will tell you with a note of pride in her voice that they are nearly all married, and that there are positively no unprotected girls among the performers. The unmarried ones are with their parents, and many a girl of 18 or 20 who does a daring act up in the air has never gone through the streets of New York alone. There are two young Japanese girls whom the visitor to the dressing room cannot fail to notice. The skirts of their ordinary dresses are far above the ankles. They are here with their father, and in a few years they will doubtless be noted acrobats.

As circus performing runs in families, so certain kinds of performing seem to run in nations. The best acrobatic women are Italian and German; the best high school horsewomen are Hungarians, although the best fancy riding is to be found among the Americans girls. Josie Demott, for example, is the only woman in the world who turns a somersault on a horse. Among Frenchwomen one will find those who will perform the greatest feats of daring, and the Englishwomen are superior on the trapeze.

In the dressing room most of the women will tell you that they dress and undress twenty times a day, which is much oftener than is considered necessary by the most smartly dressed women in society. There is far less excitement and worry about all this dressing than there is in the ordinary home, where the mistress wears but two gowns during the day. This is because the keynote of the circus dressing room is a place for everything and everything in its place.

But just here one is confronted with a wonder and an inconsistency—the lady acrobat who can hang from a wheel by her feet, turn a somersault in midair, manipulate her body as though it were of rubber elastic, yet cannot fasten her dress waist down the back!

SOME REASONS "WHY NEW YORK IS WORTH WHILE"

THE head of an important business in a not distant city visited New York last week, and observing the ability of a young man in the same line made an offer of employment. "If you will return with me," said the visiting one, "I will give you $25 more a week than you are now getting."

"It would have to be at least $50 more," replied the resident of Manhattan. "I wouldn't leave New York for any less than that."

And about the same time this conversation was being held two shop girls in a Broadway department store, each drawing $4 the week, were discussing a third. "Maggie's got a ten-dollar job," said one, impressively. "Gee!" exclaimed the other. "Yes," said the first, "but she's got to live in Chicago." "Then she's welcome to it," said Miss Shop Girl, in a tone of relief. "I'll take little old Noo York and $4 every time for mine."

It is, perhaps, impossible to reckon in dollars and cents the advantages to each class of society of being resident in New York, but that there is a very tangible advantage no one who takes the trouble to look about may deny. There, for example, is Central Park, the rollingest, most picturesque public space in any American city.

Then, considered naturally, there is Riverside Drive. Again the grateful green spaces, but with a different view to the west, where the Hudson rolls; and where all "the little cargo boats that sail the wet seas round" drift and prance and bob up and down near the New York shore or over closer to the marvelous Palisades. There are million-dollar houses on this Riverside Drive—but the advantages reserved free to the New Yorker are not to be figured in dollar marks. If a half hour spent on top of a Riverside Park hill at sunset, with the red glow on the waters and the graceful white boats gliding up and down, is not a sensible investment, then the meaning of the term is not understood.

And, while on the subject of the marine, where is the city which offers the opportunity for a study of the great world of shipping such as New York presents? The docking and departure of an ocean liner is a sight to fill the onlooker with the thoughts of big things. It takes him out of the narrowness of surroundings and suggests the world beyond his little limits. The vessels of all the world find port along West Street and South Street, and time passed in these surroundings is certainly time placed to a good educational use.

If one would be entertained by persons instead of things, there is always the free parade in which the population of the biggest city in the New World are ever indulging for the benefit of all observers. A stand at the corner of Twenty-third Street where Broadway and Fifth Avenue come together assuredly is as rewardful as a seat in a circus when the Congress of Nations passes in review. The best-dressed women in the world, the never-ending line of carriages, cabs, automobiles, carrying the celebrities in the commercial, political, professional, and stage circles—these sights belong to the New Yorker and to the New Yorker alone.

And, architecturally, where is the city to compare with New York's monster developments? The Flatiron Building, on the triangular corner, and the Times Building, a mile up Broadway, are two worthy illustrations of the growth of the building idea. Hundreds on hundreds of thousands pass these mammoth houses daily, and at each passing involuntarily glance up at the marvels and find fresh wonder that such things can be.

If one wishes a more intimate view of impressive things and impressive persons, there are the corridors of the great hotels, free to all New Yorkers who respect themselves. The wealth of the Orient is spread out for the enjoyment of all who enter. Turkish rooms, Indian rooms, Japanese bowers abound. Soft music fills the ear, and fountains spurt gently from unexpected places. Delightful parlors are free for all who care to linger and rest in the comforts of rich upholstery and easing springs. Almost priceless curiosities from all the worlds are laid out for the entertainment of the visitor, who need not spend one cent in return for his pleasure.

Less spacious but no less picturesque are the innumerable rathskellers which allure the gregarious New Yorker. Inventive genius seems to have reached its highest development in the arrangement of these attractive show places. Mirror effects outrivaling those of the Parisians, cascades, aquariums, oddly, prices are no higher than the prices charged for refreshment in places where no note of the picturesque is sounded.

If one is to regard the educational advantages of a New York residence—looking at "educational" in its more restricted sense—there are the free lectures of the Board of Education, the free courses in all branches at the Cooper Institute, the infinite suggestion of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the American Museum of Natural History, and a dozen other institutions of similar sort, to say nothing of the many free libraries.

You cannot get the thousand ever-changing sights of the big department store anywhere in America as you can get them in New York. To the visitor from the interior the department store breaks upon the vision with all the charm and splendor of half a dozen county fairs rolled into one. It is a commercial institution, to be sure, but it has its sentimental advantages.

The biggest free show in all the world, however, is not the department store or the Broadway parade or the hotel sights, but the daily struggle for wealth in Wall Street, which finds its fullest expression on the floor of the Stock Exchange.

Turning from the secular to the religious, the churches of New York repay their visitors no less in their architectural richness than in the infinite variety of their creeds. There are eleven hundred of them in the city, and besides the most common denominations there are Christian Science edifices of the most amazing beauty, a Joss House for its Chinese worshippers, Quaker Meeting Houses, mariners' churches, and a church for agnostics. The Episcopal Cathedral of St. John the Divine is under way, and will be completed at a cost of $6,000,000. The Catholic Cathedral is a gem of construction and decoration. Grace Church and Old Trinity are historic, and, in another way, so is the Little Church Around the Corner.

"An Englishwoman in New York": The American Woman

Our Critical Visitor Compares Uncle Sam's Daughters with Their British Cousins---Differences She Finds in Their Temperament and Everyday Life.

LET an Englishwoman's cook leave her suddenly, with no kitchenmaid to step in immediately to fill the breach, and the Englishwoman will exclaim "How tiresome!" Ascending to her dressing room she will array herself in dinner gown, dress her hair in the prevailing mode, and, descending to the drawing room, wait quietly with a book in her hand and her evening wrap thrown on the back of a chair, greeting her husband, as he comes in from business, with the exclamation:

"So very unfortunate, dear, especially as I know you must be tired, but we must dine at a restaurant to-night. The cook has bolted!"

"By Jove! I'll have her in the police court to answer for this!" he exclaims irately, then, proceeding to his dressing room, he calmly prepares for dinner. The lady of the house tells the housemaid to whistle for a hansom—the housemaid who could not cook a proper meal to save her very life—and the two are whirled away to a restaurant dinner.

The next morning the husband will stop at a registry office, order in a "temporary" till a permanent cook shall be secured, mutter threats about prosecuting the old one, (for, mind you, she can be prosecuted according to our excellent English law,) and the affairs of the household move on without an additional line upon the placid English wife's brow nor a single extra gray hair in the head of her husband.

Take a family of the same class, the same position, the same means, in New York. Let the cook bolt without previous warning at 5:30 in the evening, and the husband will come home for dinner at 6 or a little after to eat a dinner fit for kings, cooked by the hand of his wife, who will sit opposite him at the table, pretty, smartly dressed, a bit breathless from her exertions to have it "on time," and when he praises the wonderful fish sauce and demands a second helping of the June peas, she will reply to his congratulation that they have at last "got a cook that is the real thing," with the information:

"She left at 5:30. Something displeased her; I don't know what."

* * *

Then the husband will reply, "My dear, I ought to have known that nobody could have cooked this dinner but your own sweet self!" and then he falls to with the beefsteak, and no wonder, for if there is any one in the world who knows how to grill a steak it is the American woman.

And the next day the husband buys his wife a new pearl pin and thanks God that he is not as other husbands—English husbands, for instance, who have "helpless" wives.

And also on that next day the wife is so tired that it is almost an effort to smile over the new pearl pin, but she doesn't let her husband know it.

It is my opinion that when in the eternal scheme of things it was found in the apportionment of the servant class that there were not enough servants to go round, and so in one civilized country there must be a great dearth of them, the servantless lot fell to the share of the United States most fortunately, because of the resourcefulness and adaptability of your women.

The American woman, nervous, alert, fertile of imagination, readily adapts herself to any circumstances that may overtake her, and while the Englishwoman is calmly wondering what she shall do under a sudden change of condition the American woman has simply gone and done it. True, the Englishwoman, like the Englishman, makes a good colonizer, but it is only after long years, while the American woman sees a situation and springs into it immediately.

When Uncle Sam goes empire-making and takes along his wife, then let John Bull look to his laurels.

Quick to seize, quick to adapt, and quick to respond to the sudden calls of an emergency, I wonder that long ere this the American women have not gone in for politics and diplomacy, although in marrying a politician or diplomat she may be doing this. When an Englishwoman wants to help her husband who is standing for Parliament she goes out and makes speeches for him. When an American woman decides to help her husband in his political ambitions she stays at home and gives a dinner to his most influential enemy, preparing with her own hands the particular dish which the luckless man is known to hanker after.

To ambitious young Englishmen, without means or with very small income, the advice to go West and marry an American girl might be given with all hope of bringing about wonderful results. If one did not notice how readily the American woman rises to the occasion of suddenly accumulated wealth, one might assert that she, more than the woman of any other nationality, is meant to be a poor man's wife. The truth is, probably, that she was meant for all things, great and small, and that eventually she will conquer the world if she doesn't worry too much.

* * *

This is one of the things about her that most puzzles me, this inconsistency in her character. So equal to any emergency, why does she fret, why get that wrinkle on her brow, why that nervous twitching of her hands? Why that continual and ever-recurring wondering if this, that, or the other thing will be "on time"? And what particular difference will it often make if some things are "behind time"?

A year or so ago in London an English cook applied at my home for a situation, giving as her reason for leaving her last place that her mistress was an American lady, "so clever that she was uncanny." Said the cook:

"Yes, Madam, I was afraid of the American lady. One morning the baker's man was late, and we had to wait breakfast for the bread. When we had waited ten minutes the lady came down to the kitchen and said:

"'Why, because the baker's man is late, must my husband be late to his business also?'

"I said: 'But, Madam, we cannot have breakfast without bread!'

She took a tin pan, grabbed a spoon, and called out: 'Flour! Cold water! Butter! Grease the muffin tins! Fire the oven! Mary take the bacon and coffee to the dining room!'

"'But, Madam,' said the parlormaid, 'there's no bread!'

"She waved Mary up the stairs, stirred round the flour and butter and water, threw open the oven door, snatched a plate from the dresser, opened the oven door again, and, if you'll believe me, Madam, in three minutes she was marching upstairs with a plate of hot rolls; all beautifully brown, and everybody knows, Madam, it takes two hours to make and bake rolls. I gave notice then and there, for I couldn't live with an uncanny lady like that!"

I never quite appreciated the cook's story and her superstitious fear of her American mistress, who seemed to wave a magician's wand to have hot biscuit on her husband's plate, till I came to New York and found wonders of that sort occurring every day.

New York seems to me to possess every comfort and convenience the mind of man or woman can contrive or money procure. Let a child sigh for the moon, and the shop will provide him such a good imitation of it that he will never suspect that he has been fooled, but if he can't get the shop moon he knows his mother can make him a moon just as good.

If all the wonders invented by American women on the spur of the moment were patented, what a sensation they would create! If the American woman sees something she wants and can't have she does not give it up, as an Englishwoman would do. She turns her attention to creating something "just as good." Very often she turns out something a great deal better.

Give her a rag-bag, a needle, and some old basting threads, and she is capable of turning out a Paris gown. In the process of constructing a bodice out of small scraps or strips she busies her mind as to how to hide the piecings. She may, she decides, cover the patches with rosettes of ribbon velvet. Then the bodice may look as if the rosettes were really meant to cover something, which will never do, whereupon she scatters the rosettes recklessly, with the result that the next day she goes calling robed in the most Frenchy, chic arrangement the mind of a Parisian modiste could ever conceive.

Yesterday I went shopping with an American girl. "I want a bathgown," she said.

"I think the women's bath robes must be in another department. These are men's," I said, shaking out a mass of Turkish things.

"Men's bath gowns are cheaper than women's," she said; "I'll get one of these."

"Of course they would do," I answered doubtfully, "only they are so very large and so long."

"I was thinking of that," she replied. "I can cut off enough round the bottom to make a lovely towel, and off the ends of the sleeves I can get four washcloths."

I have an artist friend in London who, given several yards of liberty silk and some safety pins, can construct a gown. But she makes herself look like what you Americans term a "guy." Not all Englishwomen have the audacity to try this sort of thing. Indeed, those of us who know this particular young genius view her in the light of a fearful warning. We argue that she is not a dressmaker, therefore should not attempt to make clothes.

* * *

In regard to the things she does not know how to do the American woman's viewpoint is altogether different. She says: "Others have done it, why may not I?" Or she will see no reason why because a thing has never been done before it may not be done now.

If an American woman does not adapt herself to her circumstances it is not because she cannot, but because she does not wish to. An Englishwoman will try, and generally the reason that she will fail is because she cannot.

I know of nothing more pathetic than the sight of an Englishwoman of the upper middle class, accustomed to keeping servants, suddenly reduced to the necessity of doing without them. She will try with all her might and main to sweep, to dust, to wash the dishes. Her hands will grow knotty and gnarled; her hair look unkempt; her dress full of spots. Somehow she cannot seem to bring herself to wearing an apron. She connects an apron with a servant, and she seems to feel that so long as she has kept the apron at a distance she has saved her dignity, though it be at the expense of her skirt.

The American woman, under the circumstances, gets as fond of her apron as the Englishwoman grows averse to it, and wears it on occasions when it is entirely unnecessary. I recently lunched with a young bachelor woman who forgot to remove her apron throughout the whole meal. But I will say that even this neglect is preferable to the spotted gown of many an English bachelor woman who essays to make a home for herself in a London flat and has not the means of hiring a servant.

* * *

The folding furniture so prevalent here is always to me a sign of the resourcefulness of American women. To us English a bed must be a bed and a bedroom a place to sleep in. In our average home the bedroom is somewhat bare of beauty and comfort, according to American standards. Many an evening we will sit before our dressing mirror brushing our hair and array ourselves in evening gowns while our skin turns itself into gooseflesh. I myself have done this dozens of times, and I never noticed that I was uncomfortable till my attention was called to the fact by American women. We have a certain way of furnishing our bedrooms to which most English people generally adhere. At the foot of the bed we place a couch. Here in New York the other day in furnishing our flat I suggested to the furniture man that he might put the couch over against the wall opposite, when Aunt Louisa suddenly called my attention to the fact that "a couch should go at the foot of the bed."

"But why, Aunt Louisa?" I asked.

"Because it is always done," returned Aunt Louisa. True! In England there would seem to be no "precedent" for placing a couch anywhere but at the foot of the bed. Just why anybody ever established such an uncomfortable and unexplainable "precedent" I am sure I cannot fathom. Moreover, in my own room the couch has been wheeled into a corner, with Aunt Louisa wondering what my poor dear mother would think of me if she could view the "strange disorder" of my bedroom.

An American girl visiting London some years ago remarked upon what she called the disgraceful appearance of Buckingham Palace, with the wooden backs of looking glasses in all the front bedroom windows. We have there a way of always placing our dressing tables directly in a window. The custom probably originated in times when bedrooms had only one window, and it was thought that in no other way could the light be secured for dressing purposes. But given two or three windows in a bedroom or dressing room, and you will notice that even then the dressing table stands in a window, to the disfigurement of the house and the lessening of the pretty effect of the room and its furnishings.

The first thing an American woman does when she takes a furnished house or apartment in London is to have the dressing tables moved away from the windows. An Englishwoman will notice how advantageously the aspect of the room is changed, but the idea of the change will not have occurred to her until suggested by the American.

Initiative, originality, resourcefulness! After several months of visiting in New York I would unhesitatingly name these characteristics as the keynote of the disposition of the average American woman as I have observed her in New York. It is for her to search out the most wonderful bargains at the shops; to pounce upon chipped and cracked things known, I believe, as "as-izzes," and so manipulate a rose or a fern that it shall droop over the crack or the chipped edge in the most natural way, and behold the costly look of the bric-à-brac in her home! It is for her to need an umbrella stand, yet lacking either the money or the time to go out and buy it, to paint and gild a red earthen flowerpot, stick a cork in the bottom, and lo! your umbrella rests and drips sedately in the hall. It is for her to turn broken wine glasses into fairy lamps that cast a soft glow over your complexion and make you look but half your age. She can frame a picture with a pasteboard box and the good end of a broken window pane, hang it in just the position to catch a light that shall turn it into a rare art treasure, though she did but tear it from a ten-cent magazine. It is she who, if she lives in London and is suddenly bereft of servants, will rise just as the dawn is coming, tie a cloth to a broom handle, and "hearthstone" the front steps before the neighbors' servants are abroad for the whitening of their own—for in London according to the way your front step is whitened shall you be judged by your neighbors. It is the American woman who, pressed for room, can convert her library into a bedroom by the mere turning round of a writing desk, while an Englishwoman would be mourning her inability to entertain guests because of the lack of sleeping rooms. It is the American woman who can turn the ugliest traveling trunk into a card table with an Oriental cover and you never suspect that it was not bought especially for a useful ornament in her sitting room. It is she who can convert a gas globe into a flower vase by turning it upside down over a common jar of ferns. It is she who can eke out the number of her sofa pillows by saving the "excelsior" that comes round china from the shops, and so arrange the downy cushions that you never suspect the hardness of the others.

It is the American woman who, having been poor for twenty-five years, can suddenly learn of unexpected millions, stretch out her hand, and can take them and fall as naturally into a life of ease as though she had been born with the silver spoon.

It is she who can set sail for England and become a Countess or a Duchess as unconcernedly as though she had been born the daughter of an Earl. It is for her adaptability and resourcefulness that she is sought out to fill these positions in preference to the heiress of a wealthy English family not of gentle birth. In cases of this sort, without her known adaptability, her wealth would go for nothing.

And with all the American woman's resourcefulness and superior advantages it has been found necessary to organize "don't worry" circles all over the United States. She has yet to learn something from us Englishwomen—a certain calmness and unconcern over the things that do not really matter. I was almost going to say a certain disregard for a bit of dust on the drawing-room table, a biscuit crumb on the dining-room floor, an unconcern in little things, a kind of poise and a lack of self-consciousness that the average Englishwoman possesses in a far greater degree than the American.

MARY MORTIMER MAXWELL.

TIMES SQUARE NEWSBOY, "PINK McCLUSKEY," NOW A THEATRICAL STAR

SOCIETY always has fads. A week ago "the latest" was a New Jersey girl who interpreted the Oriental soul with her feet. Next week the newest fad, in all probability, will be Pincus.

What in the world is Pincus? It—Pincus—is a "who," four feet long by two feet broad, rotund of girth, squat of figure, jolly of countenance, and only fourteen years old. And as in days of old when Kings made favorites of dwarfs and other odd little folk, so, as they did in Rochester the other day, will New York society kings and queens take up Pincus.

Pincus—Pincus Lokosky, to be precise—is a Times Square newsboy who, as he puts it himself, "just butted into the drama." A few months ago he was making 4 cents profit off every dozen papers he sold in Times Square; to-day—oh, just observe him strutting down Broadway, with his thumbs in his armpits, his hat slewed over his left eye, his little, fat legs making wide and very important strides—to-day he is a theatrical "star." Not an ordinary star, mind you; Pincus was created by public acclamation, after he had kept a Rochester audience in roars for two hours. Therefore not only was he a star, but a social lion, invited to afternoon teas and Sunday dinner parties, during which Pincus learned much and taught more.

Pincus Lokosky is no stage name. It was only recently that the boy star discovered what his real name was. He was known around the Subway entrance in Times Square as "the Pink Cuss." The dominant shade in his color scheme, however, was red. He wore a huge sweater of that hue. From one end of it emerged the short, stocky legs; from the other the fat, merry face. Edgar Selwyn, the playwright, stopped to buy a paper one afternoon. There was the usual rush of newsboys to supply it. But the Pink Cuss was first. Between handing the paper and taking the cent he glanced contemptuously over his shoulder and hissed at his competitors:

"Aw, twenty-t'ree—twenty-t'ree, youse! Gwan!"

* * *

Selwyn at that time was planning his comedy, "It's All Your Fault," which will be put on at the Savoy to-morrow night. The comedy surrounds a boy who runs away from a foundling asylum. Selwyn was pleased with his plot, but wondered where the boy actor was to come from to play the star part. The appearance of the Pink Cuss in front of the Times Building suggested a revision of the plot, with the boy's lines written in newsboy vernacular. When Selwyn asked the boy what his name was, the red-sweatered cherub replied:

"Pink's McCluskey!"

"Eh?"

When the name was repeated in syllables Edgar Selwyn believed that the boy was half Greek, half Irish. When the play was revised as he had replanned it the author sent for the Pink Cuss, who came wearing a new suit, a celluloid collar, and with his hair plastered over his ears. Selwyn shrieked his woe.

"No, I don't want you that way! Go 'way back and put the red thing on."

Next day when the Pink Cuss came in all the glory of vermilion and a grin he was given a part to read. Hear now the Pink Cuss reading his own part of the runaway foundling, Archibald:

Arch (monotonously)—Aw, go chase yerself!

Selwyn—No, that isn't how you'd say it. Put ginger into it, as if you were shooing off the other newsboys.

Arch (after a lengthy stare)—Dat ain't what I'd t'row at Happy an' Tommy and Sinky.

Selwyn—Well, what would you say?

Selwyn (grabbing MS.)—Fine!

In negotiating with the newsboy in the red sweater the author of the play discovered that the boy's real name was Pincus Lokosky. It would be hard to say which was the more astonished—Selwyn or the newsboy. To the author "Pincus Lokosky" sounded like something long-haired and famous, but to the Pink Cuss the name was a source of seven-day amazement and dismay.

"Pink's Lokosky!" he gasped, horrified, "and me for fourteen years t'inkin' it wuz McCluskey and mo Irish. But ain't McCluskey a Polish name, too?"

* * *

The newsboy was unhappy for a week when he discovered that he was not descended from the ould Kings. On the day of the first rehearsal of the play he said:

"Well, I guess I got it in the neck that time. But if mudder says its Lokosky, it goes—see!"

"You seem fond of your mother, Pink," said one of the company.

"PINCUS."

"Ain't you fond o' chure mudder?" was the quaint retort. After a lengthy silence the newsboy added:

"R'ligin, mudder, and comp'tition's the whole game."

Considerable trouble was experienced with the Pink Cuss when it came to rehearsals. The author of the play denies that he was ever a newsboy and a bootblack, or anything else that goes to the making of Presidents, consequently Pincus was an authority on certain matters. Hardly a line of Archibald's is now as it was in the beginning. Lokosky—see him scowl!—got his tongue and hand in, and, although the author cannot be expected to admit it, it looks as if the newsboy wrote his own part.

* * *

Another difficulty in connection with Pincus and rehearsals was his Mansfieldian mannerisms. He never rehearsed the same way twice, and at the road performances he kept the acting manager in a cold perspiration by continually introducing some original and whimsical piece of business. Not that these didn't help the show, but Pincus was forever bidding to make or mar the entire comedy. The Rochester folks say he made it.

And here, at Rochester, we see Pincus make his bow. The first thing he did, the day before the performance, was to take the author by the arm, lead him to a cigar store, and purchase for him a weed that cost 50 cents. When assured that it was a good cigar, burning beautifully, and not too mild—just right—the newsboy star whispered in Selwyn's ear:

"Say, pal, you got a drag in dis show?"

"I am merely the author, son."

"Well, you c'n do it, all right, all right. Go down to the print shop an' tell de main squeeze to cut dat sneeze-an'-a-cough name off mine."

"What! Pincus Lokosky—"

"On de level, Mr. Selwyn, I'm dead 'shamed of it. Put me down as 'Pink's'—plain Pink's."

It was done to oblige the modest Polish newsboy from Times Square. In Rochester he made the hit, much to the surprise of some other members of the company. Next day the newsboy was besieged by letters of invitation from the Rochester society.

He accepted a few, among others an invitation to a dinner party. Pincus got a ready-made evening suit cut down at short notice, and took his place at the hostess's right hand. The first thing Pincus did was to produce, with great solemnity, a large wallet, from which he presently distributed to every other guest an engraved card:

PINCUS LOKOSKY,

Times Square,
New York.

* * *

Again the name dropped like a bombshell. Nobody had ever heard the last name.

"Well, say, you folks," said the newsboy, dropping his eyes, "I got a letter from my big brudder, George, an' he says, says he, 'Pincus, me brudder,' he says, 'Lokosky's your mudder's name, and sich bein' so, I guess Lokosky's good 'nough f'r you,' he says, 'an' though you're a blamed actor man now, your paw's still in the butcher bizness, an' he ain't ashamed of it, neither.' Neither 'm I," was how Pincus concluded, "so I guessed I'd own up my name's Lokosky. But, as I made a hit as Pink's, guess I'm Pink's f'r all time."

After the soup was served Pincus arose to go, thanking his hostess for the "swell" dinner she had "put up." When informed that the dinner was just begun Pincus looked blankly at her and shouted:

"Hully gee! Is dere more?"

The newsboy, when seen at the Savoy Theatre a couple of days ago, was busy arguing with the author of the play over some slang line.

"It's harsh," said Mr. Selwyn.

"Cuts no ice!" retorted the Pink Cuss. "Dis is N'Yawk yer in, an' you ain't ten blocks f'm Times Square, where dere's a dozen noosies t'back me in what I say. Cut it out, Mr. Selwyn, cut it out!"

Whether the line was compromised or not the interviewer could not learn. On being introduced to Pincus, the boy, who wears his red sweater only on the stage, held out his hand at a fashionable height and said:

"Charmed to meet youse—charmed. Dere's my card."

Pincus, who refused to be interviewed because he had "a pressing engagement" with his mother, said that the only stage experience he ever had was as a tough boy in "Tammany Hall" and when he went on in "Humpty Dumpty" disguised as a duck that intermittently quacked.

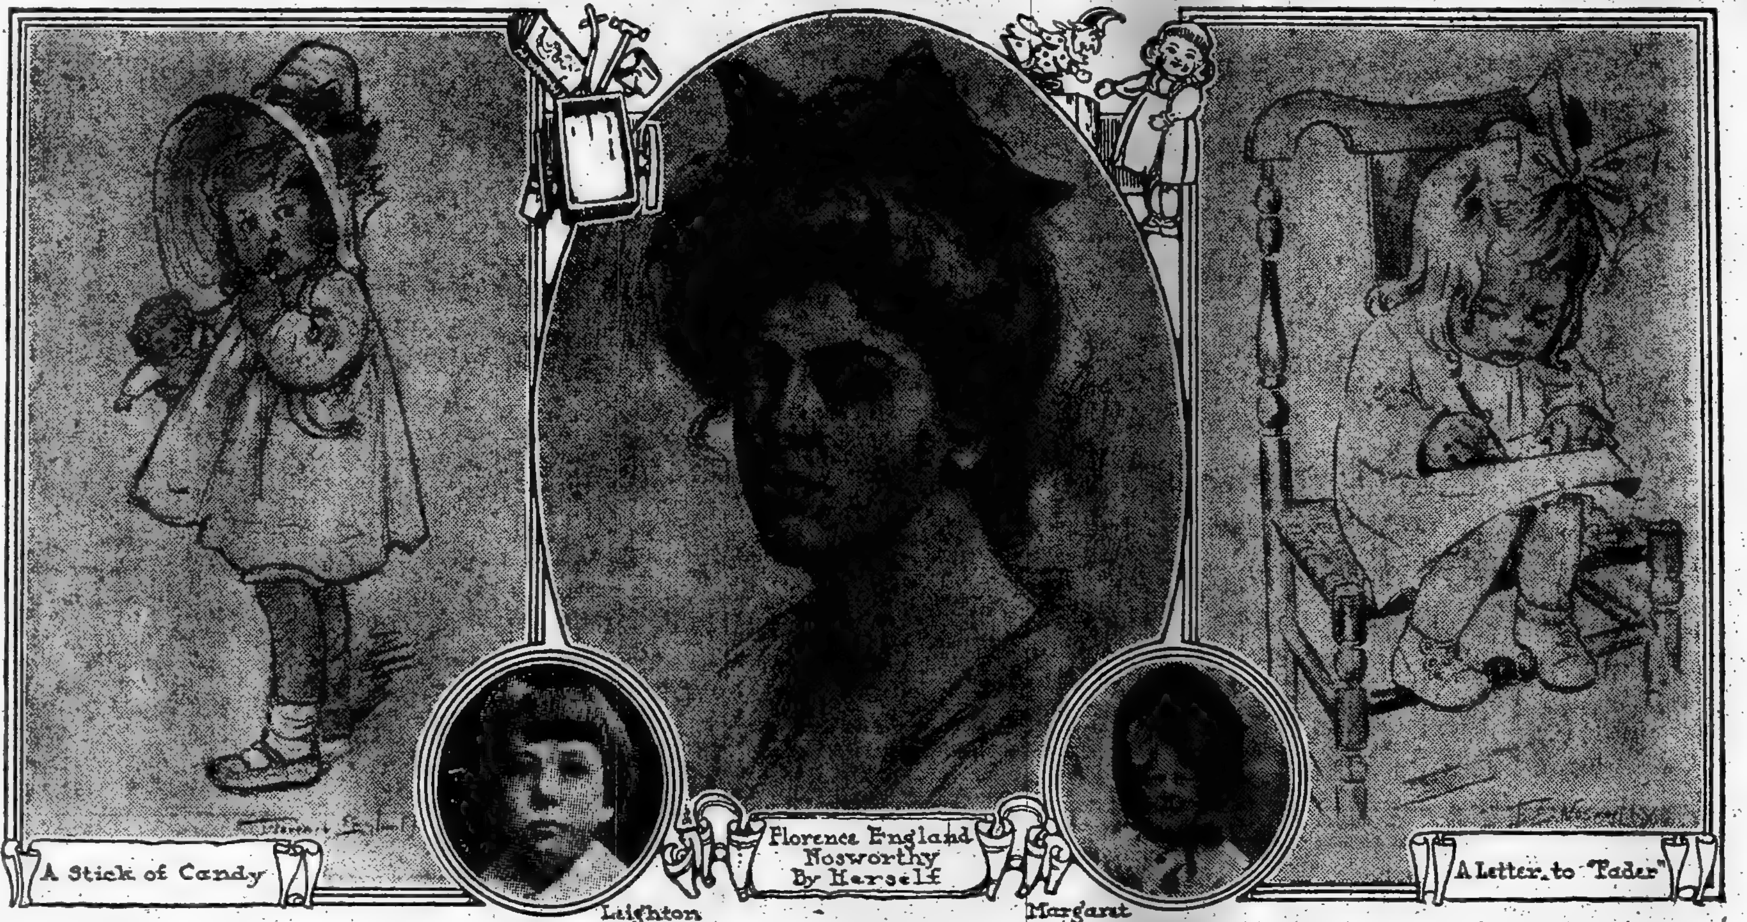
Motherhood in Art and the Case of the Little Nosworthys

The Story of Two Little Children Told by an Older One---Where Mrs. Nosworthy Gets Her Inspiration for Her Charming Studies of Child Life.



A Stick of Candy

Leighton

Florence England Nosworthy By Herself

Margaret

A Letter to "Fader"

ONCE upon a time I used to be much smaller than I am now, but I did not know so much about children then. As I grew older I found there was something very interesting about them, after all. In fact, now I rather prefer them to grown-up people.

The two children I am going to write about are a boy and a little girl; they are brother and sister, and it is a true story.

The mother's name was Mrs. Florence England Nosworthy, and the father's name was very similar. I fancy no parents were ever more fond of their two children than these two parents must have been.

The name of the little boy was Frederick Leighton England Nosworthy, and the name of the little girl was Margaret Pearl England Nosworthy, and they were both good children. But, to speak truthfully, they were not so particular as some children are about getting their dresses wet, or their stockings muddy, or their faces and hands dirty. Perhaps it is better to allow children of their age to do as they please, but I was never let do as I wanted. I was always having my hair combed, or changing my frock, or reading lesson books, or something tiresome like that.

Still, one must not find fault with one's parents; they always do the very best they can, and usually under difficulties. But I was speaking about these two children. Of course if I were their mother, I should probably have to be more severe with them than their real mother, because I do not believe in spoiling children, no matter how much one may love them, and this is what Mrs. Florence England Nosworthy and Mr. Nosworthy, their father, have done, I am afraid.

Of course it may be because their mother is an artist, and so successful, that she can afford to have her children less particular. Still, I would not advise all mothers to let their children run wild, because when they grow older it is so hard to change, but then I was so carefully brought up that I may be peculiar about such things.

When Frederick Leighton England Nosworthy was born his father was so proud of him that he sent a little printed notice to all his friends and his enemies about it.

Here is the notice he sent out:

Washington View Bulletin
SHIPPING NEWS
Port of New York ARRIVED

(British-American,)

Thursday, April 20th, 1899, at 3 afternoon, from England.

¶Interesting and exciting voyage. A little rough weather. A little fun. A few squalls. Clean bill of health. All well on board. Captain and everybody delighted. Now taking on provisions.

¶"Fortune brings in some boats that are not steer'd."
—Cymbeline.

—Cowper.

Frederick Leighton is only 6 years old now, but when he is older his father is going to give him a copy of this notice, which he will prize highly.

⁂

When Margaret Pearl England Nosworthy was born another notice was sent out.

This is it:

A NEW AND IMPORTANT PUBLICATION OF INTEREST TO CONNOISSEURS AND COLLECTORS. SPECIAL LIMITED EDITION.
ENTITLED
LADY MARGARET PEARL ENGLAND,
(NOT FOR SALE.)

Being a quaint, delightful, and original work in one volume, choicely bound in rare skin with various beautiful embellishments and adornments appropriate to the subject.

Whether it is anything to laugh about when one is born I cannot say, but I should not think so, because it is a serious moment in our lives.

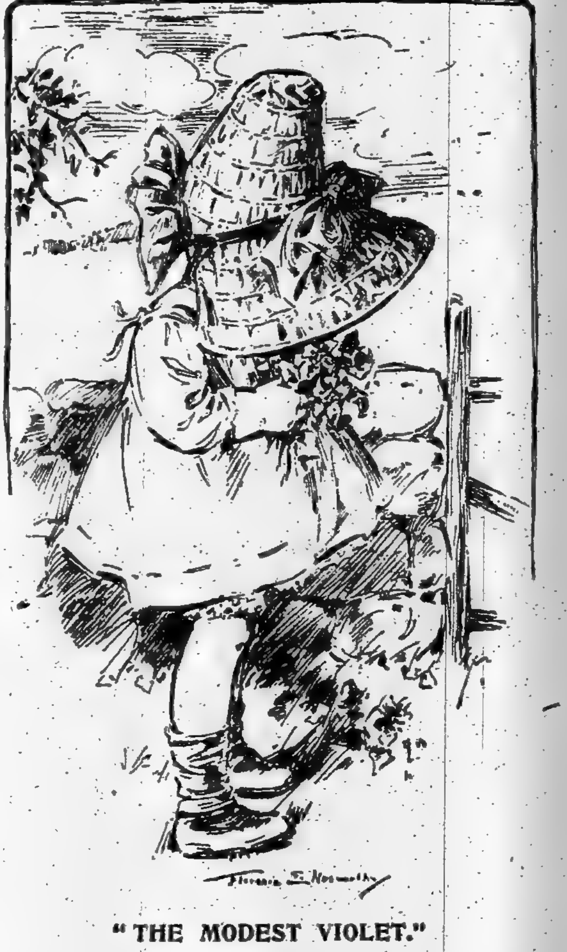
Still, it is better to laugh than to cry, and it seems strange, when one thinks about it, but these two children make their father and mother laugh all the time. Perhaps their father knew how funny they were going to be when he sent out the notices of their arrival in this world of sorrows.

Although I do not know the children themselves very well I have had long talks with Mrs. Florence England Nosworthy, their mother, about them, and I think that is the only way to find out what children really are, because when they are so young they scarcely know themselves, and it is so difficult to ask them.

Besides the fact that they are naturally funny children, their mother told me that she began to make pictures of them when they were two days old. Of course that is a very young child indeed, and, although I was not so impolite as to say so to a child's true mother, still I have no hesitation in saying that children at that age should not be made to sit up while their picture is being taken. I don't think I ever heard of a similar case before.

But of course these particular children are quite unusual; that is why the little boy was christened Frederick Leighton, after the celebrated English painter, who was knighted by the Queen of England.

I suppose these two children have been drawn more often than any other children you ever knew, because their mother, Mrs. Florence England Nosworthy, is an artist, and sells her pictures everywhere. You have probably seen them in magazines and on calendars. Well, these are all the same two children, and they are always playing, usually out of doors.



"THE MODEST VIOLET."

When I was a little child I was not allowed out so much, because my parents were always afraid that I might catch cold, or get my feet wet, or tear my frock. I think differently now than I did then.

I think little children should be kept out of doors as much as possible; it makes them healthier, I am sure—that is why I agree with Mrs. Florence England Nosworthy so well—but there is a difference between playing and romping.

⁂

I am afraid these very pretty children have been allowed to romp so much that now they do not take proper pride in their starched clean clothes. Of course I have not asked them this, and I have no right to speak positively about it, but I judge it this way.

For instance, when Margaret Pearl England Nosworthy was a baby, her father frequently called her a "goop."

Her mother even showed me a picture of her, drawn by herself, which she described as her "goop baby." If you call children names it is better always to call them by their real names, otherwise they get precocious and difficult to manage in the drawing room. I can fancy that Margaret Pearl England Nosworthy tries to make faces like a "goop" now whenever she is introduced to anybody. In the privacy of the nursery one can relax the ceremony of polite manners, but out of doors, even when playing, it is a mistake to let people see that you have a child who is trying to look like a "goop."

Their father, it seems, also has the habit of pretending that they are wild animals, and teaches them to make strange noises of the jungle, and to hop about and crawl on their hands and feet like bears or lions. This, too, I think, is a mistake, unless the children are unusually intelligent, so as not to be too noisy about it.

However, their parents are very clever, especially the mother-artist, who seems to draw them, no matter what they are doing.

I asked her once what she thought they were going to be when they grew up, and she said she didn't know. I fancy Margaret Pearl England Nosworthy, now aged 4, will be an acrobat, for her mother told me she had one peculiarity that was very artistic: whenever she was given her bath she would lie on her back, with her feet always straight up in the air. In fact, to-day this clever little child will sit for hours with her feet twisted round the back of her neck. So far her mother has not tried to break her of this unusual habit, although later on she thinks it will be necessary to tell her not to do it in public, but I doubt very much if you can break a child of any habit after it is 10 years old. Of course I feel sorry for the little "goop" if she does not learn to manage her legs before then, but she is a very peculiar child.

For instance, she has a beautiful wheelbarrow to play with, but instead of wheeling it she carries it about in her arms, in which, by the way, she is very strong.

In fact, though I am sorry to say it, she is so strong that she frequently knocks her older brother over by main strength. However, as he does, too, it isn't so bad, because it teaches her a lesson that girls are not like boys, and cannot hurt them so much.

The most interesting thing about these two children, of course, is that their mother has become celebrated as an artist of child studies, which she had never thought of before they were born. And they are naturally such funny children that they make splendid subjects. Their mother does not try to make only pretty pictures of them; she draws them in the most impolite things they do.

⁂

When Frederick Leighton England Nosworthy was a baby he had a lock of hair right in the middle of his forehead, which made him look like Napoleon. His father on this account thought the child would grow up to look just like himself, but his mother says fortunately he is growing to look more like her every day. It is always better for children to look like their mothers, because there is never anybody in the whole world so pretty as one's own mother.

These two wonderful little things live in the country, and they are allowed to be out of doors and do just what they like. They have never had a day's illness, and they hate being dressed up. Their mother does not believe in the starched child, and none of her pictures shows them dressed up. I sometimes wish I had never known what it was to be dressed up myself, because you cannot do anything when you are.

Another peculiar thing about these children is that they don't mind the pictures their mother makes of them at all. When they get to be ten years old they will be more particular. However, the pictures are really very pretty, and my uncle, who is an artist, but a bachelor-artist, says they are the best child-pictures he has ever seen.

I wonder if he had children himself would he draw them?

There is really nothing more to tell about these two, excepting that it will be very interesting to find out if they will be just as funny when they get to be 12 years old. I think not, because when one grows up one realizes what a serious world this is—that every one dresses up, so that one cannot romp much.

AN OLDER CHILD.

GIANT OF MODERN TIMES ROUNDS HALF-CENTURY MARK

FIFTY years ago, on the 4th of April, the New York Legislature granted a charter to a company whose subsequent development must be counted among the most striking factors that have made possible the marvelous progress in every line of human activity during the last half century. After the printing press and the railroad it is the telegraph that ranks in importance among the inventions that have aided in evolving what is known as modern civilization—and it is the oldest and largest telegraph system in the world to-day, the Western Union Telegraph Company, whose birth was chronicled April 4, 1856. Ten years before that date a trial telegraph line had been built between New York and Washington, and shorter lines between other cities had been attempted. These were operated with rather discouraging results by something like fifty separate companies before the Western Union came on the field, and it was the prevailing sentiment that American telegraphy, as a commercial enterprise, had not proved itself a success. The Western Union began with 550 miles of wire among its assets. Ten years later it had absorbed all the telegraph companies in the country and controlled over 75,500 miles of wire. To-day it owns 1,184,457 miles of wire, and has but one competitor, the Postal Telegraph Company. Last year its receipts were nearly $30,000,000.

Fifty years is a comparatively short space of time for such a remarkable development, yet there are not many telegraphers living who have taken an active part in it from the beginning, and who have thus had an intimate personal view of the many changes that have been necessary to bring about the perfection of the telegraphic system as we know it to-day. The oldest telegrapher in the world is said to be O. S. Wood, who still takes an interest in the affairs of the Western Union. Then there is the President of the Board of Managers of the company, Gen. Thomas T. Eckert, who has been with the company from its formation. The present Secretary of the Western Union, A. R. Brewer, came into its employ forty years ago from one of the companies absorbed by it, and the study of the evolution of the gigantic system with which he is connected has occupied his attention from the first, so that he has come to be known as the historian of American telegraphy.

"It is a singular fact," declared Mr. Brewer in discussing the Western Union's approaching anniversary, "that Prof. Morse did not see a commercial future in his great invention. Telegraphy appeared to him as something that was useful solely to the Government. Hence it was to the Government that he looked for aid in introducing telegraphy to the world. That private individuals would use the telegraph in the transaction of their personal affairs was a development that did not occur to him. There was no human experience on which to base such an assumption. But he thought that the Government could make use of his novel method for the transmission of messages with advantage when it came to announcing great events, battles, storms, elections, or any happenings that had a purely general interest. He therefore showed Congress an improvement of the quaint instrument that he had first made from the works of an old grandfather's clock, set in a picture frame, and using wire taken from a lady's bonnet, and proved that this machine of his could do what he claimed for it. The original instrument was in the possession of this company until a few years ago, when it was presented to the Smithsonian Institution. Congress was mildly interested, and after a delay of five years made an appropriation by which Morse erected his first telegraph line, which ran from Washington to Baltimore.

"That was thirteen years before the Western Union came into existence. The public was amused more than it was edified by the experiment, and people occasionally sent messages over the line as a matter of curiosity. The Postmaster General established a toll rate, and for eighteen months, with Prof. Morse at one end of it and his partner, Alfred Vail, at the other, the little line consumed one appropriation after another until the Government washed its hands of it by authorizing its sale. Then came the day of small companies and the end of this brief Government ownership of the telegraph.

"Prof. Morse sold licenses for lines to be built from one city to another, each line being undertaken by a different corporation, not with the idea that there was a great financial success to be expected from their several ventures, but more for the sake of the prestige that each town would derive from the presence in it of this queer thing called the telegraph, by means of which messages could be sent by electricity. It was the village doctor and the country storekeeper who thought that by investing in a share or two of telegraph stock they might be adding to the importance of their bailiwicks by making them telegraph stations, and it was thus that the pioneer lines were built—the lines gradually reaching from New York, as a centre, to Washington, Boston, and Buffalo.

"These first companies lost money really, but they paved the way for the great success of the Western Union, into which they were all finally merged. The immediate original of the Western Union was the New York and Mississippi Valley Printing Company, formed fifty-five years ago. Its history is one of extensions—to Chicago, to New Orleans, and then to the West.

"The difficulties in the way of a telegraph line to the Pacific were regarded by many as insurmountable. We were told, for instance, that the Indians would tear down the wires as fast as they were put up, or that the poles would be swept away by the irresistible movements of the immense herds of buffaloes then roaming over the plains. Then there were the more practical and obvious difficulties arising from the procuring and transporting of a sufficient quantity of poles and the repairing of the lines when injured. This extension was considered in 1860 at a convention of the six telegraph companies in existence at that time. All of the companies, except the Western Union, opposed the project, and it was left, therefore, to the latter to carry it out on its own responsibility.

"A great number of ox teams to transport material over the plains was engaged, a contract was made with Brigham Young of Salt Lake City [illegible] poles and labor, and a representative was sent to California to consolidate the small companies there. Notwithstanding the discouragements arising from the refusal of many to participate by taking stock in the new enterprise, the work was pushed with such vigor that the line was completed on March 15, 1861, a little over four months from the time it was begun, and in time to be of incalculable service to the Government at Washington and to the general public during the civil war.

"This policy of extending its lines wherever there was an outlook for an increase of business explains much of the Western Union's success. Then the instruments and apparatus employed for handling and forwarding messages represent many and great advances, the first of which was brought about by the evolution of Morse's invention into the simple and practical sounder, which has disclosed alike the Morse recorder and the printing instrument which the company introduced in the West. The Morse operator no longer translates and slowly copies from a long strip of recorder paper, but, reading entirely by the sound of the instrument, he writes or typewrites the message simultaneously with its reception over the wire. Then came "duplex" telegraphy, and Edison's "quadruplex," by which four messages are sent over the same wire at the same time, two in one direction and two in the other. These inventions and improvements are the most important in the field of practical telegraphy. Further, and perhaps as great, advances may be expected in the future, as many ingenious minds are now engaged in this great field, and their creations will be sure of a welcome.

"In opposing, in 1845, the bill for the extension of the Government line, one of the members of Congress said that he had rejoiced at the invention of the telegraph, and hoped to see it extended to all the principal cities of the United States, but he wanted it to be called for by the commerce of the country and to pay its own expenses. So the telegraph has been extended through corporate agency in compliance with the demands of the people to every place in the United States that has commerce enough to justify it. This has been done not only without creating a tax upon the non-users of the telegraph, but in such a manner as to return interest to the owners of the property. For that reason the stock of the company has become a standard and popular investment, and more than 10,000 persons comprise the list of its owners. In the employ of the company there are over 30,000 persons, our lines transmitting last year over 70,000,000 messages. Overhead in this main office building where we are sitting more than 2,000 wires come in, connecting New York with every part of the world—and that is the answer to the popular belief, shared by the inventor of telegraphy himself, that the telegraph must be handled either by Government or by numerous private companies, and that in any event it was not destined to achieve great commercial success."

WHAT THE APRIL HEAVENS SHOW

TO those who follow with unwavering interest the ever-changing movements of the sun and his family of worlds this fourth month of the year, while not especially notable in an astronomical sense, still has sufficient interest to score as an attraction. As one sees the April clouds recoil before the advancing sun, and watches the earliest flowers with their bursting buds, he will some day find his first violet, and with a child's delight be lost in pleasant wonder by what alchemy the cold earth of the clods and the vapid air and rain can be transmuted into color so rich and odor so touchingly sweet.

This season of the year marks the decline of the brilliant Winter constellations in the west and the ascending of the less marked Spring groups in the east.

The first magnitude stars visible in the evening are Sirius, low in the southwest; Betelgense and Rigel, low in the west, the former the ruddy star above the belt of Orion, and the latter the white star below it; Aldebaran, the ruddy star a little further north in the V-shaped group called the Hyades; Capella, the brilliant white star high in the northwest; Pollux, which with the fainter star Castor, just north of it, forms the characteristic pair of Gemini; Procyon, the bright white star between Castor and Pollux and Sirius. A line from Procyon passing midway between the Twins goes to the North Star, which in our latitude is visible at all times of the year. Regulus is near the meridian, south of the zenith and at the end of the handle of the Sickle; Arcturus, high in the northeast, and always to be found by following the curve in the handle of the Dipper, while Spica, last, but by no means least, of the charming and brilliant galaxy, is to be found low down somewhat to the southward of east.

The speed at which the sun moves on his way toward the Summer solstice slackens considerably as the month advances, still rather more than 10 degrees in north declination have been made, and the warmer and more lengthy hours of daylight bring promise of pleasanter days to come and longer periods for out-of-door enjoyments.

The phases of this month's moon begin with a first quartering to-day, to be followed on the 9th by the full moon. The last quartering of this moon occurs on the 15th, while the new moon does not come to us until the 23d. Although a thirty-day month, there are eight meetings between moon and planets in April, one more than the number generally allotted. There is a meeting on this date between Neptune and Luna and on the 28th a second of the same nature, and at about the same distance, but we already know very well that we are not permitted to see the planet. On the 14th the moon encounters Uranus, and on the 19th occults Saturn. On the 21st the waning crescent makes Mercury a call, but at quite a respectable distance, and these meetings close until after the new moon comes in. The day after this occurs Venus and our satellite have a little interview at a distance, I fear, rather too great for the celestial wireless to communicate satisfactorily. A few hours later Mars is called upon, but under circumstances hardly more encouraging. While Jupiter receives but little more attention when his turn comes on the 26th, Mercury, having filled the mission of peacemaker between Venus and Jupiter in their dispute as to which should be acknowledged the ruling sovereign of the evening sky, draws into conjunction with the sun on the 4th, and passes to the morning stars to herald to them the approach of Jupiter as their sovereign lord. He will remain a member of the brotherhood that shine in the early morning sky until a few days after June begins, when he will once again be an evening star.

Neptune is one of the evening stars, and will remain under that heading until early in July, at which time he will be in conjunction with the sun and be classed as a morning star. While Neptune is altogether invisible to the unaided eye, it is sufficiently bright to have been occasionally recorded as a star. Indeed, nearly fifty years before it was actually discovered to be a planet it had been included as a star by one of the leading astronomers of the day.

Uranus is a morning star, and is still to be found in the constellation of Sagittarius, moving along toward opposition with the sun, where he will arrive in the latter part of June, a few days before Neptune gets in conjunction. From this we can see that these two planets are about as far from one another as they can very well get.

Saturn on the 19th finds the wind rather taken out of his sails by the moon, which almost completely blankets him. To the eye it will look as though the two were in touch, especially as it will probably be a very sleepy eye, the event referred to taking place in the early hours of the morning. With the exception of this performance no other has been assigned to Saturn for this month.

⁂

Venus is now so firmly established in our admiring eyes and hearts that her superiority over all others is beyond a question, and now she and Jupiter are sufficiently near one another to be of greatest interest. Venus is moving away from the sun, and her powerful rival is proceeding in the opposite direction. The gradually lessening distance separating the two we can almost mark from night to night, with excellent opportunity to form comparisons between the two. This will continue until May 11, when they will be at their closest. Thereafter until Jupiter reaches the sun early in June they will be drawing away from each other.

Mars is so close to the sun now that it is only with difficulty that we can catch the glow of his ruddy face; but so slow are his movements that the intervening space between where he is now to be found and the time when he will be in conjunction with the sun requires three months and a half to travel. He will throughout that time be gradually shrinking in size and grow more indistinct.

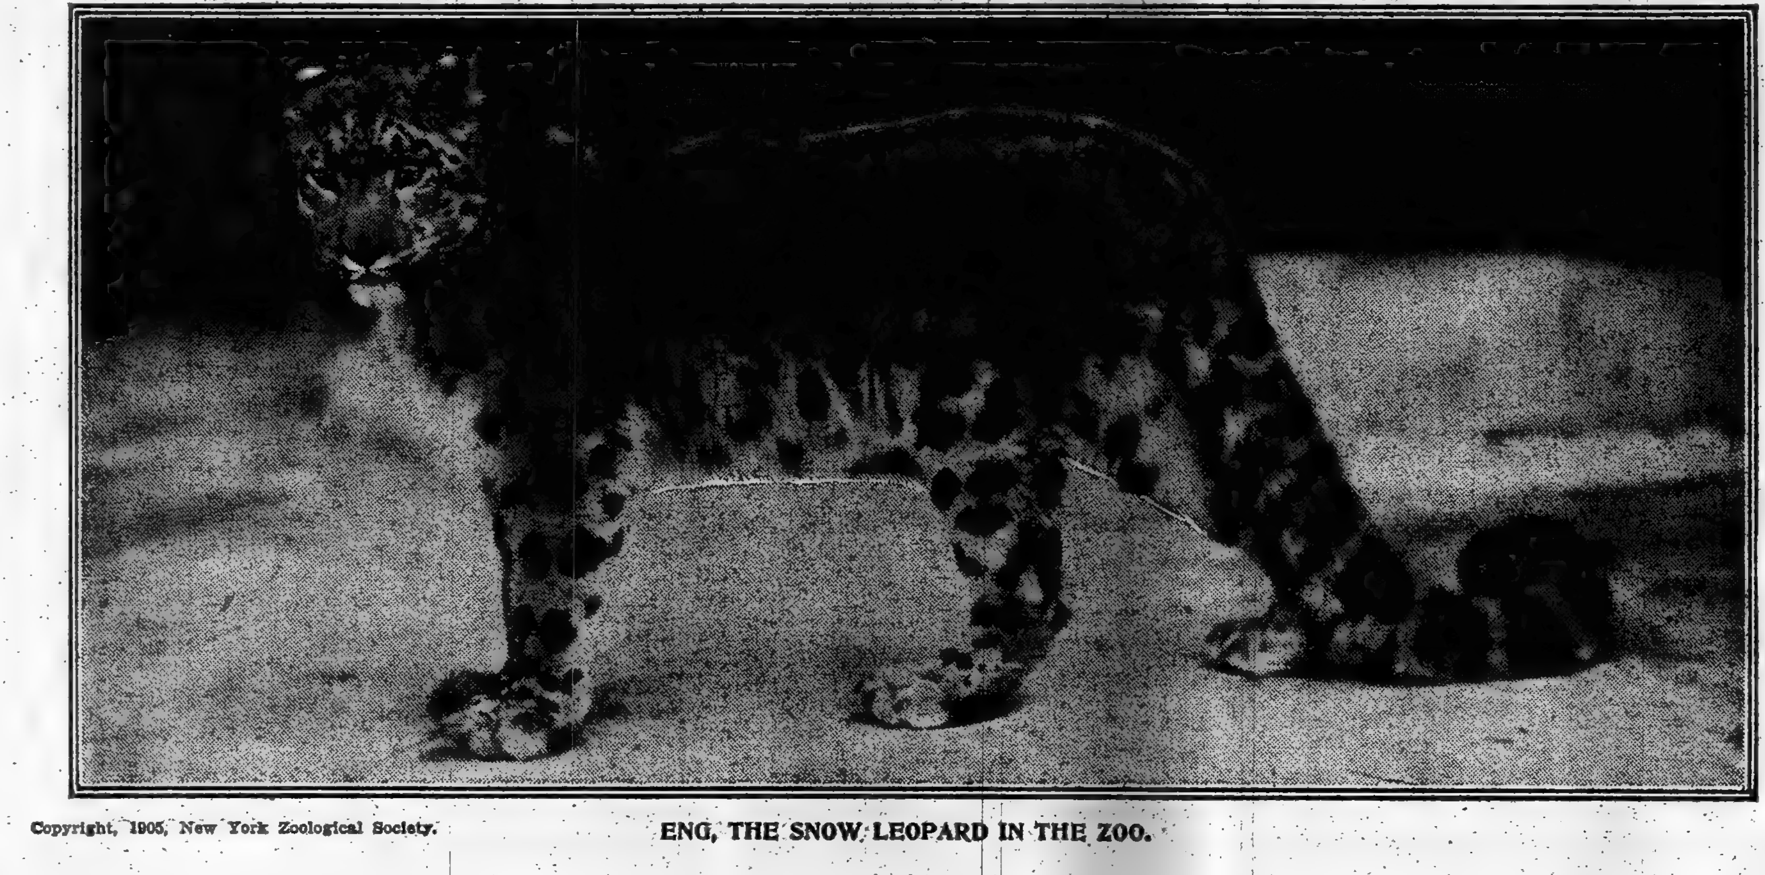
"Animals With a History": Chang and Eng

Why There is Only One Snow Leopard at the Bronx Zoo---One of the Most Vicious Beasts in the Park.



Copyright, 1905, New York Zoological Society.

ENG, THE SNOW LEOPARD IN THE ZOO.

IN these days, with the advantages of so many zoological gardens and menageries, nearly all are familiar with the leopard; many of us have also seen the black leopard, with its jet-black skin looking like rich watered silk in some lights, its cruel eyes, and villainous expression of countenance, but it is a rare thing to have the opportunity of seeing a white, or snow, leopard, or bunce, to give it its proper name.

Although known to the scientific world for nearly a hundred years, it was a long time before its habitat, which covers the elevated parts of Central Asia, was discovered. I believe I am right in saying that up to this present time only one living specimen has been obtained for exhibition in England. This was a young one exhibited in the London Zoological Gardens in 1891. In spite of every care, however, it lived only a short time after its arrival.

In the Zoological Gardens at Moscow there are a fine pair of these leopards. Just as fine a pair were procured for the New York Zoological Society, one of which, Chang, had a most unfortunate "history."

He was a beautiful animal in every way. Like all his kind, his fur was much thicker than that of the ordinary leopard, and of a woolly texture, white, or rather a whitish gray, on top, merging into pure white on the under parts, covered with black, irregular spots. This thick fur is an excellent protection against the bitter Winter cold of his native home. In the Winter it is especially beautiful, and when all the other occupants of the lion house—with the exception of the pumas—were shut in for the Winter, Chang was out in the sweet, fresh, keen Winter air thoroughly enjoying himself.

After the usual restlessness and discontent among new surroundings, which generally unsettle all wild animals for a time, Chang appeared to settle down and become perfectly content and at his ease. Although naturally savage, he never showed any abnormal expressions of ill-temper, and it was taken for granted that, given good health, he would be a resident of the Park for several years to come.

But one night about 12 o'clock the watchman who was stationed outside the lion house saw something crouching just outside the feed room door. For a few seconds he kept perfectly still, and then saw that the crouching object was a snow leopard. Now, the wisest thing to have done would have been to drive it toward the base of the lion house, open the door, or rather get some one else to do it, and induce the leopard to go in. But the wisest things are not always the easiest, and it must be remembered that it was in the middle of the night, and consequently few others besides the watchman were about.

Consequently the watchman did the best he could on so short a notice, and, drawing his revolver, fired no less than five shots at close range, and never even touched him! No doubt he was nervous and fired wide of the mark. Of course the shooting roused everybody, not to speak of the leopard, who at once became wild and fierce, although at first he seemed quiet and frightened.

He leaped first to one place and then another, until no one knew what was going to happen next. Men scuttled in all directions to obtain any objects of defense they could get hold of, all the while wondering and conjecturing how the animal could possibly have got out.

The darkness doubled all the difficulties, and did not tend to lessen the nervousness of the men, for, with its catlike tread and spring, the leopard was thought likely to jump on the top of any of them at any moment. Fortunately its white coat served as a little guide to its whereabouts, and at odd moments it could be seen either moving stealthily along or crouching at some fresh place. This went on for two long hours, which seemed like an eternity to the men on the watch. No one thought in the confusion of telephoning or sending to the Director; there was no knowing what might happen at any moment, and I doubt if any one man could have been found who would have cared at that time to go anywhere alone with that wild creature roaming around.

⁂

At last a policeman saw it crouching on the top of the little feed-cart house just ready to spring. He hurriedly procured a shotgun, and, taking careful aim at a distance of about twelve feet, shot the animal dead. It seemed a great pity, after all the amount of time, money, and trouble which had been taken to procure him, and this the Director appeared to feel when he heard about it, but the animal was dead, and there was nothing to be done but to make the best of it.

Then came the question how he could have got out. The doors and all the openings in the lion house had been hurriedly examined even while the leopard was still prowling about, but every fastening was just as it had been left the night before, and the whole thing appeared a mystery until daylight appeared. It was then found that the animal had leaped through the top skylight of his outdoor cage!

The strength needed for this feat can readily be imagined by any one who cares to take the trouble to look at the thick glass which covers this cage. The extraordinary thing about the whole matter was that the animal did not appear to have cut himself in any way, but of course this may have been owing to the thickness of his woolly fur. Extra precautions have been taken now, and there is not the slightest possibility of the present occupant, or indeed any other occupant, getting out.

Eng, the snow leopard who now remains, is also a fine specimen, but not nearly so fine as Chang. He is somewhat smaller for one thing, and not quite so well formed, although for the purpose of study he is in some ways better, as the differentiation to other leopards in the more arched form of the skull is more apparent.

Many naturalists tell us that in disposition the snow leopard is far more gentle and amiable than the ordinary or the black leopard, and that it never on any occasion molests a human being. Of course I cannot presume to say whether this is or is not so, never having studied creatures in their native haunts, but those I have seen in captivity most certainly do not appear to be at all gentle or amiable, and I have personally seen many signs of a strong disposition to fly at human beings.

For instance, this very animal, Eng, is as evil and vicious as he can be. The slightest motion on my part in front of his cage—and I have stood there watching him for an hour at a time on many occasions—will cause him to open his mouth to its widest extent and hiss and swear, while his cruel, treacherous eyes will change color in the most marvelous manner. One day the keeper accompanied me, and when, at my request, he did something to attract the animal's attention, a big spotted, white object leaped forward and threw itself against the bars with such sudden force that we both jumped backward.

It must be remembered that there was no particular incentive. The animal was not hungry, and certainly no one had struck or even touched it. I find on some occasions when watching it that if I even cough, the animal's face—the face of a leopard is so wonderfully flexible—will wrinkle up instantly, and he will swear his hardest, presenting a picture of one of the most savage wild cats ever seen.

Perhaps he dislikes me, but I have never yet found that he will stay long in his inner cage if I stand in front, unless he is asleep. There will be a pause, and then he will come forward, sometimes with a sly, stealthy tread, and at others with a quick spring, but in either case he always does the most ungracious and ungentlemanly thing. For just as long as I am standing there he will also stand and swear at me!

ELLEN VELVIN, F. Z. S.

INDIAN AUTHOR WANTS CITIZENSHIP FOR HIS PEOPLE

LAST month a memorable step was taken in the history of the American Indian—the abolition of tribal government and the recognition of each individual tribesman as a citizen and not a "ward" in Indian Territory. The "Five Civilized Tribes," numbering about 102,000, constituting the Indian population of the latter, claim to have had continuous civil government from a date long prior to the discovery of America by Columbus.

For nearly a century their form of civil government has been modeled upon that of the States of the Union. They have had Constitutions, Legislatures with two chambers, school systems, and, until recently, complete judicial systems, all administered by their own people. Since they have lived in Indian Territory they have been civilized, and, according to the missionaries, Christianized in quite as large proportion as the people of any State. With their tribal system of government they have been virtually living in a little republic of their own under the protection of the Government at Washington. Now, however, as a result of the work of the Dawes Commission, appointed by the President to divide the 20,000,000 acres of tribal land in Indian Territory among individual Indians, the latter have become this month just plain American citizens, each with a little plot of land to his credit, but without any of the special privileges and protection from the Government that has heretofore surrounded him.

This change in his position, while in the long run it is believed to be good for him, is nevertheless causing a good deal of anxiety among those who are taking an active interest in the Indian's welfare. The Rev. William B. Humphrey of this city, President of the National Indian Association, the principal organization of the kind devoted to the betterment of the Indian, said last week:

"The Indian has long been the 'ward' of the Government. Our statesmen have found this to be a mistake, for it relieves him of all responsibility of providing for himself or of taking care of himself. This policy was found to pauperize him and to unfit him for the competitions of civilized life. In fact it left him as much of a heathen as when our forefathers first discovered him, wandering in the woods or over the prairies, the monarch of all he surveyed.

"We have taken his land from him and pushed him beyond our frontier. But now that the country which was once his has been so fully settled up, there are no more frontiers over which we can push him. This being so, our statesmen have wisely decided to make the Indian an integral part of our Union. This they are doing by breaking up his tribal relation, giving him land in severalty as fast as he can be prevailed upon to accept it, and by giving him the ballot.

⁂

"The Indian is thus having civilization thrust upon him all at once, though quite unprepared for its responsibilities. He is made the victim of the land grabber, the shyster lawyer, and the saloon keeper—powerful forces which he is unable to resist in his present condition.

"The doing away of tribal government in Indian Territory last month is, of course, a first step toward the granting of Statehood. The bill providing for this Statehood is now before Congress; but it provides for a State composed of Oklahoma and Indian Territory—and that is just what the Indians do not want. The papers have been full of discussions of the other proposition contained in the same bill, the formation of New Mexico and Arizona into one State, but scarcely anything has been published as to the proposed legislation regarding Indian Territory and Oklahoma. Yet the Indians themselves have been beseeching Congress not to merge the two latter Territories into one State, quoting treaties made by the Government with the Indians years ago in which it was promised that this very thing that is now contemplated would never be done without the consent of the Indians.

"These Indians are, in some respects, very much like children, and fall an easy prey to the sharpers who overrun the reservations when they have a little money as a result of selling their land, which they are enabled to do by the work of the Dawes Commission. You will realize my meaning from a typical incident arising out of a land sale, vouched for by Commissioner Leupp, in which an Indian parted with all the money accruing to him from the sale of his property for the purchase of a hearse. An enterprising merchant convinced him of the value of the latter, dazzling him with the sable plumes and shiny exterior, and he was only too glad to hand over his last dollar that he might be the possessor of it. When the land sale was finished and the crowds attending it on their way home, there was the hearse drawn up in gorgeous array in front of the Town Hall, with the Indian, his squaw, and three papooses squatting solemnly inside, peering complacently out of the plate glass at their departing friends. The hearse was their one earthly possession; but they were abundantly satisfied, since there was not an Indian on the reservation who could lay claim to such an unexampled piece of magnificence."

The opinion of the President of the National Indian Association as regards the situation in Indian Territory is not shared by the man who is probably the best known representative of his race and who has achieved for himself, besides, an enviable name in our literature, Dr. Charles A. Eastman, or "Ohiyesa," as his name is in his native tongue.

⁂

Dr. Eastman is a full-blooded Sioux who was brought up to all the usages and amid the surroundings of savagery in his father's tribe in North Dakota. Forest-born and bred at a time when his people were in the undisturbed possession of their ancestral wilderness, the ways of nature and of these children of nature laid the groundwork of his culture. When he was a young man, however, he left the wild haunts of his fathers filled with a sudden ambition to take a part in the white man's civilization. He went through college, took a doctor's degree, and, fifteen years ago, won the hand of a charming writer of verse and prose, Miss Elaine Goodale. Since his marriage, following the example of his New England wife, Dr. Eastman has directed his attention to literature, with the result that during the last three years he has given, through his books and sketches, an intimate view of Indian life and legend that has not before been attempted.

DR. CHARLES A. EASTMAN.

With the distinctively primitive, picturesque flavor gathered from his writings, and remembering that the latter are more or less the outcome of his own personal experience, one almost looks for the legendary Indian, feathered and blanketed, squatting between the flaps of a wigwam, taciturn and inscrutable, when one pays a visit to "Ohiyesa"—in which case one is doomed to have one's expectations unrealized. A few nights ago I met Dr. Eastman, by appointment, in a place no less prosaic than the smoking room of a thoroughly modern New York hotel. Tobacco smoke, by long tradition, may be an appanage of savagery, but, aside from that, there was nothing to remind one of his savage antecedents in the well-dressed, cultivated appearance of the man who greeted me. There were the sharp-cut features, the bronzed skin of his race, undoubtedly, together with a certain dignified grace and deliberate, low-voiced manner of speaking, which coincide with one's idea of what an Indian ought to have in the way of outward personality. Otherwise the impression conveyed was of a self-contained, retiring scholar to whom the cry of the plains and the brandished tomahawk are as foreign as anything could well be. Decidedly, I should much sooner expect to hear a dissertation on Shakespeare and the modern drama from the gravely smiling lips before me than any approach to the traditional warwhoop of Dr. Eastman's tribe, albeit it is a matter of record that he has not been unskillful in the giving of warwhoops.

"I think it will be well for Indian Territory and Oklahoma to be merged into one State," he said simply, in reply to my question. "The Indians of Indian Territory are making an outcry against the union, because the sale of liquor would be legalized were they to become absorbed into Oklahoma, and without prohibition to fence them about they fear the downfall of our race. I don't believe in prohibition myself. Neither do I believe in trying to delay the inevitable absorption of my race into the dominant white race of this country. The sooner that absorption is accomplished, the sooner the 'Indian question' comes to an end, the better it will be for all of us—and this desired result will surely be hastened by letting down the bars in Indian Territory. As for the liquor question, every individual Indian must solve that for himself, just as he must solve everything else, as an independent citizen of this country, not as a 'ward,' a condition that brought with it no responsibilities.

"There are between 200,000 and 300,000 Indians in the United States altogether, but of real Indian customs and beliefs there is very little left. It is only the showman class that does the dances and wears feathers and beads, and all the rest of the masquerading that goes to make up some Buffalo Bill entertainment. But there is no sincerity in such manifestations now; the real reason underlying these things is buried in the past, when the Indian stood alone, the maker of his own laws and customs, and not a Government ward. Now the problem for my race is, how best to adapt itself to the conditions belonging to the white man's civilization, to make these his own, and, hence, to emancipate itself from its present degraded position. This will not be accomplished by insisting on the racial isolation, the Government protection, that we have had heretofore.

"It is a difficult problem, though, simply because the Indian character and tradition are so different from the dominant type of the white man, and thus so difficult of assimilation. During all the centuries of our existence as a people we have been accustomed to live under a system of pure Socialism. Every Indian fought and accumulated property for his tribe, not for himself. It was the tribal, not the individual, welfare that engrossed him. But the white man's world is different, and the Indian must undergo a fundamental change in order to adapt himself to it. You see, as a race, we are absolutely ignorant of commercial matters, how to make money—and this is essentially an age of commercialism. The Indian is rather of a philosophical temperament, not practical, with very little artistic development. Some of us make good minor mechanics, carpenters, blacksmiths, &c. But the inherited tendency of the race is still away from the keen, matter-of-fact rivalry and hard-headed wisdom that is at the basis of the modern world's activity—trade.

"For literary material the Indian furnishes a treasure house for whoever cares for the picturesque, the primitive, the natural. Before my people vanish as a distinct race, as they are bound to do, it is well to catch what can be caught of their history and the place they once occupied in the world. At present I am at work on a series of books, some of which I hope to have ready by next Fall, dealing with particular phases of this general subject—Indian folk-lore, Indian mythology, Indian customs, the great battles of the Indians, taking into account not alone their wars with the white man, but the wars among their own tribes and nations in the dim past of our history before the white man came here.

"Just now, however, I am at work for the Government on a rather novel undertaking, only remotely connected with literature—the renaming of the Indians. The President has commissioned me to go to the various reservations of the Sioux Nation and give to each individual a name that will be of more practical use in the new conditions confronting him than the odd, unwieldly name that ordinarily distinguish an Indian. In this work I have so far bestowed names on about 15,000 Sioux, and I am now on my way to six more reservations, after which the renaming of the individuals of my nation will be completed.

"Do I encounter much trouble in inducing the Indians to accept the new names that I give them? Not much. They see the practical necessity for it as an adjunct to the citizenship that is so evidently to be theirs in the near future, and, as I am an Indian and known to be loyal to my people, they trust me.

"What is my system in the giving of names? I have too keen an appreciation of the wonderful poetry back of most Indian names not to shrink from changing them where that can be avoided. Thus, I strive to perpetuate in the new name some trace of the old. When the name is not too long in the original for our English tongue I retain it, as in the case of "Matoska," meaning White Bear. But "Tateyohnakewastewin" is rather too long for the English tongue. Translated it means She-Who-Has a Beautiful-Home. Hence, I renamed the woman "Goodhouse." Rotten Pumpkin I changed to Robert Pumplan; Bob-tailed Coyote to Robert T. Wolf. Using this method there is generally some way open for the retention of something of the original name.

"But the Indians do not always want a family name for the reason, as they explained to me, that thus a good Indian would have to bear the same name as a bad brother. 'Me same name as Sleepy Dog!' exclaimed one young brave after hearing my proposition. 'Now some people not know he my brother—with same name all will know. Me like old name heap better.' There was a good deal of sound sense in that objection that would probably appeal to many a white man. Then I found that some of the Indians had been baptized more than once by overzealous Christian denominations, and hence were carrying more than their fair share of names, in which case my task was restricted to selecting what appeared to be the least cumbersome out of the list. You see, the missionaries generally give a banquet after a baptism, hence the Indians are not averse to partaking of the latter ceremony as often as possible. They were somewhat disappointed that my mission was not attended with any of the customary celebrations attending a baptism. 'How is it that you give us names and do not sprinkle our heads, like the father, or put us under the water, like the other missionary?' asked one old warrior. 'Because,' I answered, 'I am going to have a great shower at the end and do it altogether.' An Indian is quick to see the humorous side of anything, and my hearer at once acquiesced in my purpose and most obligingly changed his name at my request.

"It will take me about two years more to finish this strange mission. It is only one step in making my people realize the importance of hastening their absorption by the white race, and, as far as it goes, it is of value in making them appreciate the value of practical things in bearing the white man's burden."

LITTLE MOTHERS' AID ASSOCIATION

NINETY-FIVE upper west side society women are to act as patronesses for the flower bridge and euchre to be given by the Little Mothers' Aid Association, Mrs. Clarence Burns, President, on Thursday, April 19. An entire floor of the Hotel Astor has been secured for the occasion, and as over 1,200 tickets have been disposed of, it is quite probable that there will be an overflow of players to another floor. To Mrs. Benjamin Lillard, Chairman of all the committees, is due great credit for the marked ability with which she has carried out the plans and arrangements of the whole affair. Under her direction is the general committee of fifteen. Mesdames B. S. Weeks, J. H. Judge, Eugene Munsell, P. L. Crovot, Floyd Crane, H. B. Harding, C. R. Sprague, G. P. Lawton, A. L. Baggott, J. N. Love, T. Connelly, A. M. Milander, W. H. Oakley, Roswell Benedict, and Thomas Carmichael.

Then there is the committee in charge of the various sections. There will be about thirty of them, with ten tables in each one. The Chairman of the sections, two Chairmen to each one, are Mesdames Ira McCormack and Frank Fullgraff, George Howe Winckler and Harmon, J. Theodore Odell, Charles E. Sprague, and Lyon de Camp, Thomas Carmichael and A. L. Baggott, Leigh Harrison, Hugo Hoeffler, and J. Hedges Crowell, Minthorne Woolsey and J. P. Miller, Cornelius Sullivan and L. Vivian, William Durland and William Childs Bambor, A. I. Jacobs, J. F. Wheeler, and Miss Moses, W. H. Oakley and Connelly, Roswell Benedict and J. Ella Rood, A. S. Wilson and A. M. Milander, James Dinwiddie and R. A. Stuart, H. B. Fischer and H. B. Harding, Albert Gleason and H. W. Greanelli, J. H. Judge and Eugene Munsell, Barlow Weeks, Philip Crovot, and G. P. Lawton.

Mrs. J. N. Love will have charge of the tickets, cards, and tallies. The young people's section, where euchre will be played, will be in charge of Mrs. Floyd Crane, who also has the care of the boxes and flowers. Each section will have a flower of its own, and will be decorated with bunches and strings of that particular blossom. About 200 prizes have been given for the event. There will be a meeting of the various committees on Tuesday in the Endicott, and the finishing touches will be added to the arrangements. The General Director for the evening will be Bartow S. Weeks. Junius Love will act as cashier, and John H. Judge, Charles O. Maas, and Julian Meyer will be assistant directors. The ushers will be Raymond Gargan, Lester Crane, Warren Lillard, Robert Bryant, and Ogden Lillard.

New Use for Electricity.

A simple electrical means of purifying water for home use has been devised by a French engineer. The apparatus takes up very little space. It consists of a small closed box, which contains an ozone developer, an interrupter, and a tin tube. Connection is made with an ordinary lighting circuit by fitting a plug into an incandescent socket, and when current is turned on ozone is generated. This passes through the tube into a cotton stopper, to free it from the dust and germs contained in the air, and is then conducted into the water and mixed with it. The "mixer" is a most important feature of the apparatus. Sixty gallons of water can thus be purified in an hour, at the cost of ordinary lighting.

A German Bomb Which May Not Explode

GERMANY'S curiously uncompromising attitude at Algeciras, the activity of German secret agents in London and Paris, and the obvious disinclination of Edward VII. to meet his nephew, the German Kaiser, are facts which have conveyed to some minds the impression that there was something weird and uncanny behind the whole range of German procedure—from the sudden challenge of the Anglo-French entente, in so far as it concerned Morocco, to the attitude that Herr von Podwitz and Count von Tattenbach have invariably maintained toward the congress gathered in the southern Spanish town.

There is a story in Wilhelmstrasse, secluded and carefully guarded since the Spring of 1904—but by no means reposeful there—which, whether true or false, eloquently accounts for the German "manner" in the whole business. The publication of this story, which, it is expected, will shake Downing Street and the Quai d'Orsay to their foundations and the fulminations of which may even cause havoc in the royal confines of Windsor and Osbourne, is scrupulously withheld until the story itself may be confirmed. Proofs have been eagerly sought after by the most trustworthy agents of the German Government; as yet all search has been in vain. Hence the German bomb has been carefully isolated from the torch which steadily flames ready to ignite it.

This is the bomb: It is a historical fact that the refusal of France to join England in intervening in the Egyptian rebellion of 1883 caused the latter country to assume a predominant influence throughout the Nile Valley. The Khedive, on the recommendation of England, abolished the joint Anglo-French control of Egypt and appointed an English financial adviser without whose concurrence no financial decision could be taken. For twenty years France waived her right to examine into the affairs of Egypt, and only the Fashoda fiasco in all that time disturbed in an international manner the placid sea of British dominion.

Soon after the death of Queen Victoria, in 1901, so the story goes, when King Edward and President Loubet formed the scheme of patching up an accord between their countries and settling numerous insignificant yet dangerous outstanding disputes which at any time might become formidable, M. Delcassé, in the midst of the negotiations which succeeded, politely requested permission to examine the Egyptian question. He desired to see how that country had prospered under Lord Cromer, who, although possessing the modest official title of British Consular Agent, had, indeed, been ruling and reigning in Egypt like a British Viceroy. Particularly was M. Delcassé anxious to examine Egypt's strong box, which since 1883 had been in charge of the English "financial adviser."

As an interested friend in a family matter, he was permitted one peep. What he beheld is said to have horrified him. He saw that the Egyptian surplus had constantly been manipulated by Coutts & Co., bankers of London, whose managing partner was Lord Archibald Campbell, a personal friend and the personal banker of the King of England. The King is said to be indebted to Lord Archibald to the extent of some millions—some say £12,000,000, others £20,000,000. The state of Egyptian finances did not please the French Foreign Minister. Still, he was open to explanations and—adjustments, which, while furthering the peace of the world, might make the now personally desired Anglo-French entente an actuality.

* * *

So the Anglo-French convention of April 4, 1904, was drawn up and to it the Khédival decree placing the finances of Egypt in the hands of an English financial adviser was appended. Nine months passed. England had been left with a free hand in Egypt. The Newfoundland shore question had been settled in her favor, and she had done nothing to interrupt the French negotiations at Fez. Then the Kaiser learned something—probably not all, but sufficient for his purpose. He discovered—and this discovery precipitated his action—that the French envoy at Fez, who was supposed by M. Delcassé to be progressing famously with the Franco-Moroccan treaty, had, in fact, negotiated nothing. On the strength of this he caused the Sultan to issue a circular letter to the powers, pointing out French obtrusiveness and requesting an international conference. On Feb. 18 the Kaiser dined at the French Embassy in Berlin. While at the table his host received a dispatch from Delcassé, which conveyed the news of the absolute failure of the French negotiations. Before taking his departure the Kaiser carelessly remarked that it was his purpose in the course of a Mediterranean yachting trip in the following month to look in at Tangier. He did so, and Germany's hands in the Moorish imbroglio have since been most sturdy, as the world knows.

* * *

From the Wilhelmstrasse story it may be concluded that M. Delcassé's resignation of the foreign portfolio was due to fear lest his complicity in the financial part of the Egyptian affair should pursue him, rather than that he held himself responsible for the diplomatic fiasco at Fez. Certainly a curious circumstance in the matter is that the French diplomat who so egregiously and inexcusably failed to negotiate a treaty with Morocco, and repeatedly reported to the Quai d'Orsay that negotiations were progressing favorably at Fez when they had not even been proposed, should, at the present moment, be representing his Government as its principal envoy at Algeciras.

The case that Germany would be happy to make out is that King Edward has personally profited by the Egyptian funds passing through Coutts & Co. of London and invested by Sir Archibald Campbell, and that, in order to keep this matter a secret, the French Foreign Minister, Delcassé, personally and for a "consideration" undertook the negotiations which ended in the Anglo-French convention of 1904, which, as has been pointed out, among other things, left England a free hand in Egypt, and France, so far as England was concerned, in Morocco.

Whether or not Germany will ever attempt to explode its bomb, a reading of the annals of the Algeciras Conference will likely assume a new and lively interest in the lurid glow of this Wilhelmstrasse tale.

Six trains are now running daily each way on the Trans-Siberian Railroad, four being military trains, carrying returning soldiers from the Far East. Of the 900,000 men to be brought back, 400,000 left the Far East between Jan. 14 and Feb. 14. The repatriation of the 500,000 remaining will be by slow and easy stages. As it is now, the military trains, on account of the poor roadbeds and deficient rolling stock, average twenty miles an hour.

French Separation and Works of Art

M. CLEMENCEAU, the new French Minister of the Interior, remarked the other day, apropos of the inventories which the Government is more or less successfully trying to take of church property, that he would not allow France further to be disturbed for the sake of "a few old candlesticks." This remark was universally taken by students of French politics to mean that forcible entrance into church buildings on the part of Government agents would cease. To those, however, who have some idea of the treasures of art stored for centuries in French churches this remark has a touch of irony which requires explanation.

Foreigners who visited the Exposition in Paris six years ago may remember that department dedicated to the "Exposition Rétrospective de l'Art National." Here were displayed profane as well as sacred properties loaned by ecclesiastical bodies, art treasures in the shape of tapestries, paintings, and utensils pertaining to a historical and spectacular Mother Church, which gave, however, merely a vague hint of the vast accumulation of which they formed an insignificant representation.

Within the next year the world of art, which concerns itself with the acquisition of rare and beautiful things, is likely to have the opportunity to negotiate for the possession of the most wonderful and valuable objects ever placed on sale. The truth of the matter is that in many churches little remains beyond "a few old candlesticks." When the passage of the separation law became inevitable many of the Church's most valuable treasures were quietly collected by the ecclesiastical authorities and sent out of the country. Several dealers in America and England and collectors as well have already successfully secured in this manner some absolutely priceless works of art. Of course, it would not do to flood the market with these works until the more valuable of them had been disposed of to private collectors. It is inevitable, however, that a furor over them will presently be started which will not be unlike the craze for Napoleona so successfully engineered by the late Theodore Child and others in Paris sixteen years ago.

In the meantime it may interest collectors to know that sooner or later they may have the opportunity to acquire the following items: Ghirlandaja's "The Virgin with Child Between Two Gift Bearers," which has disappeared from the Moulins Cathedral; the famous "Pagan Dance," from the Notre Dame de Nautilly, at Saumur; the equally famous tapestries from the Cathedral of Sens, representing "Solomon Crowning Bethsabe," and "The Crowning of the Virgin and Esther by Assuerus," "The Head of St. Fortunande," a beautiful sculpture of the fifteenth century is said to be missing from Corrèze, while the world-renowned chalice of St. Rémy, dating from the twelfth century, is not likely to find a place in the Government inventory that is being made at the Reims Cathedral.

Does the Pope Speak Italian?

POPE PIUS X. does not speak Italian proper, and only a true Italian can understand his Venetian phrases and accent, which are wholly unintelligible to the foreigner, fluent though his Italian may be. The other day, according to a report from Rome, the Pope received some French Bishops. They settled down to listen to his discourse, but did not understand a word. Some suggested that he was "speaking in Latin," others "in bad French," but not one of them even guessed that it was Italian with a strong Venetian accent.

Even the Pope's sisters do not speak Italian—theirs is the Venetian tongue pure and simple—and they have frequent difficulties in making themselves understood in Rome, especially in the Vatican. A little incident is reported. They recently went to the Apostolic Palace, intending to pass in by the bronze door. The Swiss guard stationed there was fresh from his native country. Upon asking the women what they wanted, and being answered in Venetian, he did not understand their errand, and would not allow them to enter. The sisters became indignant and tried to force their way in. The guard put up his halberd, telling them to "Go and learn Italian!" Whereupon another and older guard came upon the scene and the Sarto sisters gained admittance.

Socialist Revolt in Italy.

REPORTS from Rome contain the announcement that the Socialist revolutionists, who just now are dominating all the labor organizations in the great Italian industrial centres, have by a big majority proclaimed a revolt against the attitude of their representatives in Parliament. These, under the leadership of Signor Enrico Ferri, are pledged to support the Sonnino Ministry and to afford the Conservative chief a chance of making good his Radical programme of practical social reforms.

The revolutionary rank and file, however, disapprove any species of compromise. They suspect, moreover, that Ferri's tactics are dictated by a desire to outrival Filippo Turati, the champion of the Social Evolutionist group.

The Socialist Deputies have already left Rome for Milan, where two meetings have so far been held. A huge party split, it seems, is inevitable.

Leon Bourgeois and the French Ministry

ALTHOUGH M. Sarrien, as Premier and Minister of Justice of the new French Cabinet, has an honorable position crowning a distinguished career, it is not toward him, but toward M. Clémenceau, the Minister of the Interior, that the eyes of Frenchmen are mostly directed. It falls to the duty of M. Clémenceau to see that the separation law is enforced. As far as a foreign audience is concerned, however, M. Léon Bourgeois holds the stage with his portfolio of Foreign Affairs. On his shoulders rests the onerous burden of managing the French envoys at the Algeciras Convention, the outcome of which is fraught with so many important and far-reaching results for the world at large.

Before long M. Bourgeois is likely to find himself at odds with his colleague, Clémenceau, not in regard to the administration of the separation law—both are in accord on that question—but on account of the aspect which the almost moribund alliance with Russia is likely to assume. It was owing to M. Bourgeois's representations that Russia so conspicuously stood by France in the recent climax at the Algeciras Conference. M. Clémenceau, on the other hand, has written and spoken many times against the dual alliance, from both patriotic and philanthropic points of view, showing that France should not throw good money after bad in investing in Russian loans, and that without French money the Russian institution could no longer continue its oppression.

Another difference between the Ministers is to be found in the colonial problem. M. Clémenceau is a bitter enemy of colonial expansion; M. Bourgeois approves of it. But both have recently cried, "Resistance to Germany," with almost schoolboyish ardor. But if M. Clémenceau is opposed to an alliance with Russia, he has always been the firm friend of England and publicly advocated an entente cordiale with that country, when M. Bourgeois and his friend, M. Hanotaux, allowed themselves to be drawn into fathering the Marchand expedition, which resulted in the Fashoda fiasco.

German Women's Political Disability

IN the German Reichstag on March 14 a Progressive member, Dr. Pachnicke, moved a resolution calling on the Imperial Chancellor to exercise his influence in favor of the abolition of the political disabilities now imposed on women.

In the majority of the Federal States of the German Empire the Prussian law of associations prohibits all "female persons" from taking part in every kind of political activity. It is thus illegal for a woman to belong to any political association or to take part in a political meeting.

It is true that this statute is not strictly enforced by the Prussian authorities; nevertheless, the police could, if they desired, prevent any woman from making a speech on any questions connected with politics or attending any public meeting convened for political purposes. Similar legal prohibitions exist in Saxony, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and most other German States.

Dr. Pachnicke mentioned that the administration of the Prussian law was not always liberal, for only recently a "female person" had been prohibited from delivering a lecture on social reform at Cologne.

After a brief discussion, the resolution was adopted by a large majority. This, however, is a purely academic expression of opinion on the part of the Imperial Legislature. There is little prospect of women's political disabilities in Prussia and other German States being removed in the near future.

Where the Douma Will Meet.

THE Tauride Palace, in St. Petersburg, which has been appointed for the meeting place of the Russian Douma on May 10, is being rapidly put into a condition to receive Russia's Parliament. The whole central portion of the palace will be occupied by the representatives. It is a hall about as large as the House of Representatives in Washington, and is entirely decorated in white and adorned with frescoes from Potemkin's time, while behind the President's seat and facing the representatives is a large bow window looking out on a garden.

The seats and desks of the representatives have been arranged around the hall, tier on tier, as in a theatre. The tribune from which the members will address the House is in the centre, and on each side of it are two seats for the Secretaries of the Douma. The President's chair is behind the tribune, as are also the places for the Ministers and their assistants and the press. There are 564 seats for representatives, and under each is a ventilator.

The desks have sliding tops, which will thus do away with the banging of lids, to which turbulent parliamentarists might resort. No place has been made for ink wells, which are not to be permitted, and the representatives will have to make pencil notes.

The Tauride Palace was built in 1783, and was presented by the Empress Catherine II. to Prince Potemkin, the "hero of the Taurus," after the conquest of the Crimea. When the Prince died in 1794 it became Crown property, and has since been used as an exhibition hall.

Paris Octroi Burden.

ALTHOUGH travelers entering Paris at any of the great railway stations may long continue in happy ignorance of the word "octroi," tourists in coach or motor car are not so fortunate. They have to take their place amid long rows of carts, carriages, and motor cars in front of the miniature Custom Houses at the Porte Maillot, or the Porte de Vincennes, or at any of the numerous inlets to the city, and there pay their toll if they happen to have with them dutiable commodities. It is a municipal tax that is levied, a survival of feudalism, suffered to exist simply because the Parisians themselves are not bothered with it. These Parisians, with characteristic hatred for direct taxation and a weakness for indirect, pay 40f. a head every year toward the octroi.

This octroi brings into the municipal coffers $20,000,000 per annum. If it is to be abolished, as has often been suggested, how is the deficit to be made up? Here is the scheme of M. Chautard. He proposes to save $6,000,000 by putting off the payment of the city debt, and to farm out to the State the dues on alcoholic liquors, which would make up the balance of $14,000,000. Another scheme is to have the octroi applied only to people and goods entering Paris by rail, the railway companies to bear the cost of collection.

Boccacio's Famous Retreat to be Sold At Auction

WORD comes from Italy that the Villa Palmieri on the Fiesole Road, near Florence, is to be sold at auction on May 1, together with its estate of some seventy-six acres. Although owned for many years by the Earl of Crawford, who purchased it from the Grand Duchess of Tuscany, the villa is more intimately associated in the mind with two Springtime sojourns of the late Queen Victoria.

But the Villa Palmieri has associations which antedate even its purchase by Matteo Palmieri in 1457. It was for this same Matteo that Botticelli painted an altar piece of the Assumption for the little domed chapel in the grounds, thereby calling down upon himself the wrath of the Holy Inquisition. Matteo had already fallen under suspicion for having published a poem, "La Citta della Vita," which was not to the liking of the Holy Office. The picture inspired by this poem was removed from the chapel, and lost sight of for four centuries, until it was finally discovered inclosed in solid masonry in one of the ancient walls. This picture is now in the National Gallery in Florence. To commemorate the visits of England's late Queen the Florentines have named a road, which joins the old Fiesole highway near the villa, "Viale Regina Vittoria," while in the gardens are two young cypress trees planted in 1888, one by the Queen and the other by Princess Beatrice, who now, widely known as Princess Henry of Battenberg, is the prospective mother-in-law of Alfonso XIII. of Spain.

All this is more or less interesting, and much more of the same sort might be set down. But neither the heretic Matteo nor the romance of the lost Botticelli nor the sojourns of a Queen gives the villa its greatest distinction. Long before the times of the first Palmieri—to be exact, just ninety years before—it was known as the Fountain of Three Faces (Fonte de Tre Visi,) named after a fountain which may either represent with its three visages the Trinity or the head of Janus. It was here that Giovanni Boccaccio, fleeing from the life of the neighboring city, found recreation and literary inspiration, and here it is that the merry tales of the "Decameron" are said to have been told in that hot Summertime when the Black Death swept over Europe and decimated the inhabitants of the city on the Arno to the extent of 60,000. And, because the gay company sought asylum in this villa, and oblivion from the fatal harvest that was being reaped in the streets of Florence, and related there stories under the trees, a hillside has been named to commemorate the event. It is called in the Tuscan dialect—which Boccaccio helped Dante to mold into the Italian speech of to-day—"Schifanova," or, in English, "Fly away, care."

Mrs. Browning's Centenary

FLORENCE is particularly rich in reminiscences concerning American and English literary and artistic men and women, who since the middle of the last century have formed an Anglo-Saxon colony there. The recent centenary of the birth of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, observed alike in England and in Florence, has lent emphasis to this fact. The portals of the Casa Guidi on the Piazza San Felice, near the Pitti Palace, were appropriately decorated in honor of the event. There the Brownings lived for many years and were visited not only by their compatriots of note, but also by American sojourners, several of whom took up their residence in that vicinity. Among their most constant visitors were Hiram Powers, the sculptor, whose "Greek Slave" was the first nude ever exhibited in Puritanical Boston; George Hillard of that city, Harriet Beecher Stowe, the Hawthornes, the Storys, and James Russell Lowell. Powers lived for many years near by in the Via dei Serragli. Among everwelcome English guests were Mrs. Jameson, the Shakespearean critic, and Walter Savage Landor, who, after he temporarily abandoned his villa at San Domenico, took, at the solicitation of the Brownings, a casetta in the old Via Nunziatina.

Mrs. Browning died in June, 1861, in the Casa Guidi, leaving a half-finished letter addressed to Mme. Mario, the wife of him who is known in Italy's struggle for unification as "Garibaldi's Englishman." The incident of the letter may be particularly mentioned here, for Signora Mario has just died in Florence. She was a young English girl, Jessie White of Cowes, who in 1855 was studying art in Florence, when she was engaged as governess in the Garibaldi family. In 1857 she married Major Alberto Mario, one of the great Liberator's officers, and threw herself with characteristic ardor into the struggle for Italian unity. Both she and her husband were arrested by the Papal police and escorted over the frontier by Papal soldiers. They came to America, dwelt here for two years, 1858-9, and then rejoined Garibaldi in the field. Both saw much fighting in the succeeding years. Signora Mario contributed letters dealing with the campaign to The London Daily News, whose editor was somewhat abashed at her enterprise and zeal. He once wrote her the following phrase at the end of a letter of advice: "Please don't get into prison again, for it would be very inconvenient for the paper."

The Villa Landor

THE fact that a society has been organized in London for the preservation of the Villa Landor as a shrine for tourists in Florence forms the third item in an interesting trilogy of Florentine news. This villa is situated, like the Villa Palmieri, on one of the picturesque hillsides between the City on the Arno and Fiesole, and is said to have been built by Michelangelo. The accompanying view shows the villa from the rear. Before it is a lawn in the shape of an ovel, guarded by solemn rows of stately cypress trees, which are approached through a huge gateway of stone pillars. Beyond the garden shown in the picture and stretching to the west and south is one of the most enchanting views of the Val d'Arno, which is to be seen on the approach to Fiesole.

When Landor purchased the villa through the kindness of a Welsh admirer in 1831, it was known as the "Villa Gherardesca." This villa, through his admirer's generosity, gave the wanderer, who proudly declared that Latin was his mother tongue, and that he "strove with none, for none were worth his strife," a pied à terre in a country and a region thereof, which particularly appealed to his scholastic and poetic nature.

Landor died at the villa a little over three years after the death of Mrs. Browning, and his body was laid away in the little English cemetery already famous for possessing her own tomb, designed by Sir Frederick Leighton, and where the earth was later to be broken to receive the bodies of Isa Blagden, the Trollopes, and Theodore Parker.

Abraham Lincoln as a Stage Figure

What Benjamin Chapin Has Accomplished in That Direction—A German Author's Attempt at Satire.

AFTER "The Clansman" at the Liberty Theatre—appropriate place for the pictured representations of two points of view—"Lincoln," an excellent antidote "to cleanse the stuffed bosom of that perilous stuff which weighs upon the heart."

"Lincoln" is not a great play, but it is wholesome entertainment—more than can be truthfully said about its predecessor, with which, for the moment, it has been bracketed. Dealing with the most vital point in the National history, the one, a melodrama of pronounced flamboyant type, lost point in the telling by reason of the attempted violent, antagonistic, theatric exposition of inflammatory sentiment; the other gains in impressiveness by the very simplicity, unpretentiousness, and apparent artlessness of its setting forth.

"The Clansman" as a play is no less crude than "Lincoln," but there is this difference: whereas one was inclined to sit back and smile at the mock heroics of the Rev. Mr. Dixon's drama—when not boiling with indignation at the contemptible device—the pictured incidents in the life of the great War President awake a responsive thrill of sympathy and emotion.

There is a reason why Abraham Lincoln has not figured conspicuously in plays of American life. Himself the central figure in one of the greatest dramas that has ever stirred the hearts of men, his was not a dramatic figure—or rather, one should say, not a theatric figure, to be transferred to the stage in symbols that would translate themselves readily across the footlights. To realize this monumental figure in our history would require the combined genius of the master poet and the master psychologist, and with such a combination it is to be doubted whether the result would make an appeal upon the stage. Even then the interpretative genius of the master player would hardly provide a satisfying complement to all the rest.

Mr. Chapin has succeeded better, perhaps, than could reasonably have been expected. He has studied the general characteristics of Lincoln, he has made capital of his peculiarities of face and figure and general bearing, and, without seeking, or, at any rate, without being able to convey to any considerable degree, a suggestion of the soul and spirit of the man, he has given us a picture sufficiently like the original to be generally appealing.

It will be a thousand pities if some arrangement is not made during Mr. Chapin's brief stay at the Liberty by means of which large numbers of boys and girls from the public schools may have an opportunity of seeing this impressive study. There is fortunately nothing in this war play which the younger members of the community may not see with advantage. Its story of patriotism, though made to contrast with incidents of treachery—there could be no war drama, it seems, without the traitor spy—is wholesome, clean, and sufficiently convincing for its purpose. And the figures of Lincoln and Stanton are projected in an entirely proper spirit of reverence and dignity.

Indeed, taken as a whole, Mr. Chapin's portrait of Lincoln, though it may be lacking to mature minds in some of the more subtle qualities of suggested power and grandeur with which time and circumstances have invested the savior of the Union, is to be considered an achievement. It would be difficult to name any figure in history which, for American people, at any rate, has impressed itself so indelibly upon the general mind. About the memory of George Washington time has cast a glamour, but there are men alive to-day who still remember Lincoln as he lived, to whom his manner and his person remain as an experience, not as a mere mental transcript from history and romance. To the more general mind, too, his mental and physical characteristics are hardly less familiar. And to the people at large he has continued to loom large in the impressive personality of the imagination. To take this figure, then, to set it upon the stage, and to succeed in filling the eye as to presence alone is in itself a task of much magnitude. But it is one in which Mr. Chapin has succeeded by means of the combined force of a certain natural fitness and the artificial resources of theatrical make-up. The tall, lean, gaunt, loose-jointed figure, the sympathetic face, with its commingling of kindly humor and penetrating wisdom, the natural ease and dignity of a great mind and heart manifesting itself in spite of the ungainliness of physical externals—these, at any rate, are well suggested by Mr. Chapin. One misses, to be sure, the largeness of Abraham Lincoln in those moments of the play supposed to deal with great crises in National affairs, but a bigger and surer artist would in all likelihood fail in a proper expression at such times, for the ordinary grandiloquent utterance of the theatre would not carry conviction there.

It would be unfair, however, to dismiss Mr. Chapin's "Lincoln" without allusion to the general excellence of his accomplishment. And that, to be just, must include mention of several very capable people who, although to some extent minor figures in the play, add to its general interest by natural and sympathetic co-operation. Francis McGinn's portrait of Secretary Stanton, in make-up and action, is wonderfully like the man the younger generation has learned to know in history, and the romantic features of the stage play, woven about the greater figures, are very convincingly set forth in the sympathetic acting of Daisy Lovering and Malcolm Duncan. Miss Lovering is to be especially commended for a dialect which, unlike most that pass on the stage, has the real flavor of the South. Maude Granger, David R. Young, and W. H. Pascoe also provide interesting sketches in a commendable ensemble.

* * *

Last Monday night at the Irving Place Theatre, M. Baumfeld, a newcomer among German playwrights, stepped forth armed with the sling of derision to do battle with the American money-greedy Goliath. Mr. Baumfeld, unfortunately for the success of his venture, failed to keep his eye on the mark, and in consequence his missile whizzed harmlessly on its way.

"Die Nacht der Liebe," "Nights of Love,) as Mr. Baumfeld's play is called, contained a capital satiric idea, which, however, was most frequently lost sight of during the progress of the four long acts.

At the outset it develops that Ralph and Andrew Knickerbocker, wealthy New York bankers, are rivals socially, and each is seeking to outdo the other in the novelty of his entertainments. Andrew Knickerbocker, anxiously awaiting the arrival of Paolo Mascavallo, a famous Italian composer, whom he wishes to introduce to his friends as a great social find, is confronted with the fact that the man has in the meantime been visiting his brother, incidentally preparing for presentation an opera in which Blanche, the brother's daughter, is to sing the principal rôle. One of the friends of the family, a capitalist and trust promoter, conceives the idea of incorporating the composer, the object being to secure control of all his works, and to sell shares in a company of which he is to be one of the Directors. As may be imagined, the composer resents the proposition, but, assured of a large income and yielding to the advice of Blanche, for whom he has an increasing affection, he accepts the offer. Here, then, was the germ of an excellent comedy idea. Mr. Baumfeld, however, ignoring the main theme, allows his story to degenerate into a discussion of the love affairs of the composer, who is false to Blanche and has succumbed to the wiles of a fascinating adventuress. She, it develops, has been induced by Andrew Knickerbocker to undertake his downfall, in order to compass the defeat of his brother's social ambitions.

The play is not without occasional amusing passages, but it suffers, in the first place, from its author's inability to carry out his primary idea, and, secondly, from his apparent unfamiliarity with the means of dramatic expression. There is no end of talk—some of which is bright and interesting—but the action is frequently halting and ineffective. The play, in short, drags itself on to a weary and lame conclusion. Condensation might do much for it.

Harry Walden, a versatile and interesting comedian, was at times felicitous in the rôle of the composer, (he plays it in the masque of Mascagni,) but he fell a prey eventually to the loquaciousness of the dramatist and was himself at fault in playing scenes seriously that might have been best handled in a comic spirit. An amusing sketch of a reporter (theatrical brand) was provided by Otto Ettbert, while Gustav von Seyffertitz, as the trust builder, in a make-up singularly suggestive of Chauncey M. Depew, carried a large share of the burden with credit to his artistic resourcefulness. The two principal women's rôles were only fairly well played by Marie Reisenhofer and Hedwig von Ostermann, but a bit in character was nicely done by Jo Hegyi.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

This is the second week of Benjamin Chapin in "Lincoln" at the Liberty. Otis Skinner concludes his engagement in "The Duel" at the Hudson in two weeks. William Faversham has but three weeks more at Wallack's in "The Squaw Man." "Mr. Hopkinson" moves up to the Fields to-morrow night to continue its successful New York run. "The Greater Love" remains at the Madison Square.

THIS WEEK'S OFFERINGS.

"IT'S ALL YOUR FAULT,"
a farce by Edgar Selwyn, at the Savoy Theatre, to-morrow evening.

"THE SOCIAL WHIRL,"
a musical comedy by Charles F. Doty, Joseph Herbert, and Gustave Kerker, at the Casino, Saturday evening.

MRS. FISKE IN A REVIVAL OF "LEAH KLESCHNA," at the Academy of Music, to-morrow evening.

A REVIVAL OF "THE COLLEGE WIDOW,"
at the Garden Theatre, to-morrow evening.

A REVIVAL OF "THE PRINCE OF PILSEN," at the New York Theatre, to-morrow evening.

For his third week at the New Amsterdam Theatre, beginning to-morrow night, Richard Mansfield will act "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" on Monday night for the last time; Alceste in Molière's comedy, "The Misanthrope," Tuesday, (only time this engagement;) The Baron Chevrial in "A Parisian Romance," Wednesday; the Tzar Ivan in Tolstoi's Russian historical tragedy, "Ivan the Terrible," Thursday, (only time this engagement); "Don Carlos," for the last time, Friday; "Beau Brummel," Saturday matinée, and Shylock in Shakespeare's comedy, "The Merchant of Venice," Saturday night.

* * *

"It's All Your Fault," a farce by Edgar Selwyn, will be presented at the Savoy Theatre to-morrow evening. The story deals with a young married man, Howard Beasley, who is dependent upon his uncle, Caxton Coulter, for his income. Howard, who is married to Coulter's niece, Flora, had been promised by the uncle an increased allowance providing an heir is born to the Beasley household and is named Caxton. Howard, desirous of this increase, has notified his uncle of the birth of a fictitious son. He has successfully carried on this deception for several years, when he receives the unwelcome announcement of the proposed visit of his uncle. The uncle arrives, and with him the humorous complications begin.

In the cast are Herbert Sleath, Herbert Carr, Fred Tyler, George Adams, Louise Closser, Maud Hosford, Mary Faber, and Carolyn Lee.

Mrs. Fiske and the Manhattan Company will begin a three weeks' engagement at the Academy of Music to-morrow night. The company's success of last season, "Leah Kleschna," will be presented the first two weeks. It is quite likely that "Becky Sharp" will be revived the last week.

* * *

George Ade's "College Widow" will be presented to-morrow at the Garden Theatre, where it had a run of thirty-four weeks last season. The engagement will bring the old cast together, including Dorothy Tennant, Gertrude Quinlan, and Frederick Truesdell.

* * *

At the New York Theatre to-morrow night "The Prince of Pilsen" will begin a fortnight's engagement, and its return to Broadway completes a transcontinental trip. Jess Dandy will be seen again in the rôle of the German brewer-Alderman from Cincinnati.

* * *

At the Casino on Saturday evening "The Social Whirl," a musical comedy, will have its first presentation in New York. The piece is the product of Charles F. Doty and Joseph Herbert, the authors of the book, and Gustave Kerker, the composer of the music.

"The Social Whirl" is a society journal which prints spicy paragraphs, supplied mainly by a reporter who secures tips through his sweetheart, the proprietress of a fashionable manicure establishment. One of these items, concerning a man who is mentioned in the article as "J. E.," furnishes the complications, as there are three characters in the piece whose initials are "J. E." Mr. Kerker has supplied twenty-one musical numbers. Among these numbers are "The Girl I Nearly Love," "The Profession of a Manicure," "Old Man Manhattan," "The Overtrained Soubrette," "A Rainy Day," "Diplomacy," "Rusticate Kate," "She Only Had a Dollar in Her Purse," and "Just the One I'm Looking For." The scenery and costumes are said to be quite up to the average of the Shuberts.

The cast includes Adele Ritchie, Mabel Fenton, Blanche Deyo, Caroline Locke, Ada Lewis, Joseph Coyne, Charles J. Ross, and Frederic Bond.

* * *

At the Irving Place Theatre "Ein nasses Abenteuer" will be presented to-morrow, and Tuesday evening. On Wednesday night, Wildbrandt's tragedy, "Arria und Messalina" will be given, with Harry Walden and Agathe Barsescu in the leading roles. Thursday evening, "Die grosse Glocke" will be the bill.

AT OTHER THEATRES.

At the American Theatre this week "Custer's Last Fight" will be the attraction.

The Four Mortons will be seen in "Breaking Into Society" at the Metropolis this week.

Joseph Wheelock, Jr., returns to the city to-morrow night at the Harlem Opera House in "Just Out of College."

"In Old Kentucky" will be the week's offering at the West End.

At the Murray Hill "The Volunteer Organist" will begin a week's engagement to-morrow night.

"The Clansman" will play a return engagement in the city at the Grand Opera House this week.

The Proctor all-stary company will revive "Candida" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre to-morrow. Amelia Bingham will play the title rôle.

"Fast Life in New York" will be the melodramatic offering at the Fourteenth Street Theatre.

"Old Heidelberg" will be the revival of the stock company at Proctor's 125th Street Theatre.

It is a comforting belief to think that all the world is honest, but it is just as well to keep a padlock on the door.

VAUDEVILLE.

PROCTOR'S TWENTY-THIRD STREET THEATRE—Mabel Taliaferro, Vesta Victoria, May Boley, Four Lukens, Howard and North, Edmund Day and Company, Gardner and Stoddard, Ellis Nowlan Trio, Leona Thurber, Luigi Del Oro, and the moving pictures.

VICTORIA—"The Kilties," "In the Swim," Johnny Hyams and Leila McIntyre, W. C. Kelly, Hill and Sylvani, Dan McAvoy, Elinore Sisters, Darros Brothers, Black and Jones, and the vitagraph.

HURTIG AND SEAMON'S—Grace Cameron, Wilfred Clarke, Six Valdares, Hayes and Healy, Burton and Brooks, Newell and Niblo, Jules Keller, Estelle Wordette, and the moving pictures.

KEITH'S—Will Cressy and Blanche Dayne, Emma Francis, Searl and Violet, Genaro and Bailey, Florette De Mar, Ethel MacDonough, Harry Gilfoil, and the kinetograph.

COLONIAL—Peter F. Dailey, Della Fox, Horace Goldin, Frank Gardner and Lottie Vincent, May Belfort, Three Navarnos, Wartenburg Brothers, Joseph Newman, and the vitagraph.

ALHAMBRA—Fred Karno's company in "A Night in an English Music Hall," Therese Renz, Orpheus Comedy Four, Max Welson troupe, Violet Dale, Macarte's dogs and monkeys, Kelly and Violette, Bobby North, and the vitagraph.

PROCTOR'S FIFTY-EIGHTH STREET THEATRE—Henri de Vries in "A Case of Arson," Staley and Burbeck, Clifford Crawford, Macarte Sisters, Gilday and Fox, Frank Lynne, and the moving pictures.

EDEN MUSEE—Harry Braham, the cinematograph, Hungarian Orchestra, and the World in Wax.

CIRCLE—The Transatlantic Burlesquers.

THE HIPPODROME.

The new jungle act of "A Society Circus" at the Hippodrome, introducing the plunging horses, has proved a most popular feature. The crowds continue to fill the large playhouse and are as pleased as ever with the interesting and varied entertainment.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

AMERICAN—Ted Marks presents Charles Leonard Fletcher, Billy Link, Fields and Wooley, John Stanley, Milette Charters, Harry Thomson, and the Flood sisters.

GRAND—Rose Stahl and company, Bellman and Moore, McMahon and Chapelle, DeMar and Fortune, John F. Clark, the Steward sisters, and Lillian Ashley.

MURRAY HILL—Quinlan and Mack, Coakley and McBride, Moran and Markey, Lavelle's dogs, Marie Dupree, Helen Brandon, and Gypsy Girls' Orchestra.

NEW STAR—Bellman and Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes, Zinelle and Boutelle, Laurie Rich, and Joe Edmonds.

NEW YORK—Rigo, Emma Carus, John J. Kearney, Ford and Gehrue, Heras Family, Lottie Gilson, and Kelly and Kent.

The bill of last week's attractions will be given at the Alhambra, Colonial, Eden Musée, Hurtig & Seamon's, Proctor's Twenty-third and Fifty-eighth Street Theatres, and the Victoria.

BARNUM AND BAILEY CIRCUS.

A large advance sale promises a continuance of big business at the Barnum & Bailey Circus, which opens its second week in Madison Square Garden to-morrow night. The show as heretofore provoked much enthusiasm. Interest in the new sensation is great. There is never a movement toward the exits until Mlle. Octavie La Tour, the little French chauffeuse, who drives the auto car, has concluded her startling feat and been wheeled around the hippodrome track, waving her cap and enthusiastically responding to the ovation that greets her. "The Dip of Death," last season's sensation, which has been revived with Miss Isabelle Butler, a young New York girl in the rôle of chauffeuse, and the bicycle somersaults of the Brothers Boller, also add greatly to the sum total of thrills in the big show.

When Actors Eat and Drink Upon the Stage

Variable Quality of Theatrical Viands---The Real and the Make-believe in Stage Meals---Odd Experiences.

"EATING and drinking on the stage," remarked the chronic theatregoer the other night, "always bores me when I have dined well and tantalizes me when I haven't; but whenever I go to a theatre nowadays I am sure to find the people across the footlights either enjoying a big meal or pouring down tea or champagne early and often."

When one comes to think of it, hardly a play is written in which food or drink of more or less substantial kind fails to play some part. It is a natural, easy kind of stage business, gives an actor something to do with his hands, and probably pleases everybody in the audience, save the dyspeptics. But for the property man who has to provide these stage viands and for the players who have to eat them night after night, realism of this kind is not so pleasant. Imagine, for example, being condemned, like the Girl of the Golden West and her road agent, to consume a "Fleming turn-over" and a "charlotte rusk" from the nearest bakery at precisely a quarter before 10 every evening.

In this case the food is exactly what it seems, but of course this is not always so. Across the street, for example, at about the same hour, Julie Bonbon used to enjoy a banquet in Little Hungary, in which the chicken squabs were papier maché, the celery paper, the vegetables glued to the plates, and the wine as false as its pretended effects.

If there is to be much talking, a real stage meal has to be rather carefully chosen to avoid having the mouth full any longer than is necessary. They used to solve this problem in the breakfast scene of "The Duke of Killiekrankie" by having the food made of candy which would melt rapidly in the mouth, and so not interfere with enunciation. The hashed brown potatoes, for example, were nothing but spun sugar, browned, which looked substantial enough to the audience, but melted away almost as soon as they touched the tongue. The main dish was composed of little squares of light chocolate.

⁂

There is a story that some practical joker in the cast managed to substitute one night a mixture composed of large, innocent-looking pieces of the toughest kind of caramel. The queer look of amazement that came over the faces of the breakfast party as they struck these unexpected lumps, and the valiant way in which they struggled to swallow them down before their cues, or to talk around them, was a theme of delight in the wings for days afterward.

The late James A. Herne provided in "Shore Acres" one of the most real-

first, and who was noted for never having any money at the end of the season, gloomily remarked, as he renewed his contract for another year: "Three turkey Winters, two corned beef Summers, and no relief in sight!"

Many of the devices and recipes for stage eatables have passed into tradition and form a part of the property man's almanac. Sliced bananas are a favorite form of stage food, because they are cheap and easy to eat. There is a story of a green property man with Ward, James, and Kidder, who prepared the banquet scene in "Macbeth," with not only the chopped fruit, but a dozen whole bananas neatly arranged in a large cake basket in the middle of the table. This might have passed at a pinch, but when one of the Cawdor retainers whose stage experience was small nonchalantly peeled and ate a large specimen of the fruit, the scene proved too much for the gravity of the audience, and even Banquo's ghost was disconcerted.

Sponge cake made in a mold modeled on the lines of a trussed fowl, and baked brown, makes a most deceptive and delectable stage dish, besides being mercifully easy to carve.

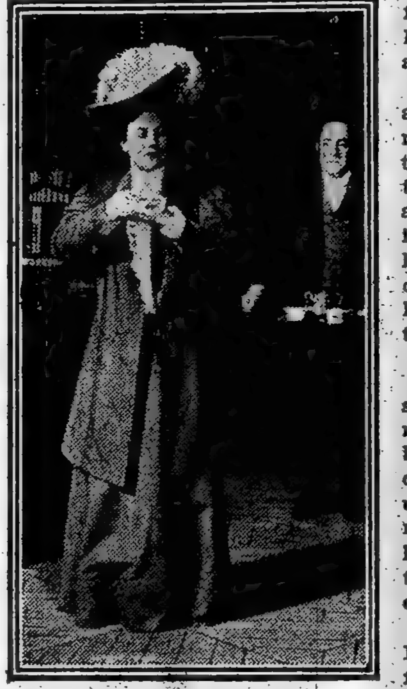
Stage lunches often prove a godsend to hungry supers. In "The Girl with the Green Eyes" the property man had nightly to prepare a little plate of sandwiches and cakes for the reception. For nearly a week he noticed that the plate, when it finally arived on the stage, had an unpleasantly nibbled and depleted look. Presently he discovered that two "society ladies" of the piece, while waiting for their cues, were surreptitiously lunching night after night on the reception spread.

But only in emergency, and sometimes not even then, does the actor find much real pleasure in things he has to eat on the stage. An actor relates the experience of a friend who took part in a big dinner scene of a first act at which real corned beef and potatoes invariably figured. The player loathed this stage eating, always dined heartily before the performance, and merely went through the motions of the table scene. One day, during a series of one-night stands in the West, this actor failed to catch the train with the rest of the company. By taking a later train he barely made the theatre in time to dress and hurry to the wings. Having had nothing to eat since early morning, he was thoroughly famished. "But, thank goodness," he said to himself as he crossed the stage, "that confounded corned beef and potatoes will be there and welcome for once." Imagine his dismay when the familiar dishes were brought on, and he saw they contained only a forbidding dark lump of leather, bound together with black string, and mashed potatoes that proved to be white cotton waste. The property man's order for the usual dinner had somehow miscarried, and the impromptu substitute was the best that could be managed at short notice. "The poor fellow's glance into the wings," says his friend in telling the story, "when he realized that absolutely nothing could be expected from that meal was one of the most wonderful studies in baffled appetite that I ever hope to see."

Property men used to enjoy "perishable props," as they are called, because they could often be made private sources of revenue. If an actor had to smoke a cigarette in the course of a play, the item "One box of cigarettes" usually found its way into the property man's nightly expense account. In one of the productions of Robertson's "Caste," in which a slice of ham loosely wrapped in a piece of brown paper plays a momentary part, the property man invariably presented the daily item, "Ham, 10 cents." One day toward the end of the season one of the players happened to suggest to the manager that the ham was getting rather seedy, and needed renewing. On examination the ham proved to be a thin slice of light leather, the white edges of which originally looked like fat; but to which time and much handling had given a tendency to stiffen and curl.



Afternoon Tea—"The Lion and the Mouse."

Stage feasts now and then show amusing discrepancies. Many people may remember an anachronous feat of the property man in "Quo Vadis." In the great scene of Nero's banquet, amid all the plates, flowers, and furnishings of a Roman board, stood a shameless magnum of a familiar brand of champagne, which is said to have been left unsuppressed until the piece came to New York.

In the olden days one of the favorite stage substitutes for champagne was a mixture of very dilute Rhine wine and bicarbonate of soda, costing about 4 cents a quart, and tasting not so very unlike champagne. It is said that even now certain resorts at Coney Island keep a stock of this elementary brand to bring on when the customer's nicety of discrimination begins to be dulled.

In the supper scene of "A Parisian Romance," in which Richard Mansfield made his first success at the Union Square Theatre in the days of Manager Palmer, Mr. Mansfield has from the first used real champagne, and whenever practicable has real meat and game sent in from hotel or restaurant kitchens. There is a peculiar sparkle as the light strikes a glass of champagne at a certain angle that nothing but the real wine can produce. Inasmuch as champagne forms so emphatic an element in Baron Chevrial's great scene, Mr. Mansfield has always felt that the genuine effect was well worth the cost.

Usually, however, stage champagne is any one of several ingenious and of course far less expensive imitations. In "The Vanderbilt Cup," for example, where there is much discussion of a new brand of champagne, the wine itself is a preparation of aerated celery tonic in bottles with chocolate-brown labels. This may be already familiar to some people under the name of "East Side Champagne." Another brand is prepared by treating charged water with a little brown sugar. The latter, however, is said to be deficient in sparkle. Champagne cider is another popular substitute.

Other drinks are concocted in various ways. The cowboys of "The Squaw Man" are of course hard drinkers, but all the whisky that passes over the bar of the saloon is either cold tea or burned sugar water. In this play the personal tastes of the actors are said to be considerably flattered. Mr. Faversham, for example, detests burned sugar whisky, and therefore the bartender is careful to fill his glass with XXX cold tea. Mr. Fawcett, on the other hand, has a passion for burned sugar, as has also Mr. Hart. Miss Johnson declares for tea, but must have lemon. Drinking the same mixture at just such an hour, night after night, becomes either a pleasant habit or a dreaded necessity, according to the idiosyncrasies of the actor. So far as possible the property man tries to provide a drink that won't be disagreeable.

Broadway stages this season have seen quite as much eating and drinking as usual, though without perhaps any more emphatic scene than that of "The Triangle," in which an estranged man and wife are served through three courses until just before the game the husband steps around the table and kills the lady with the carving knife. The "lost boys" in "Peter Pan" have a noisy supper, with much talk of bread and milk; and so naturally do they do it that perhaps few people have noticed that not a particle of food is there to consume. The whole effect of the meal is in the vigorousness of the attack. In "Mlle. Modiste" there is a sumptuous table with flowers and covers, six flunkies, a menu, and all the preliminaries. But the meal never proceeds beyond the point at which the irascible and gouty host thumps the table until the glasses reel and thunders: "I want what I want when I want it."

⁂

Afternoon tea is one of the favorite stage meals, probably because it is both easy to provide and grateful to enjoy. In "Brown of Harvard" the hero serves tea in his college study. It is real tea made over an alcohol lamp, and the cake is as genuine as a near-by bakery can make it. In "The Lion and the Mouse" there is more real tea, which Miss Elliston is said to have taught the property man to prepare.

There is a cup of tea, or at least

Simply to Sing Songs

Herbert Witherspoon Believes That to be the Highest Development of the Singer's Art.

SIMPLY to sing songs—because he believes that in the intelligent singing of songs one reaches the highest development of the singer's art—is the choice of one American who has carried his art not only through this country, but into England. Choosing to be a singer of songs when he was just about to enter on his career, Herbert Witherspoon gave himself ten years of preparation in that work before he came to New York to have a hearing. He was talking recently about it, after his return from a long tour through the West, and while resting before going out on another long tour, and said he did not regret the years he had spent on the choice he made.

"I have very decided ideas on the matter of a career as a singer of songs," said Mr. Witherspoon. "I might have gone into opera had I so desired, but I long ago decided that it would be better to be a finished singer of songs than to be a member of the opera, and so far I have refused to be led from that field.

"To be a success as a singer of songs really demands more artistic ability than to be a successful opera singer. Any person with a big voice and a magnetic personality can go into the opera and make a place for himself without having had a call for the employment of any great degree of knowledge or intelligence. The aid of the stage manager and the director of the orchestra and the accessories of the scenery and the orchestra and the other players all help to make effects for him and to fill in any weaknesses he may have. It is not really necessary for him to think deeply.

"The singer of songs, on the other hand, is wholly dependent upon himself. Singing of songs demands far more cultured intelligence, far more brain work. Every opera singer knows that the greatest test of his art is to give a recital. There no scenery, no orchestra, no other players are present to help make the atmosphere. The singer must create that—and change the atmosphere with each song, for each requires a separate setting. It takes much thought to differentiate and create these settings.

"Think, too, what knowledge of music the singer of songs must have. He must know the history of music if he is to make programmes properly—and the history of music is almost endless. He must go through an enormous mass of literature, study the lives of composers and their times, as well as their works. It is necessary also to study manners of peoples, for in nothing do manners show so much as in the songs. They represent more than anything else the feelings of the nation at the time they were written. So it is necessary if one is to sing songs intelligently to trace the development of nations up from their folk-songs into the highly developed song forms that go with their gain in culture.

"All such study takes one into the subtler things of music, and if it is hard it is interesting, more interesting than any other field of music, I believe.

⁂

"I was led to the study of the song form soon after I decided to take up a musical career. It was not intended that I should make such a career, and after I left Yale I went into business for a year. That was all I could stand of business, and so I took up music. In looking around I decided that there was really nothing to be made in oratorio singing, that the profit artistically and financially would not be sufficient to make it worth while.

"But I believed that singing of songs could be made profitable, and that a career could be made in America by one who would devote himself to that field. So I started while I was still very young to make a serious study of the possibilities of songs. I had attended musical lectures while at college, and had taken part with the musically inclined students. After I left college I entered into hard study of the lives of the composers and all the musical literature I could find. So when I had finally had my voice trained sufficiently to enter upon singing in public I was well started in the direction in which I wanted to go. I spent ten years on the preparation before I came to New York for a hearing."

"That was a long time to spend without seeking a hearing in New York, was it not?" he was asked.

"It was not too long," said Mr. Witherspoon. "I am glad I took my time. I always intended to. Taking time with art was one of the first lessons I learned. When I was in Paris I had the good fortune to meet M. Faure, and the great baritone in a fifteen minutes' conversation told me many things that have helped me. After I went away I wrote down what he said and have kept it to this day. One thing he said was: 'Use your voice always so much,' as he put his hand across his wrist; 'use it when you feel like it so much,' and he put his hand above his elbow, 'but never use it so much,' and he put his hand above his shoulder. He meant that one should always have something in reserve, and I have always remembered that piece of advice in my work.

"'You Americans are in too much of a hurry,' he also said. 'You come to Paris and study a year, and then you think you should be able to sing anything. You will not wait to grow.' That, I think, is one of the best expressions I ever heard of the reason so many American singers fail to accomplish their proper work. They will not wait. How can they expect, with study of a year or two, to do the things that artists abroad will not attempt until they have had years and years of study?

⁂

"It takes time for one's mind to grow and for one's voice to grow. Ideas grow like the trees. It is just as impossible to hurry their growth as it is to hurry the growth of a tree. And I believe that the voice grows with the development of the mind. I think every true singer has in his mind an ideal tone, as the one he would have for his voice. When he first studies he is far from that ideal. Yet the ideal remains. Year after year as he keeps practicing and studying he finds he comes nearer and nearer to the ideal. Finally mind and voice act together, and in the end he finds an understanding of his art, and when he reaches that understanding he suddenly discovers that he is sounding that ideal note that has so long been in his mind. That, I think, is purely a mental development acting upon the mechanism that makes singing. And that mental development cannot be forced.

"When I returned from Paris I did not intend to go right into New York and demand a judgment at once. I wanted to have experience. So many singers make a great mistake by going to New York before they are prepared. What can a singer expect who, without gaining authority that comes only from experience, faces audiences and critics who are bound to make comparisons with the great artists who have established their places?

"So I spent four years outside New York before I went there for a judgment."

"But was it not difficult to get a hearing elsewhere under such conditions? Is not a New York reputation really necessary to make headway elsewhere?" was asked.

"A New York reputation is not of half so much value nowadays as you would think," said Mr. Witherspoon. "There was a time when a singer could get a reputation one way or another in New York and go out into the country and trade on that alone, even though it might not be deserved. In this time also the public outside was not inclined to take any one who could not show something done in New York. But nowadays there is a great deal of independence in the country. Bluffs have been worked too often. Other cities are thinking for themselves and are choosing their own artists by knowledge of them and regardless of their standing in New York. This independence is shown also in the fact that it is not necessary now for a singer to have been in the opera in order to make a success in concert outside. That old prejudice made it very difficult for any one who might choose the song field, because the audiences would not give a hearing to any one who had not the opera stamp. But it is no longer in force.

⁂

"In my own beginning I did not find great difficulty in becoming known and in getting engagements without having to come to New York. I found that people who are interested in music write to one another, and I was often surprised with offers of engagements from most unexpected places. So I spent a very busy four years before I finally came here, and in that time I was all the while studying and preparing myself. When I did finally come I was prepared, and the consequence was that I made a place for myself that I could not have made had I rushed in when I first returned from Paris. I have had some people come to me and ask how it is possible that I should have come up so suddenly, and say that I am very lucky. But they do not know that all this sudden rise is the result of years of hard work and waiting to be ready before doing things."

"American taste for music everywhere now seems to demand the best. I have been surprised to find that throughout the country the best works can be put on the programme—works calling for the highest culture and understanding in the audience—and that they please best. In fact, New York cannot claim to be far in the van of many of the Western cities. Here, too often, we do not have time to sit back and think things over. There they do. The people who love music have time for study and contemplation of the best. They want the best, and their appreciation of it is most encouraging."

NEW MUSIC SOCIETY.

The second concert of the New Music Society will be given to-morrow evening in Carnegie Hall by the Russian Symphony Orchestra, under Modest Altschuler. The programme will be as follows:

Melpomene, dramatic overture..........George W. Chadwick
Concerto for violin, D minor..........Henry Holden Huss
(First time.)
Miss Maud Powell.
Two Contrasted Pieces, "Il Penseroso," and "Il Allegro"..........David Stanley Smith
(First time in New York.)
The Mystic Trumpeter, orchestral fantasy..........Frederick S. Converse
(First time in New York.)

The programme is designed to bring forward new music by American composers, and also that which has won recognition but remains little known to concertgoers. In the latter case is Chadwick's "Melpomene" overture, which is accounted one of the best of this New England writer's orchestral works, yet has been played seldom in New York. The Arion Society introduced it here on April 15, 1888; the Philharmonic Society played it at two concerts in 1898-9. In Boston "Melpomene," which is dedicated to Wilhelm Gericke, was brought out in 1887, and has had repetitions in at least eight concerts. European performances include those at Copenhagen, Paris, Weimar, London, and elsewhere. "Melpomene" was intended by Chadwick as a companion piece to his "Thalia," produced in 1882. His first plan was to sub-title it "Overture to an Imaginary Tragedy." Melpomene, the Muse of Tragedy, was third of the nine Muses.

The Huss violin concerto will be a complete novelty. Mr. Converse's "Mystic Trumpeter" was but lately finished, and Mr. David Stanley Smith's "Two Contrasted Pieces," inspired by Milton's poems "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," have been played only at a concert at Yale University, where the composer is one of the Faculty in the Department of Music.

The New Music Society of America desires to increase its associate membership, which carries with it certain concert privileges. The list already includes many influential men and women. Application should be made to Mr. Edwin S. Belknap, Treasurer, 421 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York City.

RUSSIAN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Russian Symphony Orchestra's last concerts of its third season will take place Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, April 7 and 8, at Carnegie Hall, under Modest Altschuler's direction. The soloist will be Emile Sauret, the French violinist, who has not been heard in New York for several seasons, and who will play the Dvorak concerto. In 1872 Sauret, then 22 years old, toured France in aid of the widows and orphans left by the Franco-Prussian war. Max Strakosch brought him to the United States the same year, and his success was such that he returned three times before 1880. In 1895 and 1896 Sauret came again. Two years ago he became a resident of Chicago, where he has been teaching and giving concerts. Dvorak's concerto, which is in A minor, and his Opus 53, followed soon after his familiar string quartet, Opus 51, and preceded his "Stabat Mater," Opus 58, written in 1883.

Two short pieces by Arenski have been added to the programme as a tribute to that composer, who died three weeks ago. They are "Le Savant" and "Le Reveur," from his second suite, Opus 23, entitled "Silhouettes," a series of five musical portraits.

Anton Arenski was born in 1861 at Novgorod, where his father, an amateur 'cellist, practiced medicine. He was graduated at 21 from the St. Petersburg Conservatory, where he studied under Johansen and Rimsky-Korsakoff. He taught at Moscow, then succeeded Balakireff as Court conductor at the capital. Arenski left three operas, (one of them with the romantic title, "A Dream on the Volga";) two symphonies, a ballet, a pianoforte concerto, three orchestral suites, much chamber music, and numerous songs. The Russian orchestra has played a good deal of his music here.

Besides the Arenski pieces and the Dvorak concerto, the programme for April 7 and 8 will contain Rubinstein's character sketch, "Don Quixote," Act III. of Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera ballet, "Mlada," and Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slave."

PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION.

Mr. Frank Damrosch is prepared to give a fitting climax to the current musical season with a performance of "St. Paul" by his large chorus, the People's Choral Union, on Easter Monday, April 16, at Carnegie Hall. The soloists are to be Mme. Mihr-Hardy, soprano; Miss Janet Spencer, contralto; Cecil James, tenor; and Frank Croxton, baritone. They will also be assisted by Mr. Sealy, organist, and the New York Symphony Orchestra.

This chorus of wage earners, not in general skilled or trained in music outside of the weekly rehearsals of the organization, has been brought to a pitch of efficiency which is remarkable; a wonderful influence for good, productive of results to be reckoned with in the musical life of the community.

As to the work itself, it is noted that it had its first performance, May 22, 1836, at the Lower Rhenish Music Festival under the direction of the composer, who immediately took it in hand for revision. Within two years the revised score of the oratorio had its first American performance, when it was brought forward by the Sacred Music Society of New York on Oct. 29, 1838, the conductor being U. C. Hill, one of the founders of the Philharmonic Society. It was performed in Boston four years later and repeated twice within the month by the Händel and Haydn Society. The Oratorio Society has given it seven performances, the last in November, 1902.

MUSICAL NOTES.

An entire programme by Wagner will be given at the next and concluding set of People's Symphony Concerts, to be given Thursday, April 19th, at Cooper Union Hall, Friday at Grand Central Palace, and Saturday at Carnegie Hall, at 8:15 P. M.

⁂

The following artists from other theatres have been engaged for this year's Richard Wagner and Mozart Festival at Münich: Mmes. Sophie David, Cologne; Ernesta Delsarta, Dessau; Geraldine Farrar, Berlin; Thila Plaichinger, Berlin; Ernestine Schumann-Heink, New York. Messrs. Otto Breisemeister, Stockholm; Carl Burrian, Dresden; Ernest Kraus, Berlin; Albert Reiss, London; Anton van Rooy, New York; Desider Zador, Prague. The musical arrangements are in the hands of Felix Motl and Franz Fischer.

⁂

The next meeting of the Tonkünstler Society, on Tuesday, will be in memory of Brahms. His second violin sonata, his contralto songs with viola obligato, and his G minor piano quartet will be performed.

⁂

The Harvard Club's series of Sunday afternoon concerts in the New Harvard Hall will be continued this afternoon, when Berrick van Norden, tenor, will sing. Next Sunday the Kaltenborn Quartet and Tom Daniel will be heard. Last Sunday Charles L. Safford gave an impromptu piano recital.

⁂

The programmes of the Cincinnati Music Festival have been completed and published. Sir Edward Elgar will come to conduct his two oratorios, "The Apostles" and "The Dream of Gerontius," on May 2 and May 5, respectively, and he will also conduct orchestral pieces of his own at two of the miscellaneous concerts—not "four out of six concerts," as was announced by the management at first. Mr. Van der Stucken will conduct all else, including the cantata by Bach, "God's Time Is the Best," at the first concert, May 1; Benoit's "Children's Cantata," and his own "Pax Triumphans," both with chorus of public school children, on May 4, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on May 5. There will be many other selections at the miscellaneous concerts, including excerpts from Wagner. The list of soloists has been changed. Miss Muriel Foster will not appear. The list will include Mme. Gadski, Mrs. Rider-Kelsey, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Janet Spencer, John Coates, D. Ffrangcon Davies, Herbert Witherspoon, and Charles W. Clark. The festival chorus numbers 400, the chorus of public school children 1,000, and the orchestra 100.

⁂

At his recital in Mendelssohn Hall on the afternoon of April 9 Mr. Marteau will play for the first time in America Max Reger's new sonata. It was dedicated to Marteau by the composer, and played for the first time in Berlin last year by him, with the composer at the piano. Besides this, Mr. Marteau will play Bach's sonata in D minor for violin alone, a romance by Sinding, a composition by Sauret, and two Hungarian dances by Brahms-Joachim.

⁂

The third and last subscription concert of the Volpe Symphony Society has been postponed, and will be held in conjunction with the Young Men's Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22.

⁂

The last concert of the Kneisel Quartet will be given on Tuesday, April 10. The programme will include Brahms's C minor string quartet, Chausson's piano quartet, and Grieg's string quartet. Rudolf Ganz will play the piano part of Chausson's quartet.

⁂

The date and place of the second "recital" of the Church Choral Society have been changed. The afternoon presentation will be given on Wednesday, April 25, and the evening presentation on Thursday, April 26, at the Church of Zion and St. Timothy, in Fifty-seventh Street, west of Eighth Avenue. Prof. Parker's "Hora Novissima" will be given.

◆

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

At the Hippodrome to-night Victor Herbert and his orchestra will give a concert. The programme will be a miscellaneous one, the soloist, Jean Dimitresco, a Roumanian tenor. Mr. Dimitresco has sung in several Western cities, but his appearance here to-night will be his first in New York. He will sing selections from Meyerbeer's operas—"O Paradise," from "L'Africaine," and "Bianca al par," from "The Huguenots."

The orchestra will play the "Tannhaeuser" overture, a group of pieces by Moszkowski, Chaminade, and Massenet, and three movements from Delibes's ballet "Coppelia," also many of Mr. Herbert's own pieces. Because of other engagements Mr. Herbert will discontinue his concerts at the Hippodrome for two weeks, resuming them on April 22.

⁂

The last concert of the Olive Mead Quartet will take place next Tuesday evening in Mendelssohn Hall. The programme includes Haydn's Quartet, G major; songs by Beethoven, Mozart, and Brahms; Marcello's Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte, and Schubert's Quartet, D minor. Miss Susan Metcalfe will be the assisting artist.

⁂

Albert von Doenhoff will give a piano recital on Wednesday evening in Mendelssohn Hall. He will play Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques," a ballade, etudes, the berceuse and polonaise by Chopin, Rubinstein's G major barcarolle, and Tausig's arrangement of Strauss's "Man lebt nur einmal."

⁂

Paul Dufault will give a song recital in Knabe Hall on Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock. He will be assisted by Lillian Apel at the piano. His programme is made up largely of French songs, in which Offenbach and Lecocq, as well as Augusta Holmès, Fontenailles G. Thomas, and Chaminade are represented; English songs by Tours and Cowen, and American by Arthur Foote and Margaret Lang.

⁂

The Marum Quartet will bring its first season to a close on Thursday evening in Cooper Union with its fifth concert. It will play Mozart's rarely heard clarinet quintet, Brahms's quartet in A, and Beethoven's in D. Herman Levy, clarinetist, and Herman Epstein, pianist, will assist. The series of concerts, which was started to place high-class chamber music in reach of music lovers of limited means, has been a success. No concert has been attended by less than 1,000 people. Many seats were sold as low as 15 cents. The guarantors who have made up the deficit have arranged to do so next season.

◆

THE ORATORIO SOCIETY.

Its Performance of "Samson and Delilah" Next Tuesday.

The Oratorio Society will close its thirty-third season next Tuesday evening, April 3, at Carnegie Hall, with Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah." Frank Damrosch will conduct, and the soloists will be Miss Janet Spencer, contralto; Ben Davies, tenor, and Gwilym Miles, bass.

"Samson and Delilah," which has not been heard in this city since its single operatic performance at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1895, is one of the few compositions of French origin on the Oratorio Society's lists. Ample tribute has been paid to Berlioz by this organization, and Gounod's "Redemption" has been sung within a decade; but "Samson and Delilah" is the most modern of the French group, and its second and third acts, also the eloquent choruses in Act I, rarely fail of their effect.

This Biblical opera or oratorio, which the Oratorio Society introduced to this country by its performance of 1892, is one of the twenty-odd works it has brought forward here in the lifetime of their composers. About one-third of the society's repertory is thus made up of contemporary music, and the proportion has been still larger in the last few years, although the present season has, until now, been devoted to Handel and Beethoven.

The chorus of the Oratorio Society, which successfully coped last December with the excessive difficulties of Beethoven's Solemn Mass, has studied Saint-Saëns's music with care and appreciation. The reappearance, after a long absence, of Ben Davies, the famous English tenor, who will sing the dramatic music of Samson, will be a feature of next Tuesday's revival of "Samson and Delilah."

HERBERT FOUND A SINGER.

Miss Allen Had Been Abroad Three Years Making an Operatic Career.

An American woman who has had an interesting experience making a career for herself abroad is Miss Julia Allen, who sang with Victor Herbert's orchestra at the Hippodrome last Sunday evening.

Miss Allen came from up New York State to this city, and became a choir singer. She was with the Holy Name Church three years ago, but wished to go into grand opera, and when James W. Morrissey undertook to introduce Miss Shea at the Grand Opera House Miss Allen had an opportunity to sing Micaela at one of the performances. As the company kept at its work for only a week she had no further chance. The one appearance on the stage gave her the taste for more, and so she left New York to find a place where grand opera was to be had more frequently.

"I did not go abroad for vocal studies," she said in explanation, "because I had been trained here in a way that seemed best to me. But I wished to get a chance for coaching in opera. So I went to Milan. I did not have much money, and I hoped to find an opening there to pay my way. I soon learned that Americans had spoiled that field for American students who have not money to back them. You know in Italy Americans are accustomed to pay for appearances in opera or at least are expected to give their services free. I simply said that I could not do anything of the sort—that I could not afford it.

"I was fortunate enough, however, to have it said that I had an Italian voice. The Italians say they do not like the American voice. They think it is too harsh. After I had been in Milan for four months an agent engaged me to sing in 'Lucia' at Nice. From that time I was able to be with various companies until at last I had the opportunity to go on tour in 'The Barber of Seville.' I was told that it was an experiment that might not be successful, as Italians are not inclined to accept anybody but an Italian in that opera. But apparently there was no difficulty, for I stayed on this tour all season, and in the next Spring and Summer I was engaged for another. Then I went to Paris and was studying French répertoire with the hope of going into the opera there when I got an offer to go to Holland last season. I played in the opera at The Hague, Amsterdam, and Rotterdam."

Miss Allen has been a member this Winter of the opera company at Havana. She recently came to New York on her way back to Europe.

Concerts, Recitals and Church Choir News

For a Cathedral Choir

Plans Elaborated Which Call for a $1,000,000 Endowment.

THE Cathedral of St. John the Divine, crowning Cathedral Heights, which will be, when completed, the most magnificent church building in America, needs a building for a resident choir school. The completion in the near future of the Cathedral choir and crossing for which Bishop Potter has recently contributed $5,000 of the required $100,000, makes the matter one of immediate moment, and to show the style of building which is required for the school an elevation has been drawn, agreeing in architecture with that of the Cathedral.

It makes a beautiful group of buildings, including the school and houses for the precentor and organist. Canon Ernest Voorhis, precentor and headmaster of the school, under whose direction it has been done, has estimated the cost of these buildings, and with his ideas of the requirements of the school presented them to the Bishop and Chapter of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, as showing the future needs and cost of the Cathedral music.

The buildings, including the houses of organist and precentor, could be built for from $225,000 to $250,000, or the school buildings alone for $150,000. A suitable site for them would be the southeast corner of the Cathedral property, which would be sufficiently near the choir of the Cathedral to admit of a covered passage way joining them.

The school building would include everything required in an up-to-date boys' school—gymnasium, dormitories, recitation rooms, &c., with a music room of the school would probably cost $8,000. The total cost of the music conducted under such conditions, which would stand first in the country and rank with that of the Cathedrals on the other side of the water, would be $40,000 a year.

This includes holding, as now, daily services with salaries to men singers, maintenance of the school, &c. The Cathedral would be obtaining the same musical service under similar, though superior—as they are more modern—conditions as those given at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, a difference in expenses being caused by the higher salaries paid in America, which Canon Voorhis estimates to be three times greater. At this estimate an endowment fund of about $1,000,000 would be required in round numbers for the Cathedral music, of which $436,000 would be for the school itself.

The yearly appropriation for music in the big parish churches varies from $7,000 to about $20,000, and with only one exception this does not include a choir school, and in no case a daily service such as is given at the Cathedral.

The Cathedral has already a choir school which has been in existance for the past five years and has given as satisfactory results as possible under the circumstances. It has been a day school, which has made necessary the selection of boys from New York and its immediate vicinity who could return home at night. This has limited the material from which good voices could be selected. While the Cathedral school, as do all choir schools, gives its boys their education in return for their musical services, the inducements have not been sufficient to the boys when they add to the hard work the trip to and from the school daily. A resident school like that of Grace Church draws boys of the best class from all over the country, and there is always a waiting list running up into the hundreds from which, from time to time, the best voices are culled. Similar conditions are required for the Cathedral.

* * *

All services at the Cathedral are now held in the crypt, where the conditions for music are not good and where a comparatively small volume of sound is required, while the demands upon the singers when the choir and crossing are completed will be much greater. There will be needed then for the service at the lowest estimate, Canon Voorhis says, fourteen men and thirty boys for Sunday services, and ten men and thirty boys for the week day services. Thirty singing voices of boys means fifty in training. With that number the voices must be of superior quality.

The school now averages about twenty-five pupils, and occupies one of the old buildings which were on the property purchased for the Cathedral. It must eventually be torn down, and the present estimates place in black and white and figures what is required to replace it and give the Cathedral suitable music.

"In considering the Cathedral music," Canon Voorhis says further, "there always remains the far more serious and deeper question as to the spiritual needs of the services. The Cathedral is to be the greatest church in America, the cynosure of all eyes. Its doors will be open to every one who may choose to enter. It will be the living Mother Church, the inspiration and the source of a vast, manifold system of activities, whose influence will permeate to the ends of our country. But the majestic structure with its vast proportions, leading men's thoughts upward, will be but a colossal pile of dead things, without a soul, unless we can in our music and in the spoken word quicken in it that inspiration of a soul which shall carry men close to the gates of heaven.

"To produce the right kind of a service, which alone will fit the greatness of our Cathedral, we shall need not only technical proficiency, but a right morale on the part of all who shall contribute to the service. This means that there must be created and fostered a deeply reverent and devout atmosphere and personnel among the choristers, and this we shall only secure by means of a school where boys shall be trained under the Cathedral's shadow and protection, undefiled by ignoble contact, reared in an atmosphere of loyalty, reverence, purity, consecration; where every teacher shall display the personal attributes of character for which the school exists.

"Our boys must consider themselves an integral part of the Cathedral organization; they must be alive to the sense of loyalty and fidelity, and their hearts must be filled with enthusiasm and pride in their work. If their hearts are not right their work will never merit praise. The boy chorister is a highly specialized child, even as is his education, and the proper means must be used in his development. We can obtain our ends, costly though they are, in no other way than by means of a residential school conducted under the best management.

"And in such a school will be educated a class of men who in future years will become the church's guide and themselves found the School of American Church Music. One might easily compile a list of the great organists and composers who have been Cathedral choristers when boys, such men as Dr. Armes, Jeffries, Wesley, Bull, Alcock, Bird, Jeremiah Clark, Thomas Attwood, Sir John Goss, Sir John Stainer, Macpherson (the present sub-organist at St. Paul's), and a host of others. These are the men who have made the church's music which we inherit, and using the same means we can produce equally good results."

IN THE ORGAN LOFT.

THERE will be special music at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin this evening, Gounod's "De Profundis" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" being given with organ and orchestral accompaniment. There will be several orchestral numbers. St. Mary's has engaged a new soprano soloist recently, Miss Marguerite Fry. The other members of the quartet are: Miss Karlina Schmitt, Contralto; Chas. A. Rice, Tenor, and Franz L. Huebner, Bass. Frank J. Chegwidden, Organist and Musical Director; W. S. Fleming, Assistant Organist, and W. A. Raboch, Conductor.

* * *

"Olivet to Calvary," Part 2, by J. H. Maunder, will be given at the special Lenten musical service to-day at the Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Holy Trinity, of which Emanuel Schmauk is organist. This is a new work, very beautiful, and is not yet familiar in this country. Dr. Schmauk calls it a devotional work worthy of a place beside Stainer's Crucifixion.

* * *

Walter C. Gale, at the Broadway Tabernacle Church (Broadway, corner Fifty-sixth Street), will give the following programme for the organ recital on Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock:

Prelude and Fugue, in A major.....J. S. Bach
Melody, in C.....King Hall
Rhapsodie No. 2, in D major.....Saint-Saens
Largo, in G.....G. F. Handel
Sonata No. 4, in A minor.....J. Rheinberger
I.—Moderato.
II.—Intermezzo (Andantino.)
III.—Fuga cromatica (Moderato.)
Allegro Cantabile, Toccota; Fifth Symphony..
C. M. Widor
Isolde's "Liebestod" (Love-death)..R. Wagner

Gounod's "Gallia" will be given to-day at the four o'clock musical service at the Church of the Ascension (Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street), Charles Heinroth, Organist.

* * *

By request some of the "Parsifal" music and voluntaries by Tschaikowsky will be repeated by W. R. Hedden at the Church of the Incarnation (Madison Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street), to-day. It will be given at the two services as follows:

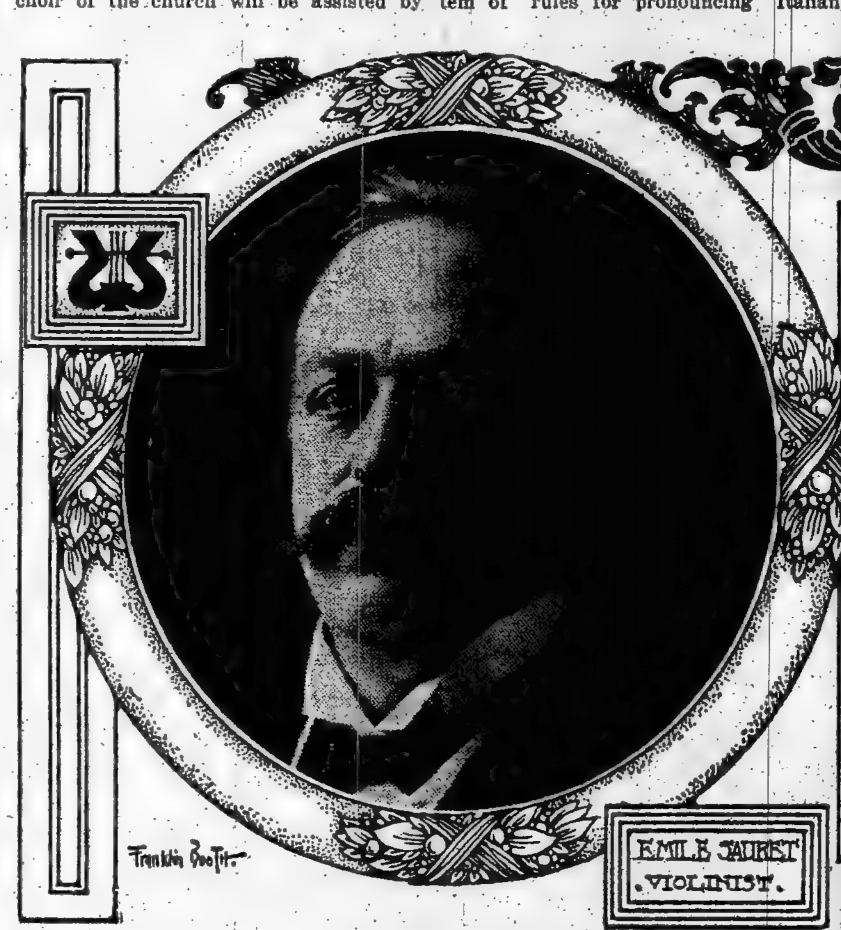
AT 11 A. M.
Prelude from the Good Friday Music (Parsifal.)
Benedicite.....
Roberts (of Magdalen College, Oxford, Eng.)
Offertory, "Agnus Dei," (O Lamb of God)..
Lake
Postlude, "Doric Toccato".....Bach

AT 4 P. M.
Prelude, "Deuxieme Meditation"....Guilmant
Anthems—Tenor solo, "Come, ye children," and chorus, "The Lord is nigh" (unaccompanied).......Sullivan's "Prodigal Son."
Postlude, "Finale," (Pathetic Symphony)..
Tschaikowsky

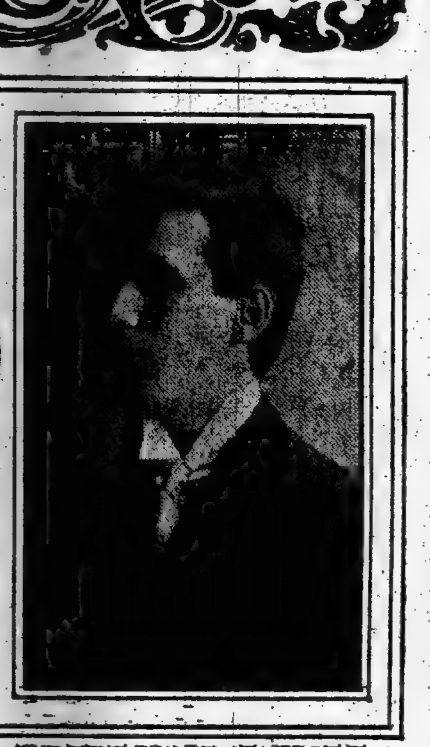
At the daily Lenten services of the church the choir boys sing every day except Monday. There was a large attendance to hear Sullivan's oratorio of "The Prodigal Son" at the musical service last Sunday, including many people from out of town.

* * *

Du Bois's "Seven Last Words" will be given by the choir of All Saints' Church, Madison Avenue and 129th Street, this evening and on Sunday next. The choir of the church will be assisted by Rhys Thomas, tenor, and Dr. F. S. Palmer, organist.



EMILE SAURET
VIOLINIST.



ALBERT VON DOENHOFF
PIANIST

* * *

Music from "Isaiah," Willard Patten, will be given this evening at the Church of the Divine Paternity, Central Park West and Seventy-sixth Street, J. Warren Andrews, organist and choir director. The last of the series of five free organ recitals of the church will be given at 4 o'clock on Thursday. Following is the programme:

Organ—Fugue, St. Ann's.....J. S. Bach
Priers in G flat.....Lemaigre
March—Le Prophete.....Meyerbeer
Mr. Andrews
Baritone Solo—"Confutatis," ("Requiem")
Verdi
Mr. Wheeler
Organ—Fugue in G minor—The Great....
J. S. Bach
Mr. Andrews
Contralto Solo—"But the Lord,"..Mendelssohn
Miss Marvin
Soprano Solo—"At Vespers,".....Tosti
Miss Harris
Organ—Toccata in G.....Th. Dubois
Miss Andrews
Contralto Solo—"The Pilgrim,"...Tchaikowski
Miss Marvin
Soprano and Baritone Duet—"What have I to do with thee," ("Elijah")..Mendelssohn
Miss Harris and Mr. Wheeler
Organ—O Sanctissima, Op. 29.....F. Lux
Mr. Andrews

* * *

11 A. M.
Organ Prelude.....West
"Thine, O Lord, is the greatness".....Kent
"Nearer, my God, to Thee,"
(Harmonized for double chorus)
"Bread of the world".....Harker

8 P. M.
Organ Prelude.....Parkhurst
"Source of all light".....Hauptmann
Nunco Dimittis.....Tours
103d Psalm (antiphonal).....Parkhurst
"Lo, the day of rest declineth".....Pflueger

* * *

"The Battle Cries of the Reformation" will be the musical address of the Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield at the Old First Presbyterian Church at the 4:30 service to-day. A series of Spring organ recitals are to be given at the church by William C. Carl, organist, the dates soon to be announced. At these Mr. Carl will give a number of new pieces of music written for him by American composers.

* * *

The junior choir of the St. James Church, Fordham, provides the music for the Friday afternoon (4:30) services during Lent.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Louis C. Elson has compiled a "Music Dictionary" that is published by the Oliver Ditson Company of Boston. It is a small and convenient volume of only 306 pages, but full of matter. Mr. Elson apologizes for the addition of a new dictionary to the large number of musical dictionaries already extant, because of the necessity of presenting the "latest developments in the field," and because of the need of explicit directions for pronouncing foreign words, common nouns, as well as proper names. The book is concise, and will no doubt be useful. It contains, besides the definitions, a system of rules for pronouncing Italian, German, and French, a list of popular errors and doubtful terms in music, a list of prominent foreign composers and players with their chief works, the pronunciation of their names and the date of their birth and death, and finally a short vocabulary of English musical terms with their Italian equivalents.

Mr. Elson is generally accurate in his definitions, but he has fallen into a few "popular errors" himself, as when he implies that the French term "point d'orgne" means "organ point," and gives a definition of the Italian term "a due" that fails to explain its significance in orchestral scores, where it is chiefly used. There are some omissions, such as of the terms "tonal" and "real" as applied to fugues and of the term "coup de glotte," which the inquiring student would stand in more need of having explained, probably, than he would "coup d'archet," "coup de baguette," or "coup de cloche," which are given (the latter, by the way, as meaning "stroke of the clock," though it may have nothing to do with any clock.) But the vocabulary is very copious, and the ground in general has been covered so thoroughly as to make the book a valuable one for quick reference.

* * *

G. B. Lamperti, one of the well-known singing teachers of Europe, who was the teacher of Marcella Sembrich, has written a little treatise on "The Technics of Bel Canto," which will be read with interest by all singers and students of singing. It is translated into English by Dr. Th. Baker, and is published by G. Schirmer. In his preface Lamperti avows that one of his objects has been to lay stress on individualizing in teaching; and he has been careful to consider in his practical directions the different capacities and needs that the teacher must regard. He writes briefly, pointedly, and in a practical manner. He begins at the very beginning with exercises in breathing, studies in tone, exercises for vocal attack, for vocal development and blending of the registers, vocal agility, and other purely technical matters.

Some of his remarks are much to the point: "When the pupil has no natural gift do not waste time on coloratura study," and he makes the same observation about the trill and the staccato. "After all, what is song but expanded speech, in which the breathing proceeds quietly and with continuous regularity?" "To place, develop, and equalize the voice; these are now and always the fundamental ideas of the technics of the bel canto." "In the Wagner drama the vocal part is wrought into symphonic tissue of tone, and only a singer with a perfectly trained voice can satisfy the demands of the musical declamation." "A strong, thoroughly trained organ will by no means, as many erroneously think, be ruined by Wagner's music; the fatal mistake is rather that unripe artists undertake the most difficult tasks before possessing the necessary ability." "Distinct enunciation, pointed declamation, and a striking impersonation of the character enacted are the chief requisites of the modern music drama."

No book can really teach singing; for that the presence of the skillful and intelligent teacher is essential. But those who have thought wisely and well, and have gone through much experience themselves can give much suggestion of value through the printed word. Mr. Lamperti's little book is thus valuable in its suggestion.

The New Orleans opera, while it never has had the slightest influence on the musical culture of any other part of the country, is a curious and interesting phenomenon. There is a certain importance, therefore, attaching to the brochure entitled "Le Théâtre Français à Nouvelle Orléans," a historical essay by J. G. de Baroncelli of that city. We cannot praise either the author's literary method or the appearance of the book, but the record he gives is one that must be taken into account. The beginning, it seems, was made by a company of comedians under one Louis Tabary, who made their first appearance in New Orleans in 1791 and "showed" sometimes in tent, sometimes in the open air, and who finally obtained a permanent abiding place. Operas were given as well as plays. We read of performances of "Deux Chasseurs et la Laitière," (a sort of musical comedy,) and of "Une Heure de Ménage," which is not to be identified unless it is Dalayrac's "Une Heure de Mariage." In 1898 there were performances of Boieldieu's "Ma Tante Aurore" and works noted as by "Daleyrac and Guetry," for Mr. Baroncelli's strong point is not accuracy. Dalayrac's "Romeo et Juliette" was among them. A "Richard Coeur de Lion" that is mentioned may be Grétry's. The permanent French opera seems to date from 1840, when Mme. Julie Calvé was the prima donna and Auguste Nourrit the first tenor. The list of operas given during the succeeding years, when the task of being accurate becomes easier for the historian, is rather a noteworthy one. It is a pity that he has not given his record more completely and systematically.

YSAYE TO GUARD HIS SON.

Youth Ran Away from School While Violinist Was in America.

Friends of Ysaye have been informed that when he comes to America next year they may expect to see him loaded with family responsibility as well as artistic labors. He will probably be accompanied by his son, who is about 19 years old, and expects to be reasonably busy in keeping his eye on that young man.

When Ysaye came to America last time he left this son in a school in Brussels. The violinist is generous and sent to the youth sufficient remittances to keep him in luxuries. He felt satisfied with the way things were going, for he was in receipt of letters from his son, posted at Brussels, telling how well the youth was progressing in his studies and how pleasant school was.

When he returned he learned that his son had spent very little of his time at the school. Soon after Ysaye left for America the boy said that it had been decided that he should go to Paris to stay with some friends. His story was so plausible that the school authorities permitted him to go and did not notify his father. Ysaye was kept in ignorance of this condition through the aid of a boy at the Brussels school. To him the son sent the letters to the father, and they were reposted at Brussels. So the boy had a good time in Paris for several months.

It is the hope of the father that the young man in time will become a violinist. He has musical talent, and Ysaye will endeavor to make him forget the pursuit of pleasure long enough to conquer the fiddle.

A PUPILS' CONCERT.

Leopold Winkler is to hold a pupils' concert in the Chamber Music Hall of Carnegie Hall next Friday evening. Among his pupils who will take part will be the Misses Annie Dubinsky, Alma Hendricks, Hortense Lion, Maude Young, Lulu Gavette, Florence Behrens, and George Halperin. They will be assisted by Miss Maria E. Orthen, soprano; Frederick W. Schalscha, violin, and Leopold Winkler, piano.

Walter John Hall had a musicale in his Carnegie Hall studio last Wednesday evening. The programme was given by these pupils: Miss Lucy Marsh, soprano; Miss Florence MacDonald, soprano; Mrs. Paul R. G. Horst, soprano; Mrs. Dorothy Fitter, contralto; George Lydecker, baritone, and Frederick K. Seward, bass.

M. COQUELIN'S NEW ROLE.

Achieves an Extraordinary Success at the Paris Gaite.

THE admirers of M. Coquelin ainé all over the world were surprised and pained a few months ago by the news that he was dangerously ill with pneumonia. When finally he was out of danger he went to Cambo to recuperate and to be near his friend Edmond Rostand. His return to Paris and his reappearance in public in the new play by MM. Alfred Capus and Lucien Descaves, "L'Attentat," which was produced at the Gaité last night for the first time, has been treated as an event of universal interest.

According to the Paris correspondent of The London Times, the five acts of the play command a steadily increasing attention from the rise of the curtain on the interior of the bookbinder Marescot's shop, in the Luxembourg quarter, to its final fall on the back room of the same picturesque establishment.

When the curtain goes up the workmen in the bookbinder's shop are talking about their employer, Marescot, his son, Lazare, and his niece, Cécile. We learn that Marescot is an old Communard, that Lazare has been inoculated by one of the bookbinders, Graffard, with anarchist notions, and that Graffard is in love with Cécile, who, however, dreams of marrying her cousin. Lazare, for his part, has conceived an ideal and absurd passion for a young woman, much his superior socially, who has recently come into the quarter, Marcelle Le Grandier, and who is a customer of his father's. The heart of a dreamy youth, in love and out of work, forms a fruitful soil for the pessimism which may or may not develop into anarchism. The spectator understands the young man's disgust with life when he beholds Marcelle (Mme. Jane Hading) enter the shop, and listens to that incomparably refined voice uttering even the commonest things with the royal calm of the high-bred grande dame. The problem is to find for Lazare a way out of his callow but touching distress.

The deus ex machina intervenes in the person of our Deputy, M. Montferran, who arrives in his automobile, his object being to arrange with Marescot for a series of semi-political, semi-literary meetings to be held in the locality. The conversation between the old lion of the Commune, whose part is played by M. Jean Coquelin, and the up-to-date Deputy, in the shop among the workmen, is a delightful picture of modern electoral humbug. It is a kaleidoscopic succession of all those necessary and unnecessary illusions on which society is organized, jauntily carried off by the two Coquelins. Finally, it is decided that Montferran shall take Lazare as Second Secretary. He thus obtains a "situation," and with the audacity of youth forthwith declares his love to Mme. Le Grandier—only to learn that she is really Mme. Montferran, and is spending some weeks with Aunt Césarine, owing to a quarrel with her husband. The blow is humiliating to a youth of Lazare's high spirit. He attends the first meeting, and returns more disgusted than ever with Montferran's pompous insincerity. His envy and jealous rancor, moreover, are augmented by his discovery of Montferran's private complications. In the splendid salon of Montferran's hotel old Marescot, some journalists, and the artists who have taken part in the evening entertainment meet later on. The old Communard is insulted by one of the actresses, and there is a scene which Montferran, with all his tact, cannot arrange. The boy's blood is up. He speaks out his mind to his chief.

An angry altercation ensues, and the deputy is finally wounded by a pistol shot. The reporters announce that Montferran has fallen a victim to an Anarchist. The whole of the admirable fourth act is passed in the office of the examining Magistrate, who finally succeeds in discovering that the famous Anarchist attenat is not a genuine Anarchist outrage, but savors rather of the crime passionel. This is a blow for Montferran. He has been living on the fame of the attenat. Before being shot by the Anarchist he feared losing his seat. Since then he possesses the best of electoral rallying cries—a Socialist shot by an Anarchist. His admirable luck he exploits in the approved electioneering fashion, and he would be the happiest of Deputies, with his arm in the symbolic sling, if the Magistrate had not discovered the real motives of Lazare's pistol shot. The scene in the Magistrate's office, in which he persuades everybody, even his wife, that the trial must remain political, and that he himself will vouch for Lazare's acquittal, offers M. Coquelin a remarkable opportunity for filling in the portrait of Montferran with a series of touches which are artistic in the highest degree. One of the leaders of the Socialist Party in France, who was in the stalls last night, was enthusiastic in his applause, and exclaimed: "La pièce est dure, mais elle est bien habile." This verdict by a specialist was the verdict of the public. The triumph of M. Coquelin is due to the fact that he has seldom or ever been afforded the opportunity of impersonating a more picturesque or more thoroughly comic character.

Dewey Blamed.

An official of the Navy Department says that, just before the breaking out of hostilities between the United States and Spain, Commodore George Dewey, in command of the Asiatic Squadron, was purchasing large quantities of coal without previously consulting the department. When this came to the knowledge of the Bureau of Equipment, the officer at the head thereof cabled Dewey something in this wise:

"Why do you buy so much coal?"

The answer came: "Chief, Equipment, Washington. To burn. Dewey."

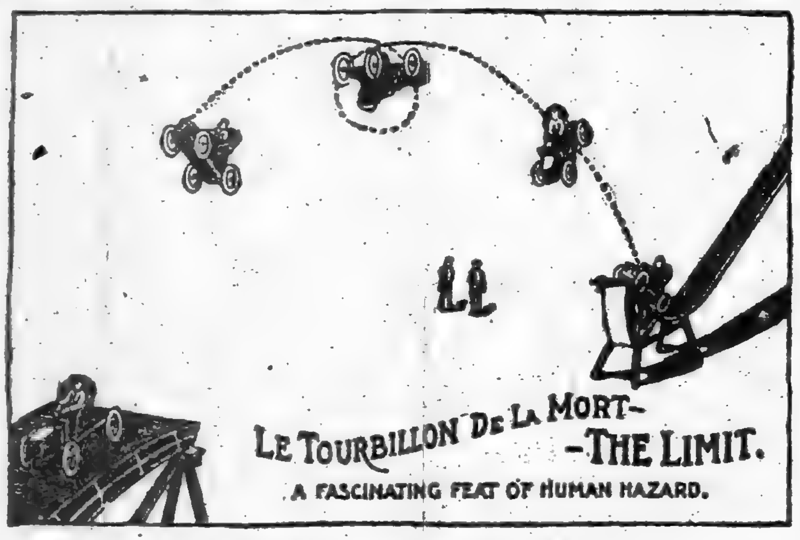
THE TREMENDOUS ENTHUSIASM STILL CONTINUES UNABATED.

Crowded houses and wildly interested audiences attest the wonderful success and extraordinary merit of

THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH.

Presenting for the first time after making the climax hit of Paris the greatest and most wonderfully ingenious and marvelous mechanical mystery.



LE TOURBILLON DE LA MORT- -THE LIMIT.
A FASCINATING FEAT OF HUMAN HAZARD.

THE LIMIT
LE TOURBILLON DE LA MORT

Where chuckling and expectant death meets disappointment and chagrin. An awful, appalling aerial automobile somersault act. An amazing descent, ascent, flight, somersault, impact and ride. Executed by a young and fearless French lady. Absolutely the extreme limit to human daring and intrepidity. The veritable capsheaf of the incredible. Costing $7,000 per week, or $150 every heart throb during its flight.

THE DIP OF DEATH.

Another ingenious French device for cheating death of his expected prey. A young American lady's wild, reckless, topsy turvy ride and aerial somersault in an automobile, for which is paid nearly $5,000 per week, or $100 every clock tick during its performance.

THE AERIAL TREMPLIN.

A Parisian sensational exploit, performed by an entire troupe of seven male and female artists 25 feet in the air.

PEACE---AMERICA'S IMMORTAL TRIUMPH.

First presentation of the new, picturesque and glorious spectacular entree. A poetic prelude to the prodigious programme of performances. A pretty, chic, dainty, delectable, winning, felicitous, seraphic, exquisite and enchanting allegory, symbolizing the conclusion of peace between Russia and Japan.

Hippodrome, Circus, Menageries, Museum, Aviary.

Racing carnivals, equestrian rivalries, arenic contests, athletic bouts, daring assaults, animal melange, glorious tournaments, wonderful feats, startling surprises, marvelous acts, intrepid deeds, mechanical marvels, aerial wonders, saltatory frolics, clown conceits, gorgeous processions, radiant costumes, triumphal chariots.

THE SOCIAL WHIRL

will begin whirling next Saturday night at the Casino. You'd better get in the band wagon and see the start. The sale of seats begins to-morrow. "The Social Whirl" is a musical comedy by Charles Doty, Joseph Herbert and Gustav Kerker, which was staged by R. H. Burnside, and which will run at the Casino as long as business warrants. The presenting company includes Adele Ritchie, Joseph Coyne, Ross & Fenton, Blanche Deyo, Caroline Locke, Ada Lewis, Charles Hilton, Frederick Bond, Maude Raymond, Elizabeth Brice and Willard Curtis. The production is said to be exquisite. Boston, which has been seeing the piece at the Majestic Theatre, likes it immensely. You may be sure that you will, too.

Sartorial Suggestions

DIAPHANOUS materials will be the reigning fashion in all costumes—formal or informal—where they can possibly be used this coming Summer. Women have learned well the lesson of comfort in clothing, and the heavy silks and closely woven fabrics of ten and even five years ago are hardly to be found, save for mountain, yachting, and steamer gowns.

There are times yet, of course, when heavy materials are required, even in Midsummer gowns, and here in town there are occasionally wet, chilly days in Summer when a slight fire is not objectionable. In the early morning, too, at the Summer resorts, and particularly in the mountains, a cloth or tweed suit is a great comfort, especially as with a thin separate blouse it meets every possible requirement of motoring or sailing.

In colors gray is to be extremely fashionable; to be sure, it will not long remain so, for the masses will soon be wearing it. That shade known as argent cour, and earlier as queen's gray, is a leading shade, and very charming it is, too. The train Mrs. Longworth wore with her wedding gown had the effect of argent cour, silver thread being woven with the white silk and forming an exquisite silver brocade in silver gray.

In the old but ever popular shepherd plaids the lightweight voiles supply the thinnest possible substitute for the heavy mannish cloths in which these plaids or checks first appeared. These voiles come also in two shades of delicate gray. The fashion of making up sheer voiles over striped and figured silks of contrasting colors is still seen, and is a really charming one, never likely to become hopelessly common. One of this sort seen the other day was the pale argent cour over a blue and mauve silk. It was trimmed with gray braid shot with lines of silver thread and mauve and blue silk; its large buttons were silver set with amethyst rhinestones. The girdle was composed of folds of changeable pale-blue and light mauve silk. To wear with it there was a hat of pale-gray chip trimmed with trails of pale-blue and mauve wistaria blossoms and gray tulle. Such frocks are a delight to the artistic eye, and as it is in the wardrobe of one of the Easter brides its beauty will not be wasted.

In thin materials for evening gowns the printed or so-called hand-painted organdies and gauzes are still much in evidence. Tulle, however, is par excellence, the choice for young girls. Of course, it is expensive, but given several silk slips of different colors, several dozen rolls of tulle, and a clever maid and the tulle gown may be renovated or made over entirely as occasion requires, and give the effect every time of a quite fresh frock.

Chiffons are lovely, especially those printed with flowers. Point d'esprit may be made up in the silk fabric for the rich girl, and in the cotton by her poorer sister.

Net frocks are among the most useful and durable gown materials, and never cause their owner to regret their purchase, provided they be of good quality. Crepe de chine, while not as filmy as many other materials for Summer evening gowns, is still cool, and for the woman of moderate means a most desirable fabric. All-lace gowns over chiffon are not so cool as they look, because the silk foundation slip cannot be as light as when a less heavy material is placed over it, and it must be firm enough to give body to back up the filmy chiffon interposed between it and the lace.

All the lightweight light-colored silks will be worn, and, with low necks and short sleeves, can be quite comfortable.

The forty-five-inch lace and fancy flouncings may be used in rather novel ways to form attractive robes. One such robe shows the combination of the forty-five-inch widths of lace with much narrower flounces, the former making the skirt, the second and narrower width the side backs that lap over to the front panels, forming both bodice and skirt, and a still narrower width being used for the low-necked bodice.

The robe in question is made over a cream-colored chiffon taffeta slip that is tight fitting, and closes invisibly down the left side under an overlapping side section.

The skirt has in the front, forming a wide graduated panel, a forty-five-inch lace flounce that is chiefly net at the top and is scalloped at the bottom, and of the well-known "shell" or repoussé variety. This flounce is tucked at the top in quarter-inch tucks, and closely enough together to take up the fullness for some inches below the waist line. The bodice is formed of a twelve-inch flounce that is tucked at the bottom, the tucks tapering up to points and ending half way up the bust. The upper edge is shirred three times, the scallops forming the finish, and having a fold of tulle laid under them.

The flounces joined together down the centre, and, being much cut away in this centre in a curved line that fits into the back, make the princess back. The back at the top is of the lace, laid in upward-turned, graduated plaits that taper out to nothing at the front, and these are so arranged and fastened to the foundation slip that they outline the figure at, above, and below the waist line, there being one at the waist line and three over the hips; these all curved downward instead of up, and the lace is released far enough over the panel and hangs loosely enough to give a coat effect from the bodice top to the bottom of the robe, the flouncings being caught to the underslip all the way down, and the top—at the left side—so arranged as to be hooked over the front and to conceal the closing of the bodice.

Where the flounces go under the arms they are cut out to make room for the arms, but the continuous line of the outer edge is not interfered with, and at a point just above the bust line this edge of lace turns back over the other and wider portion, forms a bertha ruffle over the shoulders and across the back. A rhinestone cabochon is fastened where the lace meets, from which droop two ends of pale-blue moire ribbon extending almost to the floor. The sleeves are each two full but short puffs of the dotted net portion of the lace, the repoussé edge forming six-inch ruffles over the gloves.

In the back, when the flounce reached the floor, each is cut up in a bias line so that a large V-shaped blank space is left, the top of the V being squared off for a space of twelve inches. In this space is inserted a narrower flounce section that forms the square train at the lower edge and at the top is gathered in quite full to the crosswise twelve-inch section. The gathered portion is set up, being shirred three or four times, and makes a little ruche heading where it is joined. No attempt is made to conceal the joining of the flounces, which in nowise detracts from the beauty of the gown.

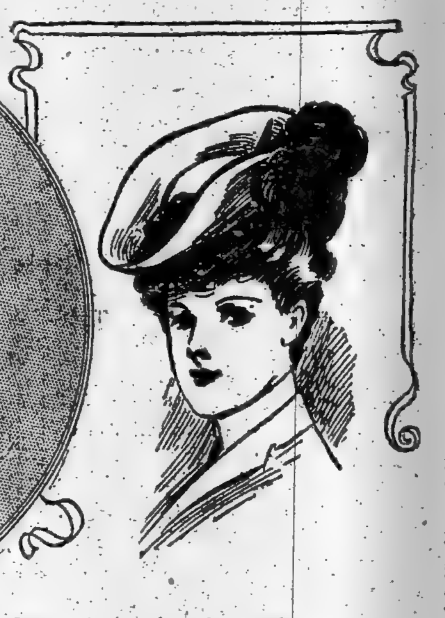
Black and white sailor.



Mauve straw with black velvet and tips.

A Parisian costume just arrived, and which has been purchased for the wardrobe of a wealthy Western woman, is in one of the paler shades of light coral red, often termed pink, so much in evidence. It is a carriage costume for formal visits. Looked at from the back, one first sees a high stock made of white chiffon folds, then comes a collar an inch and a half wide of a much darker shade of coral red velvet, then a section of the cloth shaped like a Maltese cross with its top forming a yoke, and on this are embroidered various shades of coral color and silver thread in clusters of leaves and tendrils, some of the latter extending down into the lower section of the cross.

Revers that widen from the shoulder seams and extend out over the sleeve run down each side the cross effect and much further, with the straight side toward the centre and the widening, bias edge at the outside. These end midway between shoulders and waist line over still wider but similar revers of the plaited section forming the loose, straight coat. These revers are embroidered to match the Maltese cross yoke piece. Just below the lower part of the cross, which ends a little less than half way from the stock to the waist line, is a boxplait of the cloth held down on each edge above the girdle with crochet buttons an inch across, and below the coral-colored velvet belt are six more buttons, three on each side of the continued plait, which keeps its plait form to within eighteen inches of the end of the short train.

Between the central extension of the Maltese cross and the re-embroidered revers at each side is a space several inches wide; this is filled with three plaits of the cloth that start from under the cross bars of the yoke. These plaits are firmly pressed in and tacked, and flare a little from the top. They extend at the inside as far below the waist line as the lowest of the buttons on the plait, or, say, nine inches. The inner plait of each section is tacked to the body of the robe as far down as the second button on each side of the three buttons above the belt, but from that point hang straight down over the belt and swing loose at the side, quite concealing the figure. The embroidered revers slant out and are longer toward the sides than the plaits. The plaits, or rather other plaits forming the sides of the coat, continue on beyond the revers, form the sides of the coat and end at the front under similar revers. The velvet belt closes in the front with a silver buckle, the yoke is straight across and cut into at the top by the velvet collar, which lies back in shawl effect, and is embroidered to match the back. There are two narrow box plaits instead of one wide one down the front, and these pouch slightly above the belt and each has three rows of buttons. It closes down the centre by hooks concealed under three tab ends of coral velvet slipped through tiny silver buckles.

The voluminous sleeves are plaited at the top and end at the elbows in cuffs eight inches deep, except at the outside and back of the arms, where they are cut down in, in block or battlement effect, and at that point are four inches wide. These are covered with the shaded embroidery. Two accordion-plaited ruffles of hemstitched white chiffon fall from under these cuffs.

The front of the skirt is gored and has turning in toward the centre and almost meeting two side plaits stitched in down as far as the knees. The sides and back are gored to fit, with the box plait down the centre having a single side plait on each side.

To wear with this costume are two hats, one of which is a rather flat, oval toque of light coral-colored satin straw in a fancy braid having coral-colored tulle around the crown and covering the bandeau, and two white ostrich tips at the left, caught under a bow of coral of darker velvet. The other is entirely of coral-colored tulle shirred to a framework of satin-covered wires. It is trimmed with sprays of silver leaves and clusters of currants.

* * *

A novelty in foulard silks is the so-called waterproof weave. This variety of foulard will not run when wet, and it meets a long-felt want, for, popular as the graceful and cool foulard is for quiet dresses, it has been eschewed by many because a spot of water, a few drops from a passing rain cloud, or a dash of salt spray meant a pretty gown ruined.

Some of the new foulards have a twill with satin surfaces—they are the waterproof, or, rather, waterproofed, variety—and this particular weave sheds the water.

One manufacturer has brought out what he terms shedwater silks, in both foulards and louisines.

Still another and lightweight, exceedingly lustrous foulard is called "radient" foulard. This comes in pastel tints, while most of the other foulards have dark backgrounds. The "radient" foulard comes, of course, in different designs; one such has a pale blue background, thickly sprinkled with small white polka dots, and over this background small designs in Persian pattern appear. Another shows a pale gray background printed with conventional designs.

In purchasing foulards one should ascertain whether or not they are waterproofed, that is, if one cares to have that quality, because by no means all of the new foulards are thus finished.

In warp-print taffetas the white grounds are sprinkled with the smallest of flowers or Dresden nosegays lead.

In plain taffetas there is one plain variety forty-two inches wide, very supple and brilliant, that will be much used for costumes and wraps.

In louisines, a nebuleuse design manufactured by an American firm is exceedingly attractive. One such shows a deep blue background with moss roses in palest pink with delicate green leaves and moss and loose foliage, the flowers and leaves—as the name indicates—being faintly shadowed against the background instead of being clearly brought out. Another design is a dull, soft green, with lilies of the valley suggested as a pattern.

Crêpe de chines come in the street shades. Beautiful and also economical as the crêpe de chine is, it is not likely to compete successfully with other materials as a fabric for street gowns, its grace and "dressiness" relegating it to indoor and especially evening gowns.

Beautiful broché mousselines and semi-sheer radium silks are among the most expensive silken novelties, and are being made up into beautiful evening gowns. Most of them are in soft, low tones. Now and then, however, they appear in pastel-tinted backgrounds, with flowers in natural colors or small bouquets breaking their surfaces.

Many printed chiffons with large flowers, bouquets, and exquisite roses are among the choice materials for exclusive gowns.

Plaited crêpe, in crêpe de chine weaves, crêpon finish, embroidered in silk dots, is also shown. It comes in pastel and white backgrounds, with open checks and hair-line stripes in black. The revival of printed silks is a notable one, and they will be much seen this coming season.

No one need have any hesitation in having chiffon broadcloth gowns made up, as the material will be as much worn, not only this Spring, but the coming Autumn, as ever before.

In serges the blues and creams will lead, all to be most simply made, preferably trimmed with braids to match when trimmed at all.

A new thing in eoliennes is a jacquard effect. Voiles, of course, will always be with us; their popularity shows no diminution. They are light in weight, and may be either simply or elaborately made and wear extremely well—all good reasons for their continued prestige. In fancy voiles there are half-silk fabrics, some having open checked effects and others being openwork. There are also silk overchecks on hairline striped grounds.

* * *

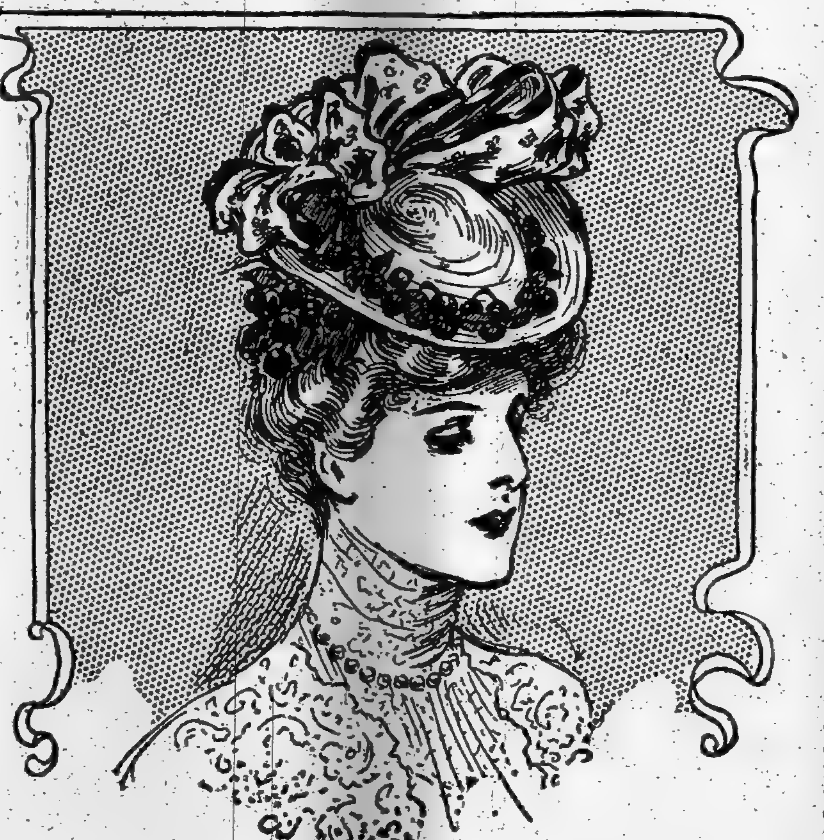
In laces, the so-called French crochet lace, made of heavy cotton braid, laid in various patterns and joined with lace stitch, is perhaps the only real novelty. This is being used to trim all heavy washable gowns and coats, and is especially appropriate to linen coats and skirts. Bands of it come for insertions, and there are separable motifs by the yard, while entire princess robes made up of it are effective.

Irish crochet and Cluny laces will be fashionable, but perhaps Valenciennes will be the most so. Real Valenciennes is as unassuming a lace as it is expensive. It takes quantities of insertion to make any showing on a blouse or gown and lots of edging for rufflings. As the cheapest, narrowest real Valenciennes costs anywhere from 75 cents a yard up, depending on its fineness, and it takes yards and yards for even a simple wash gown or blouse, it will be seen that it is a lace that appeals to the lover of quiet and fine effects. It stands a great deal of laundering.

Irish crochets are also lasting, but, being heavy, save in the baby varieties, are not so suitable for many lingerie fabrics as Valenciennes.

Batiste laces are in greater vogue than any other, but this means for the general public.

In separate motifs in a lace and embroidery for expensive wash frocks, there are combinations of both Irish and Valenciennes with embroidery. Sometimes the English eyelet embroidery is seen; in others there are imitations of the Appenzell work.



Brown chip with cherries.

One example of combinations is that of batiste embroidery bordered with net lace and having motifs of baby Irish crochet inserted in medallions between the net lace and the batiste.

* * *

In hats—that is, hat materials—fine, narrow straws are and will be the smartest, and also the most expensive. Leghorn straws will be much worn. Milan, Neapolitan, Tagal, Panama, Manila, nine-end straw, Tuscan, and Calisaya are leading and expensive hats.

With the increased demand for fine straws the price has gone up, of course, and untrimmed shapes in narrow straws, hand-sewn, are undoubtedly high. Despite the Parisian tendency to wear hats of contrasting colors to the gowns, and also the combinations of many colors—many, of course, in subdued tones on the same hat—the modish tendency here is to hats matching the gown, or, at least, combining two or three colors or shades only.

Quantities of small flowers are being shown, and there is a noticeable absence, so far, of the freak shapes and colors of the past two years, and outré shapes in hats as well. Indeed, this Spring's hats and those of the coming Summer promise to be much more quiet in colorings, shapes, and in effect than those of 1904-1905—for which Dame Fashion be thanked!

* * *

An example of a waterproofed foulard of lustrous finish and light weight is included in the trousseau of one of the Easter Monday brides. It is a pearl-colored background, with tiny circles of deep red scattered three inches apart over its surface. The lines forming the open circles are the width of a pinhead, and the gray spot outlined is a quarter of an inch across. The gown has a corselet skirt with a blousing top. The corselet is fitted by clever goring, and the seams are all piped with the foulard over tiny cords. The skirt trails a little bit, and lies on the floor at the front and sides, it being an indoor costume. It is trimmed with five bias flounces, ranging from nine inches wide at the bottom to five inches at the top. The lower edge of each is finished by a fine cord covered with the material. These ruffles, being cut from circular sections, are flat at the top, and each is headed by a bias fold of the foulard, ranging from an inch and a half wide at the bottom to half an inch in width at the top. The ruffles are perhaps an inch and a half apart, and each is faced up from the corded edge an inch and a half with plain red silk, matching the little circles in color.

The corselet top is, of course, stiffened and boned to keep its shape, and is finished at the top by a corded band of the foulard an inch wide, piped at each side. The blouse top is gathered full at the bottom, and this bottom has an elastic run through it that holds the gathers in under the corselet top, and a clever adjustment of hoops and loops keeps it in place without the gathers in any way enlarging the waist line.

A little above the waist line the foulard is shirred seven or eight times, the shirs being half an inch apart, and the same method of flattening the fullness is used at the back, where, as in the front, the gathered section pouches out over the corselet top of the skirt.

Flowers in Irish crochet are set on to form a border over the shirred tops of the bodice. The guimpe with attached stock is of batiste, with insertions of baby crochet medallions, and it is also embroidered quite heavily.

The sleeves are full, not large puffs of the foulard, that fit the arms below the elbows. They end midway between elbows and wrists, and have turned back on them narrow cuffs of solidly embroidered batiste, edged with baby crochet lace.

A beautiful negligee in the wardrobe of another bride is rose-colored chiffon cloth, sunray plaited. It has a Dutch neck. The plaits are stitched down flat at the top, and folded pink liberty satin ribbon three inches wide is laid around the top, a fold of paler pink chiffon being laid under its upper edge. This ribbon is knotted and forms four long bow loops and two long ends, the latter drooping to below the waist line. There is a shaped girdle of the rose-colored ribbon, with a chou at its top in the front, from which ribbon ends droop to the knees. In the back there is a chou at the lower point, with sash ends, six inches wide, falling to the floor. Six inches from the lower edge of the skirt a two-inch fold of rose-colored liberty satin goes entirely around it.

At a point a trifle above the knees are six chous of the rose-colored ribbon; from each chou two lengths of the ribbon, one seven inches shorter than the other, form loops that come within two inches of the satin band at the skirt's hem, and then ascend to the next chou. These loops are caught very lightly at the bottom, so they will not fly and catch as the wearer walks, but look as though caught at the chous only. The sleeves are loose puffs to the elbows of sunray-plaited chiffon, with two plaited ruffles, hemstitched. The under ruffle is two inches broader than the top one.

Over this is worn a coat of unlined flower chiffon, the background of the palest imaginable pink, flowered with great shaded pink roses, having dull-green leaves. This coat is kimona cut, but without sleeves. It is open at the sides, where the arms go through, from shoulder seams to below the waist line, and is finished at its edges with an inch-wide band of valenciennes lace, edged with a two-inch ruffle of the same lace.

Personal and Otherwise.

MRS. SAMUEL UNTERMYER, whose portrait is reproduced in the Pictorial Section, is the wife of the well-known lawyer. She is an Austrian, her family being well-known Austrian Protestants. She is highly musical and artistic, and at her dinners many notable people gather. She is a handsome woman of small size, fine features framed in fluffs of gray hair, though by no means a middle-aged woman, and dresses very well. Her name is usually to be found among the lists of patronesses of the artistic entertainments for charity. She is interested in many charities and especially in the Music School Settlement.

Miss Jessie Coogan is a daughter of James J. Coogan, a former Borough President. The Coogans are wealthy and spend their Summers at Narragansett Pier.

An excellent picture of Countess Grey may also be found in the Supplement. So much has been printed about her since the Greys succeeded the Earl and Countess of Minto in Canada, that there is little left to be said about them. They have just been visiting in town.

Mrs. Arthur Iselin, whose picture ornaments the Pictorial Section, is one of the most attractive young matrons and mothers in New York society. She is the only living child of Col. William Jay and Mrs. Jay, and a niece of Charles and Hermann Oelrichs and of Mrs. Richard Henderson of England. She is the Vice President of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Club, and one of the best amateur whips of her day. Col. Jay is the President of the Coaching Club, and has taken great pride in his daughter's skill. Mrs. Iselin's driving has been much admired in Paris, where, with her father beside her, she has often tooled coaches through that city's crowded streets.

Her wedding to Mr. Iselin was one of the most fashionable events of the Autumn of 1904. It was to have taken place in Old Trinity at the head of Wall Street, of which Col. Jay is a Vestryman, but the torn-up condition of the streets—owing to subway construction—prevented this, and it was celebrated instead at St. Agnes's on the west side, one of the churches of Trinity Corporation. Mrs. Iselin is above the middle height, slight but rounded, with masses of dark brown hair, eyes of the same shade, and a clear pink and white complexion. Her beauty is of a distinctive type, delicate, and high bred. She is vivacious in manners and quite unspoiled. The Jays being in mourning at the time of her début, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont gave a notable cotillion at Sherry's for the débutante. Her elder sister, Miss Julia Jay, now dead, was one of the attendants at the wedding of Mrs. Belmont's daughter, Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, when she married the Duke of Marlborough. Her mother was a reigning belle before her marriage.

Mrs. Arthur Wilson has a villa on the Riviera named Maryland, after herself. She entertained at Tranby Croft, the Wilson country place, and at her town house in Grosvenor Square, London, with the most hospitable of functions. She is a great favorite, and fond of doing kindnesses to others. One of her fancies is the introduction of the new games, and billiard huff and puffball were first played in London at her house. Together with the Lady Molesworth she made poker popular in smart society. Among her jewels are a diamond feather of great value and much beauty; her pearls are also notable.

Thomas Sutherst, the father-in-law of the much-talked-of Marquis of Townshend, is in many respects an unusual character. He is the son of a Cleveland ironmaster, who only through great effort was able to send his son to Cambridge, where he failed to secure a degree. He studied law and also studied sociology. He was one of the originators of the Shop Hours Rgulation acts, and the author of a book entitled "Overwork in Shops." He was the attorney of the Salvation Army, winning for it the right to meet in public and to form processions, and also successfully managed the London 'busmen's strike several years since.

His daughter, who was Miss Gladys Sutherst, inherits much of her beauty from him. She is very fair, has golden hair, and large blue eyes.

The recent death of Lady Romilly recalls the story of her broken-off wedding with Ernest Cunard, who married Mrs. Padelford, a well-known American woman.

Lady Romilly was Miss Violet Grey-Egerton, a beauty and one of the most attractive and popular girls in London society. She was engaged to Mr. Cunard, who was very wealthy and popular as well. He was considered one of the most desirable matches of the day. The wedding was arranged for and was to take place with much attendant pomp and ceremony. The world of society was dumfounded when a day or two before the date of the wedding announcement was made that the marriage had taken place of the prospective bride of Mr. Cunard to Lord Romilly. Later they remembered that Lord and Lady Romilly had been engaged, had disagreed, and the engagement broken. It seems that they met, through accident, only a few days before the date of the expected ceremony to Mr. Cunard and married almost immediately. Lord Romilly died only a few months before his handsome widow, the great grief she felt over his loss shortening her own life. Their secret marriage was in 1897, and their only son celebrated his seventh birthday this month.

The new residence of Mr. and Mrs. James Abercrombie Burden, Jr., on East Ninety-first Street is one of the finest of the recent new residences to be completed in New York. The house adjoins that of Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mrs. Hammond and Mrs. Burden being daughters of Mr. and Mrs. William Douglas Sloane and sisters of Mrs. William B. Osgood Field. Mrs. Burden is also a first cousin of Miss Florence Vanderbilt Twombly, who married William A. M. Burden, a cousin of Mr. Burden.

Mr. and Mrs. Burden gave a very large reception a few evenings ago to show their new house. One of its attractive features is the covered driveway at the side with fine arched entrance. Through this the carriages drive up to the wide portals, discharge their passengers, and then curving around they go on through an open driveway back to the street again.

A man in livery stands outside at the entrance and announces by touching a bell the approach of guests.

The main entrance is a double door, and there is also a single door nearer the street which leads to another little hall opening out in the main hall.

As guests enter the door they find themselves in a semi-circular hall, facing the winding stairway that leads to the top, and gazing upward see the superb mural paintings, rich in dark red and soft orange tones, that decorate the dome.

The corners or rather the extremities of this entrance hall are cut off into two small hallways, and in these are rich old cabinets from France, in one of which is the door to the passenger lift. The hall is in light marbles. A tiger skin, an antique table, and several chairs are its furnishings.

As the house is built on the plan of an old-time chateau most of the furniture and fittings are of the same period. On the next floor are the family living rooms, boudoir, bedrooms, &c., beautifully furnished. This, too, is the French idea and far superior in comfort to the modern American fashion of having ball and other rooms for formal entertaining on the second floor, thereby compelling the family to go above them to reach their own apartments—a waste of time as well as an artistic fault.

On the third and top floor is the immense state dining room in dark wood, with its centre rug a rich shade of crimson velvet, the furniture upholstered to match, and at the further end an enormous painting, in the shape of a cathedral window, representing an old Italian garden. From the end facing this painting one steps into the superb white-and-gold salon running the entire Ninety-first Street side of the house, lighted by lofty windows and furnished in the French fashion.

Between these rooms and the stairway is the narrow semi-circular hall, at each side of which are doors that are frameworks of gold set with small mirrors in panes like a window, one of which opens into the lift.

An amusing story about the Duchess of Sutherland is going the rounds. She visited weekly the workhouse homes at Stoke-on-Trent. Many of the little children there see so few others than the nurses in charge that they almost invariably say, "Yes, nurse," or "No nurse," when asked any question. In the course of one of her calls at the homes the Duchess saw a little girl in one of the cots, who seemed very weak, so she asked her if she was getting better. To which the child responded, "Yes, nurse." The nurse who accompanied the Duchess corrected the little patient and said, "You should not say 'nurse,' but 'your Grace.'" Whereupon the child clasped her hands and closing her eyes said: "For that which we are about to receive may the Lord make us truly thankful."

The Duchess, a genuine aristocrat, is a strong temperance advocate, a student of Socialistic and labor questions, and has decided democratic tendencies. Her two sons for some years attended the Board School at Golspie, in Sutherlandshire. She writes well, sketches well, is fond of literature, and is very readily touched by the sufferings of others. Her life is luxurious in its surroundings, but she cares little for carriages, and is seldom seen in one save on the most formal occasions. She once rode on a railway engine, as did also Lady Tweeddale.

Society at Home and Abroad

IN Passion and Holy Weeks society is more or less at a standstill. To-day begins the fortnight in which there is almost a complete lull as far as any entertaining is concerned. Those who are coming with the Spring from the South will linger at the different halting places until the dawn of Easter. Others have crowded the ships going abroad. It has been discovered that Winter can be as cold and as uncomfortable in the south of France and in Italy, and even in Sicily, which just now is one of the last fashionable resorts for Americans, as in New York, but that Spring is the most enjoyable time in the land of the fig, the olive and the orange.

Until after Whitsunday—the famous bank holiday of England, when 'Arry and 'Arriet disport themselves on cheap excursions—London is dull. True, this year it will have its attractions for Americans. The wedding of Spencer Eddy and Miss Lurline Spreckels will be of interest more to the Western and Pacific contingent than to those who come from New York, but it will have a significance somewhat international. The much-discussed nuptials of Waldorf Astor and Mrs. Nannie Langhorne Shaw may or may not take place in a fashionable church with all the pomp expected under such circumstances. Divorced ladies have been married in English churches, and very recently, and although the ecclesiastical laws are more stringent there, exceptions can be made. The Duke of Newcastle, who has made more than one protest against such matrimonial events, is sailing this week for his annual visit to New York, and his rooms at the Metropolitan Club are ready for his occupancy. Mrs. Shaw at last accounts had been in Paris selecting her trousseau, and had taken a trip down to the Riviera, where are now many of her American friends. Mr. Astor père is also reported as having given Cliveden to his son as a wedding present.

Lord Ronald Sutherland-Gower, who was a son of the second Duke of Sutherland, and who had passed his childhood at Cliveden, has come out in print frequently in a defense of William Waldorf Astor concerning the reported alterations to the place. Nothing has been changed by Mr. Astor. The portraits of the family still hang in their accustomed nooks in the hall, and the Duke of Sutherland's statue only has been removed to a better position, overlooking one of the finest views on the river. Mr. Astor has added many valuable pictures, and has had the walls and ceilings lined with splendidly carved paneling. The pictures are very famous, by Sir Joshua Reynolds and Romney. The estate in early Spring is superb, and ideal for a honeymoon, where no doubt Mr. and Mrs. Waldorf Astor will reside for a time after the wedding. Mr. Astor's other famous castle—Hever—this time a veritable Tudor mansion—is now nearly ready for his occupancy. Cliveden was sold to William Waldorf Astor by the late Duke of Westminster, who married Lady Constance Sutherland-Gower, a daughter of the second Duke of Sutherland.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor comes from Aiken this week, and may sail shortly for England, in which case the wedding will be held in London. Mrs. Astor and Mrs. Benjamin Guinness were the hostesses of Mrs. Shaw last Summer in London.

The sailing lists last week made interesting reading. Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt went abroad for the season, as also did Mrs. Ogden Goelet. Mrs. Goelet has stated that she will return to Newport for the season. Other departures included Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Iselin, Jr., and the Misses Iselin, who will go direct to Paris, and from there later to some Continental spa for the health of Mrs. Iselin; Comte Armand de Gontant Biron, Mrs. Warren Delano, Jr., Mrs. Charles H. Baldwin, and Elliot Gregory, who are going to France; Lispenard Stewart, who will return by June; the Baroness von Bienfeld, Mrs. Sidney Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Waetjen, Mrs. James B. Haggin, Mr. and Mrs. Daly; Mrs. Miles B. Carpenter, Miss Adelaide Spofford and her cousin, Mrs. E. Robbins Walker, and Theodore Wilmerding.

Prospective departures include Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, who were last week at Newport, giving a final inspection to their villa, which they have let to Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Leeds. Mr. and Mrs. Drexel are to be absent for quite a long time. Then sailing also are Dr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, (Mr. and Mrs. Pulitzer will not accompany them, having taken a house at Sands Point, L. I., for the Summer;) J. Hampden Robb and the Misses Robb, who go on the Baltic on April 11; Mrs. Ogden Mills and the Misses Mills, who sail in April, and James Henry Smith, who will go abroad about the same time.

Mrs. E. J. Berwind sailed last week. Mrs. Thomas Hastings was another one of those who will pass the Spring in Europe. She took with her Miss May Tolfree.

Some of the fashionables are homeward bound. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt are among the number. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., will arrive later. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt come for the Boston and other Horse Shows and for the coaching season. Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Morgan and their interesting family have sailed from England. They have been on the other side since Autumn. They are going to their country seat at Hempstead, and later will be at Newport. Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Juilliard are also among those who are returning to this country. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont have decided to remain abroad this year. If they do come back, it will be late in the Autumn for the very end of the Newport season.

Several engagements to be quickly followed by weddings—long engagements are not as frequent as they have been in other years—have been announced. One of these is that of Miss F. Louise Vanderhoef, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Harmon Vanderhoef, to Gustav Maurice Heckscher. Miss Vanderhoef is a sister of Miss Nathalie Vanderhoef and a niece of Mrs. William Scott Pyle. She has won many honors at golf, having obtained the woman's championship at Ardsley, and she added to her many trophies the Col. Barbour Cup for the best woman player of the Monmouth Beach Golf Club. She is a débutante of two Winters ago, and is blonde and very handsome. Her parents have their Summer home at Monmouth Beach, where they entertain a great deal. Mr. Heckscher is the son of Mr. and Mrs. August Heckscher. His father is a wealthy merchant, a member of the famous Heckscher family, known in society for generations. The Heckschers have a country seat near Huntington.

* * *

The engagement of Miss Louise Peters, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Twyford Peters, to Harold H. Weekes, was another announcement of the week. Miss Peters made her début the same Winter as Miss Vanderhoef. Her brother married Miss Nathalie Wells, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Storrs Wells. Mrs. Storrs Wells, by the way, has recovered her health. She has been ill at the St. Regis for several weeks. Mrs. Samuel Twyford Peters was a Miss Elder, a cousin of the Havemeyers and Mrs. McCoskry Butt. Mr. Weekes is a son of Arthur Delano Weekes by his first marriage. He is a member of the New York Stock Exchange and of several prominent clubs.

On April 10—in Easter week—Mrs. Katherine Corse Ingersoll, widow of Charles D. Ingersoll, will marry Robert T. Varnum, brother of Gen. James M. Varnum and of Miss Helen Louise and Miss Amy Varnum. Mr. Varnum is a member of the Union Club, and until recently was thought to be a confirmed bachelor. Mrs. Ingersoll was Miss Saunders, a great niece of the late Israel Corse. She is a near relative of Mrs. Cadwalader Evans. Mr. Ingersoll died a few years ago. Mrs. Ingersoll is one of the authorities on bridge, and she has published a short manual, in the shape of a leaflet, in which all the important rules of that fashionable game are set forth.

The Hempstead set is interested in the wedding plans of Miss Nellie D. Moore, granddaughter of the late William Henry Moore, who for years was rector of the quaint St. George's Church at Hempstead, and professor for forty-five years in the Union Theological Seminary of New York. The bridegroom-elect is Peter Gilsey, a member of the well-known New York family of that name. The date of the wedding is April 25, at St. Agnes's Church. The bridesmaids will be the Misses Adelaide and Isabel Moore, sisters of the bride-elect. As the family are in mourning, there will be only a small reception following the ceremony, to be held at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. A. W. Parke.

Although the Poinciana is closed and to-morrow The Breakers will follow the example, people are slow in coming home from the South. The West Indies have been most popular this Spring. The sea voyage is delightful, and Jamaica and the smaller islands have been most hospitable. Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt have been cruising in the North Star. On Thursday they were in Havana, where Mrs. Roosevelt, the wife of the President, is to be this week. Many will remain over for the Holy Week ceremonies, which begin next Sunday with the distribution of palms in the cathedral and other Roman Catholic churches. There has generally been held on Good Friday the procession of the Judas, when an effigy of that person is beaten and pelted and made into a bonfire on one of the plazas, and there are also numerous other interesting and picturesque features. It is not yet decided as to whether Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt will go abroad this year. Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wilson have returned from the South.

* * *

There will be several private dinner parties this week given in honor of Earl Grey, Governor General of Canada. Countess Grey accompanies him. She will be the guest of Mrs. Choate, and Lady Evelyn Grey, her daughter, will be entertained by William Butler Duncan. It was also announced that Lady Sibyl Evelyn de Vere Beauclerk was to be of the party. She is a daughter of the Duke of St. Albans. One of the sisters of Earl Grey is the Countess of Minto, who has so many friends in New York. The Greys are to go from this city to Washington, where they are to be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Elihu Root.

Even charitable entertainments will be few until after Easter. The much-discussed tableaus at the Waldorf-Astoria are over, and although the effects were most artistic, the pictures beautiful, and the playing of the amateur orchestra admirable, there has been a little criticism as to the lighting of the hall, and still more as to the conduct of some of the audience. Early this Winter, at one of the leading subscription dances, one of the patronesses bitterly complained of the lack of manners in some of the guests. They hardly bowed to or noticed the women who had asked them, and treated the entire affair as if it were a public entertainment. At the tableaus women forgot themselves and stood on chairs, excluding the view from others, talked incessantly during the playing of the orchestra, and the progress of the lever de rideau, the little French play. It was thoughtlessness, perhaps, but it was rudeness and lack of breeding, nevertheless, and such conduct, especially in an audience in which the "exclusive" set is conspicuous, must appear strange, and odd to foreigners in New York.

* * *

The Children's Bazaar took place yesterday at the home of Mrs. Charles B. Alexander. What remains now, with the exception of the weekly meetings of sewing classes, are the concert of the Women's String Orchestra at Mendelssohn Hall and the benefit for the Vassar Students' Aid Society at the Hudson Theatre. The former takes place on the 5th and the latter will be held to-morrow afternoon. There are a few charity affairs planned for the Easter and Spring season, when these can be held out of doors. There will be several garden parties and other diversions of a semi-rural, semi-urban character.

* * *

Society will not take any active interest in the racing until Belmont Park is opened the first week in May. Many, however, have gone to Washington, as Benning has attractions for society. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt will be in town for the opening of the coaching season April 16, but Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt will go on to Boston for the Horse Show, which is to open there on the same date. There will be during Easter week the show at Durland's, in which Alfred Vanderbilt and Robert Gerry take much interest. Asheville is to have a show at the end of April. Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt will remain at Biltmore for it, and will probably entertain some of their kinspeople who are to come to the Land of the Sky for these festivities.

* * *

The Meadow Brook colony has much to talk about. The hunt so far has not been brilliant, but when the Aiken crowd returns there will be a revival of interest. Mr. and Mrs. Rose are to entertain this Spring preparatory to their second Newport Summer. Mr. and Mrs. William F. Sheehan are to be at Roslyn. Mrs. Sheehan has been seen much at the Opera, and has been a great deal entertained this Winter. Among her friends are Mrs. McClellan and Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Jr. There is a rumor that Mrs. James L. Kernochan has broken off her engagement with the young Englishman who held a position with the Meadow Brook Club. There has been neither authorized denial nor admittance of this as yet. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ellis will be at Meadow Brook, and the Hitchcocks will open their house a little earlier this year. Mrs. Travers will entertain at her place near Westbury. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mortimer, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Gen. and Mrs. Lloyd Bryce will keep up the traditions of their respective localities.

* * *

Miss Gladys Deacon has been in New York for a few days. She was booked to sail with her aunt, Mrs. Baldwin, last week. During her short stay in this country she was at Aiken a great part of the time. Her sister, Miss Edith Deacon, will be at Newport again this Summer. She will probably be one of the bridesmaids at the wedding of Miss Anita Sands and Harold Minott, which will take place there in June or July. Another country wedding will be that of Miss Marie Montant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. August Montant, and J. Huntington Norton. The date will be early in June at Oyster Bay, where the Montants have a Summer place.

* * *

The opening of the trout fishing season will be another boom for Tuxedo. Of late years the best catches have been made in the different lakes and brooks and preserves in that locality. Down at the South Shore Club the usual meeting of trout fishers will take place to-day, and John G. Heckscher and other veterans who have never missed one of these openings will doubtless be present. Last week Tuxedo was occupied with tennis, and the triumph of young Gould was an interesting item. There is talk of some ballooning, with Comte de la Vaulx as demonstrator. This may be one of the surprises of the Eastertide. In town the clubs have taken a deep interest in the racquet championships, in which Clarence Mackay, Lawrence Waterbury, Willing Spencer of Philadelphia, and Charles E. Sands have been among the participants.

* * *

Mrs. George G. Frelinghuysen is to give a small dance on Easter Monday at Sherry's. This dance was to have taken place in the Winter, but was prevented by death. Miss Frelinghuysen will then make her deferred début. Mrs. Frelinghuysen was a Miss Ballantine of Newark. On April 23 there is to be danced an Easter cotillion under the patronage of Mrs. Thomas Hicks and others, and the last University cotillion of the season will take place on Easter Tuesday, April 17. This, with the Astor House crinoline ball and belated meetings of dancing classes, will make two weeks at least of a revived offering to Terpsichore before the plans for the Summer are finally made.

* * *

There will be two weddings this week in town. On Thursday Miss Ruth Simpkins Bacon, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Gorham Bacon, will be married at the Church of the New Jerusalem to Arthur Cheney. This will be followed by a small reception at the home of the parents of the bride. The names of the attendants have already been given. This event will take place in the afternoon, and in the evening Miss May Valentine Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert H. Johnson of Spuyten Duyvil, will be married to Wyatt Warner Taylor at the Marble Collegiate Church. There will be a reception following at the Waldorf-Astoria.

On Saturday Cornelius Bliss, Jr., who is to marry Miss Zaidee Cobb, daughter of Mrs. Edmund M. Cobb of Washington, will give his bachelor dinner at Delmonico's.

* * *

Mrs. Burton Harrison will be in New York this month. She will go to Sea Urchins this Summer, where her son, Francis Burton Harrison, will also pass a part of the season with his daughters, the Misses Barbara and Virginia Harrison. D. O. Mills, who has been on his annual visit to California, is to return this month, previous to the sailing of Mrs. Ogden Mills and her daughters.

* * *

At the wedding on April 26, in Washington, of Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., and Miss Zaidee Cobb, Miss Cobb's sister, Miss Elsie Cobb, will be maid of honor. Albert G. Milbank will be best man, and the ushers are Scott McLanahan, Hugh Auchincloss, Reginald Huidekoper of Washington, Murray Cobb, a brother of the bride; R. B. Borden of Fall River, a cousin of Mr. Bliss, and Tyler Field of Cincinnati.

* * *

An Easter wedding will be that of Miss Helen Macguire, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Macguire of West Fifty-eighth Street, to Charles William Earle of this city. The ceremony will take place at the home of the bride. The Rev. Father Murphy of St. Patrick's Cathedral will officiate. Joseph J. Forbes will be best man. Miss Macguire is a sister of Mrs. Munson Galaudet Shaw and of Mrs. Joseph J. Forbes.

* * *

Charles O'Donnell Lee, who will marry Miss Anna MacCauley in Washington on April 25, will have his cousin, Columbus O'Donnell Lee, as best man. Charles O'Donnell Lee is a brother of Joseph Lee, Minister to Ecuador, and son of Charles O'Donnell Lee of Needwood, Md. A Baltimore engagement also of great interest was mentioned in THE TIMES last Sunday. It is that of Miss Jean Hancy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Hancy of West Fifty-second Street, and William Keyser of Baltimore. Mr. Keyser is a cousin of the Garretts. His sister is Mrs. William Manly. Mrs. Keyser was a Miss Brent, a relative of the late Gen. Brent, who died in Baltimore last Autumn. Miss Hency made her début two years ago. The family have a country seat at Tuxedo. Miss Hency and her parents and Mr. Keyser are at present in Egypt.

* * *

Another late engagement comes by the way of Narragansett Pier. It is that of Miss Inez Sprague Wheaton, great-granddaughter of Salmon P. Chase, to S. Harold Winpenny of Philadelphia. The wedding will take place in the Summer at St. Peter's-by-the-Sea. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Aldrich have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Louise D. Aldrich, to William C. Meissner, formerly of the New York Cotton Exchange, but now residing in Dresden with his daughter.

* * *

Miss Isabel Thacher Gourlie, who is to be married on April 27 to Noel Lispenard Carpender, will have as maid of honor her sister, Miss Nathalie Gourlie. The other bridesmaids will be Miss Ethel Gourlie, another sister; Miss Eleanor Ames of Boston, Miss Sadie Barrett, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Barrett, and Miss Jennie Carpender, a sister of the bridegroom. Henry Carpender, a cousin of the bridegroom, will be best man, and the ushers Samuel Walsh, Herbert Riker, Thomas Adams, and Winthrop Sands.

* * *

Arthur Corlies will give his bachelor dinner on Friday at Delmonico's. He is to marry Miss Maud Robinson on Wednesday, April 18, in All Angels' Church. Among his guests he will have his best man, Hamilton Fish Benjamin, and his ushers, Richard L. Morris, J. R. Goetchius, C. Arthur Comstock, Henry Sampson, Jr., Craig Colgate, Reune Martin, David Stuart, E. Hubert Litchfield, and James T. Terry. At her wedding Miss Robinson will have her sister, Mrs. Joseph Dilette White, as matron of honor. There will be no bridesmaids.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Carter have been absent from America for quite a period. They are to return this Spring and to go to their country seat at Bryn Mawr. They have a place near Rugby, in England, where both Mr. and Mrs. Carter have become great favorites in the hunting set. Sir Bache Cunard, who has been visiting here for the first time in years, is returning to England. Mrs. Devereux Clapp will pass the Summer with her daughter, the Countess de Rougemont, and there seems to be no hope of seeing them at Newport. In fact, the outlook for that resort in point of notabilities seems slim. If Mrs. Ogden Goelet should return it will be minus the Duchess of Roxburghe, who does not care for America or Americans. The absence of Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, as well as that of Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., precludes all rumor of a visit from the Duchess of Marlborough. Some one has started a story that the Prince of Schleswig-Holstein will visit Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt. It is more probable that should such a visit take place Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt would be the hostess. It is not definitely stated which Prince of Schleswig-Holstein is in question, but it is presumed that it is Prince Albert, who is the son of Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the fifth child of the late Queen Victoria. Her youngest daughter, the Princess Aribert of Anhalt, paid a visit to New York some years ago. She suddenly appeared, sans trompettes et tambours, at the Waldorf-Astoria and remained about a week. The Christians, as this branch of the royal family is called, are quite democratic and fond of Americans. Prince Albert is unmarried, but comes within the scope of the Royal Marriage act, as did his little cousin, Prince Alexander of Battenberg, who was here last season. But the Christians are not even as well off as the Battenbergs, and the eldest daughter, Victoria, who was born in 1870, like her cousin Victoria of Wales, who is older by two years, still remains fancy free. The Christians, however, have been friends of Lady Cheylesmore and are very much more English than German, so that Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt might, after all, be the hostess in case the visit matures. Miss French, by the way, arrives to-day from Europe. She will go to Tuxedo.

A petition in court filed last week was the first intimation that many had of the separation of the Baron and Baroness von Graffenreid. The Baroness was Miss Gertrude Wells, daughter of Mrs. Van Courtlandt Wells. She married first Schuyler Hamilton, whom she divorced. He was a descendant of Alexander Hamilton and a brother of the ill-fated Robert Ray Hamilton. He has since married Miss Mercer of Baltimore, who died, and then a young widow of Richmond, Va. Mrs. Van Courtlandt Hamilton, his first wife, took her children and went abroad. She had the Moorings at Newport, which she sold to Mr. and Mrs. Clinch Smith. She married the Baron Von Graffenreid, whom she met in Paris. He is said to be of a noble family living in Germany, but the petition calls him a Swiss, and the nobility of that republic is not numerous. The Baron and Baroness were over here some two years ago.

This Tuesday will be the last of Miss Leary's informal receptions until after Lent. The Badminton Club met yesterday and will meet again next Saturday, but it does not hold a meeting during Holy Week. The Helpers' Sewing Class will have its last meeting this week. The meeting of last week was held at the home of Mrs. Stuart Pullman West, 51 East Fifty-eighth Street. There were vocal selections by Mrs. Lawrence D. Alexander and piano solos by Miss Nona Valleua, both members of the class. After the sewing was over, tea was poured and a number of men came in for the aftermath. Miss Calender and Miss de Forest still hold informal musical receptions every Sunday afternoon. These are only for a limited number of friends. They will go abroad shortly, according to their rule, sailing in April or May.

American residents in Paris are surprised to learn that after many years the magnificent hotel on the Avenue Bois de Boulogne so long occupied by the late Dr. Thomas Evans has found a tenant in former Mayor Van Wyck of this city, who was married last week and went to France to live. This house stands at the corner of two streets, is a splendid establishment with large drawing rooms, picture gallery, and ballroom—in fact, a small palace. Here the American dentist and his wife gave the celebrated entertainment to the late James G. Blaine in 1888. Otherwise their friends were few, and they lived in solitary state, while on reception days the stairs leading from the grand entrance to the drawing room floor were lined with two rows of powdered and liveried lackeys. To keep the house up needs an army of servants, and it will no doubt be the headquarters for the visiting politicians from New York. Since Dr. Evans's death it has been unrented, and it has long been a landmark in the drive out to the Bois.

The cable last week announced the death of the wife of the Chevalier Scovel, who was Miss Marcia Roosevelt, a cousin of the President. Miss Roosevelt was one of the great heiresses of her day in New York, and the Roosevelt residence at Thirteenth Street and Broadway was a show house in that vicinity. Mr. Scovel was the tenor in a church quartet. He had a pretty voice and an effective manner. The wedding was the talk of the town. It took place at St. Thomas's Church. Women battled to gain admittance, Fifth Avenue was blocked, and the police reserves could do nothing. In fact, it was just as famous in its way as the diamond wedding which preceded it, and the marriage of Collector Murphy's daughter to M. Rivra, performed by the Cardinal; the Tweed-Maginnis wedding at Trinity Chapel, the Craven-Martin nuptials, and those of the Duke of Marlborough and Miss Vanderbilt and the Duke of Roxburghe and Miss Goelet. Mr. and Mrs. Scovel went abroad to live. Mr. Scovel sang in opera on occasions and received a decoration from a small sovereign which enabled him to be called Chevalier. A few years ago Mrs. Scovel came to New York and brought a young daughter with her. She visited her relatives and was a guest at the White House. At one time it was stated that Miss Scovel was going on the operatic stage. She married abroad last year.

THE SOCIAL WHIRL.

MRS. LEWIS M. HORNTHAL, 25 West Ninety-sixth Street, was the hostess on Thursday of twelve ladies, whom she entertained with a luncheon. In the afternoon a number of friends stopped in for a game of bridge or six-hand euchre. The decorations throughout were in pink and white. The luncheon guests were Mrs. Arthur Elliot Fish, Mrs. Archell MacMichael, Mrs. G. Walker, Miss Avery, Mrs. E. Campbell, Mrs. Frank Blodgett, Mrs. Hugh Reed Lawford, Mrs. Cyrus B. Giles, Mrs. T. Avery, Mrs. Edward Davis Jones, and Mrs. George Cummings. Mr. and Mrs. Hornthal have recently returned from a trip to Palm Beach, and will sail in the early Spring for several months' stay in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. H. Amerman will leave their apartments in the Ansonia this week for a short visit to Atlantic City.

Mrs. Charles Austin Bates, 100 Riverside Drive, received informally on Tuesday afternoon.

Miss Constance Gates of Bryn Mawr is spending her Easter vacation with her aunt, Mrs. Clarence Burns, 254 West Fifty-eighth Street. Miss Gates has been the guest of honor at a number of luncheons and theatre parties since her arrival in the city.

On Wednesday evening Dr. and Mrs. E. Benjamin Ramsdell, 76 Convent Avenue, entertained the nine surgeons and their wives of the Fire Departments of New York and Brooklyn, Dr. Ramsdell himself being one of the department corps. A buffet supper was served. The decorations were red, white, and blue, with a miniature fire engine for a table centrepiece.

Mrs. Henry N. Whitney, 258 East Seventy-second Street, will receive on the four Tuesdays in April. The receptions will be for her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Whitney.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Monroe, 94 Riverside Drive, have recently returned from a trip through the South.

Mrs. Esther Herrman, 59 West Fifty-sixth Street, gave a reception and author's reading for the College Woman's Club, Miss Jennie Pomerene, President, on Thursday evening.

Mrs. Adelbert Clinton Bloss, 622 West 114th Street, has issued invitations for the marriage of her daughter, Miss Adele Harwood Bloss, to Frederick Delox Montfort of St. Paul, Minn. The wedding will take place in All Angels' Church on Wednesday, April 18, at 8 o'clock in the evening. The rector, Dr. Townsend, will be assisted by the Rev. Andrew F. Undergill of St. John's Church, Yonkers. She will be attended by six bridesmaids and a maid of honor: Miss Louise Nugent of New York, Miss Anna Mason Stearns of Boston, Miss Julie H. G. Humason, New Britain, Conn; Mrs. Hable Crouse Clock, Syracuse; Miss Ada Moore, this city; Miss Florence Carmody, Bronxville, and Miss Claire Holcombe Bloss. The best man will be H. G. Bloss of St. Paul. The ushers, Louis P. Clethane, Washington, D. C.; F. Wing, Buffalo; Charles E. Nichols, Chicago; Alexander Cathcart Maxfield, St. Paul; Walter Mayo, St. Paul; Robert K. Shape, New York; Arthur W. Wickwire, Brooklyn, and David P. Van Deventer, a cousin of the bride. After the ceremony there will be a reception in the Hotel Majestic for the relatives of the two families, and then the young couple will leave for a month's honeymoon. They will receive at 354 Summit Avenue, St. Paul, on Wednesdays, May 23 and June 6.

Capt. Charles E. Johnson of the Old Guard and Mrs. Johnson gave a dinner on Thursday evening to twenty-two friends in the Hotel Astor. Their guests were Gen. and Mrs. John S. Cutting, Capt. Belden J. Rogers, Capt. and Mrs. William H. Sealch, Capt. and Mrs. William B. Smith, Col. and Mrs. E. Fellows Jenkins, Adjt. and Mrs. R. Livingston Luckley, and Capt. and Mrs. William H. May, all of the Old Guard, and Miss Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Mannigan, Mr. and Mrs. H. Houghton, Mrs. Wright, and Mrs. Gompertz.

Mrs. Everett Jackson gave her final at home for the season on Tuesday in her apartments in the Orienta, 302 West Seventy-ninth Street.

From 4 until 7 on Wednesday the banquet room of the Ansonia was crowded with the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Albert Whittier. Mr. and Mrs. Whittier were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Charles E. Sprague, Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. Bruns, Miss Wetherbee, Mrs. Houghton, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Slade, and Miss Woodward. Mrs. Lyon De Camp presided at the punch bowl and Miss Bertha Sprague served coffee.

Miss Helen Ranney and Mrs. Richard Henry Reed of 2,465 Broadway will give their last at home for the season on Wednesday afternoon.

Miss Louise E. V. Nugent, daughter of Frank L. Nugent, Riverside Drive and Eighty-eighth Street, will be married to Ferris Falkner, Yale, 1901, on Monday, April 30. The ceremony will be read in the home of the bride, with only the relatives of the young people present, and will be followed by a reception at Sherry's from 4 until 7.

Mrs. Walter L. Hess gave her last at home for the season on Tuesday, in her apartments in the Porterfield, 612 West 112th Street.

Mrs. Lincoln Rea Peabody has just returned from a visit of two weeks in Lakewood to her home, 139 West Ninety-fifth Street.

Cards are out for a bridge and breakfast to be given in the Hotel Astor on Saturday, April 21. The hostesses will be Mrs. Archibald Turner, 166 West Eighty-sixth Street, and Mrs. Henry Aplington.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hamlin Mills, 250 West Ninety-fourth Street, will leave the later part of this week or the first of next for a trip to Washington. They will be gone some weeks.

The last of the series of Holland dances will take place on Wednesday, April 18, in the Waldorf. The patronesses are Mesdames Charles Morrill, Alfred Geery, Whitney Lyon, Anna R. Greene, Charles Lowell Stickney, Albert Chester Travis, William Charles Morrill, John Price Hollingshead, and Edwin Crosby Chamberlin. Miss Frances Cleveland Morrill, 334 West Eighty-seventh Street, is Secretary of the club, and Miss Mary Creasy Lawton, 259 West Seventy-first Street, the Treasurer.

Mrs. J. P. Miller of 229 West 101st Street gave two at homes last week, one on Wednesday, the second on Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. Henry Baldwin Fischer gave a large bridge party yesterday in her home, 63 West Fifty-ninth Street.

On Wednesday there was a drawing room meeting of Auxiliary No. 5 of the Stony Wold Sanitarium, in the residence of Mrs. Albert E. Harris of 328 West Seventy-sixth Street. Mrs. Jesse L. Eddy is Chairman of the auxiliary, and Mrs. Richard Henry Greene Vice Chairman. Others interested are Mrs. Charles E. Becker, Mrs. Gardner Wetherbee, and Miss Valerie Old.

Mrs. John H. Judge of 27 West Ninety-fourth Street has sent out cards for a luncheon on Thursday in the Italian room of the Hotel Algonquin, 59 West Forty-fourth Street.

One of the principal speakers at the reception of the Patriot Club on Friday evening will be Mrs. Philip Carpenter. The reception will be held in the Savoy.

There was a meeting of the West Side Clinic for Children, Dr. Adelaide Wallerstein President, on Thursday, in the home of one of the Brooklyn members, Mrs. Harry R. Scripture, 275 Park Place. There was music and a collation following the regular business of the session. On April 11 it is expected that a decision in regard to the charter will be arrived at by the State Board of Charity. There is considerable enthusiasm among the ladies, each one of whom has some suggestion or plan of her own for the promulgation of this charity. Mrs. Wallerstein has changed her day at home from Sunday to Monday for the benefit of the clinic members and their friends.

On Wednesday there was a musical and tea in the home of Mrs. Perry Sanborn Boynton and Miss Elizabeth Owen, 103 West Eighty-fourth Street. The hours were from 3 until 6.

On Saturday afternoon there will be a reception of the Chicago Woman's Club of New York City in Whittier Hall, Amsterdam Avenue and 120th Street, to meet the President of the City Federation of Clubs, Mrs. Belle de Rivera. The officers, Mrs. Caroline Brown, Miss Julia P. Leavens, Mrs. George J. Corey, Mrs. Thomas E. Lonergan, Mrs. George A. Reid, and Mrs. Melville Stone, will receive.

Miss Lillie d'Angelo Bergh was Chairman of entertainment for yesterday's meeting of the Woman's Press Club.

Mrs. Chester Ingersoll Richards, 118 Riverside Drive, will give her final at home for the season on Friday, April 14.

Mrs. John Currus, 62 West Eighty-ninth Street, will receive informally on Wednesday.

Mrs. H. B. Chamberlain, 425 West End Avenue, wife of the Vice President of the Erie Railroad, has been touring California and Mexico with a party for some weeks. She will return to her home shortly.

Miss Oldcastle's dramatic and musical evening's entertainment will take place on Tuesday in the Professional Woman's League Hall, 108 West Forty-fifth Street.

The engagement is announced of Miss Simony Friedberger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Friedberger, to Samuel J. Strauss. At home on Sunday, April 22, from 3 to 6 o'clock, at 127 West Eighty-eighth Street.

Mr. and Mrs. George Fink returned last week from the West Indies to their residence, 129 West Seventy-fifth Street. Mrs. Fink will give two informal at homes. The first will be held to-morrow afternoon, the date for the second is Monday, April 16.

Mrs. Edward C. Fox, who recently moved from her home in West Eighty-third Street to the Hotel Oxford, is spending some months in Europe.

On Wednesday, April 18, the last euchre and dance for the season of the Acadia Club will be held in the Ellersile Rooms, 80 West 126th Street. The patronesses are Mrs. Catherine J. Evans, Mrs. C. L. Fink, Mrs. Cary, Mrs. Winnifred Burke, Mrs. Augustus Lindo, Mrs. Andrew Kane, and Mrs. George Molleson. The President of the club is George P. Molleson, and the Vice President, Miss Alixe L. Evans.

Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Lambert, 137 West Seventy-fifth Street, sailed for Europe last week, to be gone until September.

Mr. and Mrs. John W. Lovell, 127 Riverside Drive, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Alice Lovell, to L. C. Kellogg of St. Paul.

Mrs. George W. Wallace, 54 West 120th Street, recently gave a Scotch luncheon to a number of friends. The table was banked with Scotch heather, and the menus were illumined with Scotch verses and tiny plaids.

Mr. and Mrs. William Townsend Colborn, 82 Riverside Drive, sailed for the West Indies a short time ago, to be absent several weeks.

THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

Manhattan Beautiful

Problems of Public Buildings and the Circulation of Crowds Suggested at the Municipal Art Society Exhibition.

EXHIBITIONS like that of the Municipal Art Society at the Arts Club encourage one to believe that the haphazard method of conducting large public works for the city is near its end. It is encouraging to know that there is a society which looks out for a saner expenditure of the city's outlay on streets and avenues, parks and squares, bridges and subways, and is ready to put up a fight for good architecture and a reasonable amount of beauty in civic buildings.

Since the New York Art Commission is a purely negative body, its motto being perforce "I am the Spirit that aye Denies"; since the commission has no warrant to suggest improvements or alterations, but must confine itself to yes or no, acceptance or rejection of what comes before it, the Municipal Art Society has a certain place to fill by taking the initiative. It can suggest ideas and agitate for them.

Without such a society we might never know how great a step the city departments, some of them, have taken in the direction of better service. Mr. Woodbury's department of street cleaning, for instance, offers a covered dock with the chimneys of a garbage-burning plant at the end which might be taken for a recreation pier. Roofs and chimneys are treated decoratively. The disposal of the city refuse, we see, can be done without offending the sight, and if properly managed it may bring a return to the city. The design for a stable for the carts and horses of this department in Manhattan is even handsomer.

Messrs. Hoppin, Koen & Huntington display a plan for the new Police Headquarters and add a model made to scale which greatly aids one in realizing what a building will look like when erected, since front elevations and ground plans are proverbially delusive. Mr. Washington Hull shows the accepted design for the new municipal building in Brooklyn. Other plans and perspectives deal with the congested or tenement house districts, and show how life can be made livable in unlovely surroundings. Grosvenor Atterbury's plans for the Phipps tenements indicate ample entrances and courtyards to secure a circulation of air, while the fire escapes are treated not like an ugly network of iron on the façade of a factory, but with grace.

* * *

The tenement section of the city is remembered again in a bird's-eye view by Messrs. Baer and Jacoby, representing a square with playground, a public gymnasium and public baths, in the heart of the district over by the East River. These and other designs and perspective views are witness that there is no insuperable difficulty in obtaining relief from the evils which have accumulated owing to ignorance in office and apathy among citizens, heavy immigration, and the massing of human beings unduly in a narrow space.

A forty-story office building planned for Liberty Street and Broadway brings sharply before us the problem of how to provide room for the circulation of crowds during business hours in Lower Manhattan. At certain times of the day there is not room enough in the narrow streets for pedestrians and carts. Pye-woman's Lane, out of which Nassau Street grew, hardly suffices for pedestrians alone, when the skyscrapers disgorge their thousands about 5 o'clock, and every one is hastening to ferry, bridge, subway, or trolley. Liberty, John, and Cortlandt Streets will be worse off than ever when the monster skyscraper is filled with tenants. This problem will have to be solved, and that quickly. Meantime Mr. C. R. Lamb's suggestion for Nassau Street, which is perhaps the most congested at present, has certain attractive elements, though it would probably be only a temporary relief. It consists of upper sidewalks, reached by stairs at the street corners. He also suggests a glass roof higher than the upper sidewalks, to prevent accumulation of snow on the roadway in Winter and form a protection from rain in Summer.

Broader streets where traffic and foot passengers are reaching a point of danger as well as discomfort may also, as suggested by one of the sketches in this exhibition, he obtained by recessing the lower stories of the houses and forming arcades like those very common in Italy, not unknown also in Paris, as well as in old towns like Chester and Danzig. This calls for interference with private rights and condemns the shops on such arcades to a serious loss of daylight. Some relief would be obtained by carrying new streets through the long blocks parallel with the present avenues, streets large enough for drays and cabs, but not to be invaded by trolleys. Such a street might be formed by the prolongation of Macdougal Street to Herald Square, or, say, Broadway about Thirtieth Street, the narrow blocks between Sixth Avenue and Broadway from Thirtieth to Thirty-second being cleared away to form an open square.

It is often said that the tunnels under and bridges over the North and East Rivers will solve these problems by throwing Long Island and New Jersey open to the expansion of Manhattan, but the crowds seem to increase rapidly for such slow relief. Meantime palliative measures are in order. Every energy should be used to get the city circulation in order before the festivals in 1909, planned to commemorate Henry Hudson's exploration of the North River.

CURRENT ART NEWS

EVERY now and then the question of the personal appearance of Jesus Christ comes up; it rises with such regularity that the wonder is no one has tried to point out a coincidence with the eleven-year cycle of sun spots. From the church historians of Asia Minor who wrote in Greek a few centuries after Christ, we learn of a statue of Jesus in a town then called Paneades, in Palestine, which was pulled down and dragged about the town and finally broken to pieces, when the Emperor Julian, disgusted by the tyranny and folly of the Christians, turned back to paganism and tried to reinstate a purified worship of Jupiter. The statue was said to have been erected in the time of Christ by a woman whom the Saviour had healed; but even if this were a mistake, it would be interesting to know what answer a sculptor of the third or fourth century made when asked to model a Christ. The monkish historian duly sets forth that Julian ordered a statue of himself to be erected in its place, "but fire from heaven was poured down upon it, the head and breast were broken, and it was transfixed to the ground with the face downward; it is still (A. D. 420) to be seen on the spot where it fell, blackened by the effects of the thunder."

The latest attempt to formulate the likeness of Christ proceeds from Cleveland, Ohio, where the American Arts Company has an office. According to a circular, this company has enlisted the imagination of ten American painters—not "the" ten, but another ten—to produce as many conceptions of Christ. Of these the only non-residents are Prof. Carl Marr of Munich, who is American by birth, and Messrs. George Hitchcock and Gari Melchers, who have adopted Holland as their home. The others are Messrs. John La Farge, Kenyon Cox, Will H. Low, Joseph Lauber, Frank V. du Mond, Charles C. Curran, and Frederick S. Lamb. "The Exhibition of American Arts Company" is the singular title of this businesslike venture.

The working museum of the art department in the Cooper Union has had important accessions this Winter, notably in textiles and old French painted silks. The largest single addition is in the line of ecclesiastical art, an altar piece painted by Ricci. St. Jerome supported by clouds occupies the centre of the canvas. Below is a monk in the brown Franciscan habit, who holds a rude cross of large size, made of thick trunks with the bark on. Above the saint is an angel, and in front to the right lies the lion which is the common badge of Jerome, a very kindly and unmoved lion of the Venetian sort, too well bred to protest against the ascension of his patron by unseemly proceedings. This large canvas is handsome in drawing, and as to color not without merit. It has the "grand style" of the masters of greater note and some fair painting of draperies.

* * *

Who is to follow Mr. Edward Robinson as Director of the Boston Museum of Art is not announced, but the chances are said to point to Mr. Richard Norton, son of Prof. Charles Eliot Norton of Cambridge, who is now at the head of the American School of Archaeology in Rome. Mr. Norton is capable and well prepared for such a position.

* * *

Muddling with art exhibitions is so ingrained in the Police Departments of autocracies that little affairs like the recent liberal movement in Russia pass without mending matters. On the stage "The Duel," by Kauprin has been prohibited, and even the annual exhibition of the chief painter-academy of St. Petersburg is afflicted with the censor of police, who rummages and snoops about, and ends by making the usual comical ass of himself through a total misunderstanding of the pictures. The painter Wladimirow, to his great surprise, has discovered that he is a dangerous fellow. One of his pictures is entitled "State of War," and represents a field piece, around which stand officers and soldiers. Another picture by him is called "Don't Go!" The wife of a man of the middle class clings to him and tries to prevent him from joining a mob of strikers or demonstrators. Thus does the censor break things in the house of his friends. Another picture is by Schlugleut; it shows an interior with policemen searching for traces of revolutionary or criminal conduct. Still another had to go because of the color. It is a funeral procession, the body in a coffin carried on the shoulders of men. The cortège is accompanied by a troop of Cossacks. Here the coffin has red linings, and the wreaths upon it big red ribbons. Instead of killing its neighbors at the exhibition with its brilliant blotches, it was itself killed for its red ribbons by the brilliant censor of the Police Department.

Some of the most thoughtful and delicately attuned landscapes in the current exhibition of the Ten American Painters at the Montross Gallery, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street, are by Willard L. Metcalf. This painter is less concerned with designing a pattern and offering a picture that makes an agreeable spot on the wall than with an attempt to disengage the subtler meaning of a landscape from the field of nature. The eastern wall of the little gallery is given up to the contributions of Mr. Metcalf. His recent one-man show at the Fishel-Adler-Schwartz galleries was noted recently in THE TIMES.

* * *

The Burlington Magazine for mid-March has a good photogravure of an Italian bronze statuette in the Sir William Bennett collection, a sixteenth century piece, with all the charm and not a little of the false proportions of the day. It appears to be a young nude David in the act of drawing a sword. Laurence Weaver writes of leaden statues in gardens, those gruesome objects of art which were in fashion during the eighteenth century. A. van de Put tells of a curious object decorated with enamel called the Esmail d'Arragon, owing to a shield on it with the arms of Blanche of Anjou, married to James II., King of Arragon (1295-1310.) There is a learned article on the architect of the Houses of Parliament, and a note on various etchings by Rembrandt and others which are thought to be portraits of his father, the Leyden millowner, Herman Geritze van Ryn.

* * *

Miss Carol Aus, a painter of miniatures not unknown in New York, has returned from a visit to the Western States with a number of portraits on a larger scale, which she will show presently at the Knoedler Galleries. Miss Aus was born in Christiania, Norway, and studied at Paris under Lefèbvre and Robert Tony-Fleury. The exhibition will open April 7.

Some remarkable modern Dutch canvases have appeared at the Kraushaar Galleries, Fifth Avenue, near Thirtieth Street, notably a large shorescape by Pieters, deep in perspective and full of the most splendid atmospheric quality. Two peasants are riding clumsy big white horses across the shoal tides toward a group of stranded fishing boats, surrounded by men and women. Sky and water are very beautifully alive with color and light, but the special charm is the effect of moisture in the air. A scene on a broad gracht in Amsterdam, by A. H. van Mastenbroek, is a singularly successful townscape. The shadows and dark passages in the ranks of buildings on either side of the canal are painted like a master. The sky is luminous. Centrally one sees great barges containing hay moved to the right bank, and men unloading. In the white glow among the gray clouds one sees pigeons sailing like Autumn leaves. This comparatively new Hollander seems to leap at one bound alongside of Jakob Maris; at least, this picture shows a master.

* * *

A remarkable exhibit of old painted fans opens this week at Bonaventure's, 6 West Thirty-third Street, opposite the Waldorf, fans painted in Vernis-Martin on ivory, fans of open-work mother-of-pearl, ivory fans carved in low relief, gilded and stained; silk fans delicately painted with scenes from Court life under the French Regency and Louis XIV., XV., and XVI. One has different paintings of classical subjects on both sides by L'Avreince. Another is painted by Angelica Kauffmann, showing Minerva bestowing a laurel wreath on an artist. The exhibition runs from April 2 to April 9.

* * *

Too late for his recent show at the Knoedler Galleries Mr. J. J. Shannon has finished a handsome likeness of Mrs. Samuel Untermyer. She is seated in an easy attitude, with the left hand resting on and hanging over the arm of her chair, the right elbow on the opposite arm, and looks straight from the canvas. The light falls from the right. On a table at one side stands an ancient goblet of curious workmanship, perhaps to indicate the lady's interest in art and her love of collecting. The picture has this painter's remarkable cleverness in rendering sumptuously and brilliantly the texture of stuffs, the colors of curtain and gown, the tones of embroidery, and the glint of jewels. It is reproduced in to-day's Pictorial Supplement.

What the Artists Are Doing

WILLIAM J. HAYES is one of several local artists who exhibit their paintings at the regular shows who have followed the example of Degas by representing the action and color of race horses on the track. He has in his studio at present a capital representation of a group of thoroughbreds lined up across the track and just "breaking" for a start. Although the canvas is a small one, it has none of the woodenness that is usually seen in pictures of this kind. Mr. Hays has lately turned his attention to painting the horses and apparatus of our Fire Department in action, and in addition to the large picture in the Society show he has recently finished two smaller canvases in the same vein, one a daytime impression and another a fire engine responding to an alarm at night. Dogs are another of this artist's hobbies, and he is at work on a "portrait" of a famous Airedale terrier.

* * *

N. Honti, whose large religious painting called "The Sixth Hour" is on exhibition in a Brooklyn store, has just begun a portrait of Joseph Caccavajo, one of the engineering staff of the subway. The figure is represented in half-length, with such accessories as pertain to the sitter's profession.

* * *

Leonard Ochtmann is to spend the Summer months at the art colony of Byrd Cliffe, Ulster County, where he is to be at the head of the Summer art class that has been established there for the past two years.

* * *

Mrs. Anne West Shaw Harrow sailed for London last Saturday, after an unusually successful season of work here, painting several miniatures, the commissions for which brought her to New York.

* * *

Miss Ellen G. Emmet is at work on portrait commissions in her studio in South Washington Square. She is painting a full-length standing figure of Mrs. Medill McCormick of Chicago, a half-length of James A. Garland and another of Edward King, and a seated figure of Mrs. Payne Whitney. Miss Emmet will probably show several of these and other portraits at an exhibition in the late Spring.

* * *

Alphonse Mucha is to have an exhibition of some of his paintings, particularly two mural paintings, in one of the local galleries this month.

* * *

In his studio in West Twenty-third Street W. V. Cahill has at present a water color that he intends sending to the forthcoming exhibition of the Water Color Society. It is a moonlight scene. Two surface dotted with floating ice, and in strong contrast one called "Rainy Day."

* * *

Miss Jean McLean has completed a full-length figure of a little girl in a brown coat who is "arranged," for the sake of a Whistlerian scheme of color, against a white curtain in a doorway, the woodwork of which is painted white. She is also working on a full-length seated portrait of her mother, which she hopes to complete before she sails for Spain to spend a year in Madrid.

* * *

Eli Harvey, the sculptor, has been invited to send two of his well-known works, "Prometheus Bound" and the "Maternal Caress," to the forthcoming annual exhibition of the Cincinnati Art Society. A group of photographs showing his work on the Lion House in the Bronx Zoological Park was recently invited to the exhibition of the Chicago Architectural Society.

* * *

John C. Johanssen is hard at work finishing two portrait commissions before he leaves town for his Summer's work with his outdoor painting class in Michigan. He is painting a full-length of the little son of M. L. Kreutzer and a half-length standing figure of Myron Whitney, the singer. Mr. Johanssen has recently completed a study of an evening effect in Washington Square and one of a view along the river front. Another distinguished figure subject that he has been working on lately is the seated figure of an old woman, one of the idlers of the Square, who wears an old purple frock and a faded brown shawl, the textures of the stuffs and the expression of resignation on the old withered face being beautifully expressed. After his work at the Summer class comes to an end Mr. Johanssen is going abroad for a year to Sweden, England, and Spain.

* * *

Another New York painter who has been asked to show some of his paintings in Chicago is Oscar H. von Gottschalk. He is to send to the Windy City a dozen of the canvases that were exhibited in the Salmagundi Club in the past season.

* * *

Paul Cornoyer spent an hour out in his favorite spot, Madison Square, on the day of the last miniature blizzard, and has begun to put his impression of the scene on canvas. He is to go abroad in May to spend five months in London and along the Thames. He proposes to make a series of studies of the buildings along the water front of the English metropolis with their inevitable effects of fog.

TALK OF THE STUDIOS

CHARLES ALBERT LOPEZ won in competition with many sculptors the commission for a bronze statue of the late President William McKinley, which is to be erected by popular subscription in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. The statue is of heroic dimensions and about nine feet in height. At the base will be a sub-pedestal with two figures, one of a nude boy, representing Youth, and the other the figure of a woman, typifying Columbia; she is instructing Youth. These figures are about completed and the sculptor is now engaged upon the figure of President McKinley, which he modelled in Paris. The work will occupy him for ten months and possibly a year. He has recently executed five portrait medallions in bronze, which now ornament a soldiers' monument erected by the State of Pennsylvania in Vicksburg National Military Park, Mississippi. The architectural feaures were modelled by Victor Pierret. The design adopted was contributed by Albert Randolph Ross, who was selected as the architect by a jury composed of Augustus Saint Gaudens, sculptor; Frank Miles Day, architect, and Harrison S. Morris, lately Director of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. Mr. Lopez came from Mexico, was a former student at the Art Students' League, and studied later at the Ecole des Beaux Arts, Paris, under Antoine Falguière. He is a member of the National Sculpture Society. His studio is in the Broadway Arcade.

Robert W. Van Boskerck's "Forest of Fontainebleau," shown at the exhibition of the National Academy, has been purchased by a local collector. Another picture from his brush—a river scene at Nemours, France—has recently been acquired by a collector of Springfield, Mass. A collection of some twenty canvases will open to-morrow at the Knoedler Galleries and continue for a fortnight. These paintings include scenes along the banks of the Loing, France; at Nemours, and bits of woodland in the Forest of Fontainebleau, where Mr. Van Boskerck spent last Autumn. Several are landscapes of the Valley of the Hackensack, Jersey; a sunset effect from Bogota, and "Drying Out the Sails on the River," are among them. New England will be represented by the "Saugatucket River," Wakefield, R. I., not far from Narragansett Pier, and a glimpse of the Berkshire Hills in early Autumn near Lenox, Mass. Mr. Van Boskerck is completing a new picture of the River Loing, a retreat much frequented by the artist during his last sojourn in France.

AN artist who is at once an Academician and a member of the Society of American Artists ought to know whereof he speaks; so it was with no little curiosity that Mr. George R. Barse, Jr., was approached and his opinion asked concerning a number of matters close to the hearts of our artist guild, more especially the painters.

Mr. Barse has gradually made for himself a position among the local artists in a branch of painting which is not the least difficult, that of ideal and symbolical figures. The Congressional Library has his work and in New York he has painted many ceilings. Dr. M. Allen Starr, George Sherman, President of the Colonial Trust Company; Mr. D. C. Blair, Mr. Thomas A. McIntyre have employed him to decorate their houses. After studying in Paris he went to Rome, where he stayed six years, marrying an Italian. He returned in 1894 and since then few exhibitions have lacked his pictures. Just now an exhibition of his smaller easel work is about to open in the Powell Gallery, Sixth Avenue, near Fifty-sixth Street. He works at Katonah, N. Y., where he has a farm of seventy acres, an old farm house for a dwelling, and a studio in a barn.

"What is the outlook for native art?" was the first poser given him.

"Of the best. I consider that France no longer holds the leadership in painting. It has already passed to America. And while I am not at all satisfied with the situation in New York, where we painters do not hold the position we ought to hold, I believe that our craftsmen are stronger in their individuality than those of any country across the Atlantic."

"What makes you think that France has fallen into the second place?"

"France has popularized painting by her big salons and art museums, but in doing so she has sacrificed her artists. When I was studying in Paris the men who were most talked and written about, the men who got the medals, were artists like Rochegrosse, who covered square yards of canvas with huge sensational affairs. They were makers of "machins" or big sensational cartoons which carried the unthinking off their feet. It was a very bad example for the art students. But I am glad to say that comparatively few Americans were influenced by them. They kept their individuality."

"That has hurt French art?"

"It has simply ruined it, so far as painting is concerned. That is why I say the leadership is now ours. I notice that for many years past the Americans who return from Paris are not labeled as the pupils of any particular master. They have been learning technical methods and keeping their own personal mode of expression.

"The time is coming," added Mr. Barse with a gesture of conviction, "when this epoch in which we are now living will be remembered as one remarkable for the good work produced. Much as I find to criticise in the methods of our annual exhibitions in New York, no one can examine the present show of the Society in West Fifty-seventh Street without being struck by the variety and individuality of the work."

* * *

"What are your objections as to method?"

"Partly the way in which exhibitions are got together in New York, largely the way in which they are hung."

"They fail to get the best?"

"Of course they do, because they do not search out the best and demand that it should be sent in, hors concours."

"Then you do think that some of the French methods of exhibiting are good?"

"Certainly I do. Our system or lack of system is most discouraging. In the first place the artist here has no recognized place and position; many people seem to regard him and his work as a joke. But even among the artists your past performances do not count. No matter how many honors you have taken your work has no privilege which the work of a beginner does not possess. Making a canvas hors concours and accepting it on the painter's record is a sign that art is respected. Here prizes count for nothing—that is a mistake. No record is kept, nobody takes care of one's reputation. Each year one stands in the same place; that is to say, in the ranks. If you cease to exhibit for a few years you are forgotten. In France, Italy, Germany, you get a tag, and it means something. They have a memory for you; they respect your past work, because they respect art."

"Yet our men are strong and the exhibitions good?"

"I hold that such exhibits as the Pennsylvania Academy makes and a show like that of the present Society, offer more virility and individuality than those abroad. Yet, after all, they are very far from what they ought to be."

"What fault do you find?"

"Well, look at them. I have served on endless juries of acceptance. How seldom do we get a 'picture,' and by that I mean a finished, rounded, complete thing that tells of a master!"

"You mean they are sketches, attempts, essays rather than masterpieces?"

"Tours de force—clever, sometimes amazing brushwork—but no full combination of composition, drawing, color, and subject. A Corot is usually handsome in itself without the magic of color. Turn it into black and white and see. The tendency nowadays is to leave everything to color, and if you subtract that—if, in the course of time, the delicate tones vanish—what is there left?"

* * *

"What turned you toward figure work and the symbolical figure?"

"I can only attribute it to a natural tendency that way—to temperament, or whatever you may call it. I think it shows in school. One boy makes a curve like this"—and the speaker drew a line—"while another draws the same curve like that. Now, why the difference? Each is after the same result, but it is different. I often fancy there is something in an artist's physique which starts him unconsciously in the direction he is destined to go. In other words, temperament has a physical root."

"So you think you were predestined to paint floating nymyhs and symbolical ladies in gossamer draperies?"

"Why not? To my mind the highest art is symbolism beautified.

"You don't care for symbolical figures which are ugly, then?"

"No, and I'm sure the public does not. Under religious art there have been Gorgons and Silenuses, devils and demons, but they were meant to frighten, not attract people."

"You speak of color without composition—do you refer to the plein air painters?"

"Well, they will do. How seldom do they have any structure, balance of mass, beauty of symmetry, and drawing in their pictures. If you take away an agreeable tone of color nothing is left of the picture. But I'm not saying that they do not often produce marvelous effects in landscape which I thoroughly enjoy. I cannot agree to their figure work."

"Take men like Brush and Thayer. They realize that composition, balance, the finest brushwork, ten different things are necessary to a picture that will live. Why do we always return to the old masters? Because they knew that their very best in every line was none too good; that even if they were masters in form and color, and masters of line, it was not enough."

* * *

"To what do you attribute the comparative scarcity of figure painters aside from portraitists?"

"A variety of reasons. There is more patronage of landscape than figures just now. Moreover, our houses do not offer good wall spaces for figures. But shall I tell you the chief reason? Because it takes so much more drudgery, so much more study and effort, preliminary sketches, and questions to settle concerning composition. Artists find it much harder work, and soon after leaving the schools they drop it."

"And what do you think of the merger between Academy and Society?"

Mr. Barse laughed.

"Are you looking for my answer as an Academician or as a member of the Society of American Artists. For I am both, and have to play Jekyll and Hyde. Well, if you want my frank opinion I think it amounts to six of one and a half dozen of the other, whether they merge or do not merge."

"You see no special advantage in it?"

"I have no objection; but it seems to me that the public will be just as indifferent to both combined as it was to each separate. There are just so many persons to help us live by purchasing our work. I do not see how the merger can increase their number."

"But if they have one big exhibition building—"

"It will be the worst thing possible if exhibitions are to be managed as heretofore. It is bad enough the way pictures are accepted; it is still worse the way they are hung."

"How would you have it?"

"I would have artists control the pictures so far as determining what should be accepted is concerned; but then they should quit."

"Quit?"

"Yes, give them over to laymen and let others place them. That's the way."

"Have we any organizations that do the trick as you think it should be done?"

"Yes. There's the Pennsylvania Academy. They look up the best pictures; don't care if they have been shown elsewhere or painted last year, and they take the hanging out of the hands of the artists.

"My idea of a successful exhibition," said Mr. Barse, as the visitor rose to go, "would be to have a dozen art patrons establish a properly lighted and appointed gallery, select some artists to pass on pictures offered, designate others to secure works from men of reputation which would not pass before the jury—and then get laymen to arrange the pictures and manage the show."

"Would you allow artists to come to the exhibition at all?"

"Well," said Mr. Barse with a grin, "I'd give a free ticket or two to such painters as exhibit. But to tell you the truth, artists were meant to produce pictures, not to stand about and 'knock' them. So the less of them at exhibitions the better."

A SINGULAR EPITAPH.

At Annapolis, N. S., and in the military cemetery attached to old Fort Anne is a tombstone with the following odd inscription:

> Here Lyeth the Body of > Margaret Winlett—Born The 6th day > of April, 1723, and Dyed the 28th > of February, 1722.

The singular part of the epitaph is that the child, according to the engraving on the headstone, died nearly a year before its birth.

SOFT COAL OWNERS ARE SURRENDERING

Mitchell Receives Rosy Reports from Several States.

HARD COAL MINERS FIRM

Will Stay Out Pending New Arrangement, It Is Declared—Mitchell Starts for New York Conference.

Special to The New York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 1. — President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers will arrive in New York at 5:30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. He left Indianapolis at 7 o'clock to-night in the sleeper Tuscarora on the Pennsylvania New York Limited. It was reported to-day that he would stop at Philadelphia to-morrow afternoon.

"No," he said, "I shall go through and be at the Ashland House in New York to-morrow evening to meet the anthracite sub-scale committeemen. We shall meet the anthracite operators on Tuesday morning."

"What do you expect to get for the anthracite miners?" he was asked. The question was only answered by his usual: "Well, I can't talk about that, at least before the meeting."

"What are conditions to-night?"

"Simply this," he replied. "Our contracts have expired in the bituminous field. The anthracite strike award has expired, and our men have no arrangements on which to work. They have quit. More than 500,000 are out. No breaks in the lines are reported.

"F.L. Robbins and the Western Pennsylvania independents will readopt the 1903 scale to-morrow by signing the contract. The Western Kentucky operators have signed. The Iowa operators have accepted our terms. Many independent operators in Indiana and Illinois have notified our district officers that they are ready to sign. The advance has been posted in the Irwin field in Western Pennsylvania and by the big Berwind-White Company in Central Pennsylvania. Fifty per cent. of the tonnage is ready to sign up.

"To-morrow is the miners' national holiday and all mines will be closed on Tuesday. The strike conditions will prevail over practically all of Ohio, Central Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kansas, Indian Territory, Texas, and in the anthracite fields. Mines in West Virginia will be operated for a few days pending the result of the district joint conference in Charleston."

It is learned that mines of many of the "anti-increase" independent operators in Western Pennsylvania will also remain closed.

Mitchell's attention was called to the fact that some of the anthracite companies had posted notices offering a three-years' continuance of the anthracite Strike Commission's award.

"Will the men work under that notice?" was asked.

"No," he replied. "We must have a new arrangement. The anthracite men have quit work and will not work until they have a basis on which to work."

President Mitchell evidently expects quick results in the anthracite conferences this time. He plans to be back in Indianapolis for the International Executive Board meeting a week from Tuesday.

Notwithstanding the fact that 500,000 miners laid down their mining tools last night, there seemed to be the usual tranquillity around the international union headquarters to-day. As usual, President Mitchell was at the office in the morning, and this afternoon held a conference with President John Nugent of the West Virginia miners, who came to this city last night to see him regarding the situation in that State. President Mitchell was also in conference by telephone with District Presidents all over the country.

The conference with Nugent was especially concerning the operation of the Sunday Creek mines in West Virginia. These are the mines of the Hocking Valley Railway Company, owned by J. P. Morgan and Ryan and controlled by J. H. Winder. At the Ohio mines of the company the men were instructed last evening to hand in their checks.

"This," ex-President W. H. Haskins of the Ohio miners said to-night, "was equivalent to discharge." After the conference with Nugent, President Mitchell said:

"No contracts will be made for the Winder mines in West Virginia until contracts also are made for the mines of the company in Ohio."

Mr. Winder was Chairman of the operators in the joint conference, and was elected by the "stand-pat" operators who deposed F. L. Robbins. His course is attracting special attention, inasmuch as he is considered to be the recognized leader of the operators who are opposed to granting an advance.

OPERATORS TO PAY ADVANCE.

Owners in Western Pennsylvania Making Terms with Miners.

PITTSBURG, April 1.—Dispatches from the soft coal fields to-night indicate almost a general announcement from the operators of Western Pennsylvania to pay the miners the advance of 5.55 per ton called for in the restoration of the scale of 1903. With notices posted at the majority of the mines announcing the granting of the scale the strike in the soft coal fields has lost the threatening aspect that has surrounded it since last January.

Despite these notices, it was announced from Johnstown that a thousand or more union miners would make a demonstration at the mines of the Berwind-White Coal Company, at Windber, to-morrow in an effort to get the non-union miners to come into the organization. The demonstration will consist of a parade, but no trouble is expected.

At Dubois, which is in District No. 2, all the men met to-day and voted to remain out, with the exception of pumpmen, engineers, and firemen, until after

ROCKEFELLER EXPECTED OUT.

His Golf Links Ready—Standard Oil Investigators Not Seeking Him.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 1.—John D Rockefeller's guards and the workmen employed about his house were supplied with watchmen's alarm whistles yesterday. Two blasts of the whistle give warning that an intruder, possibly a newspaper correspondent, has broken through some loophole in the woods and is approaching the house. At this signal all the watchmen at the gates are expected to leave their posts and hunt the interloper.

It is now three weeks since Mr. Rockefeller has ventured outdoors, and no word regarding the state of his health has come from the Rockefeller household in that time. He has been seen pacing back and forth in the sun corridor of his house by several persons who have eluded the guards and almost reached the house.

There are indications at the Rockefeller place that the retired head of the Standard Oil Company is about to emerge from his seclusion of the last four months. Workmen began yesterday to remove the top dressing from his private golf links, and the steam roller was sent over the course to smooth the breaks made by the frost. As golf is a passion with Mr. Rockefeller it is believed that he will be out on the links this week.

Henry Wollman of New York, who assisted Attorney General Hadley in the Missouri investigation of the Standard Oil Company, was in Lakewood to-day. He said at the Lakewood Hotel that his visit had nothing to do with Mr. Rockefeller.

"We are not seeking him," he said. "If Mr. Rockefeller were to come forward and offer to testify it would be just like gilding gold. We got everything we wanted. He isn't needed and isn't wanted by Mr. Hadley."

Mrs. Rockefeller attended the Baptist Church with her sister, Miss Spellman, to-day. Two employes of Harold McCormick tried to prevent a camera man from taking a snap-shot of Mrs. Rockefeller as she was leaving the church.

ZION REPUDIATES DOWIE.

Followers Unanimously Against Him—Wife and Son Join Them.

Special to The New York Times.

WAUKEGAN, Ill., April 1.—Zion City, without a dissenting voice, to-day repudiated John Alexander Dowie. Legal steps will be taken at once to oust him from all control of the municipality's affairs.

In a meeting in the Tabernacle, at which almost every one of the 5,000 Zion residents was present, action was taken after more than five hours of arraignment of the first apostle. Even his wife, Overseer Jane Dowie, and her son, Gladstone, joined the ranks of those opposing the founder of the faith.

The crisis in the affairs of the city was precipitated by a telegram sent by Dowie yesterday demanding that certain reform measures be abandoned. This telegram was the result of the efforts of Wilbur Glen Voliva, Deputy General of Overseer, to straighten out the affairs of the community. When a stroke of paralysis forced Dowie to leave his people and go to Mexico, he put Voliva in charge. Voliva is named in Dowie's will as his successor.

Dowie, who went to the Mexican town of Ocotlan, on Lake Chapala, after he was stricken, heard of the changes that were being made in the affairs of the city. He did not like what was being done and yesterday a long telegram was received from him.

In it he denounced Voliva for innovations introduced in the management of the city, demanded the removal of Deacon Granger and other officers of the Church for insubordination, and demanded the immediate acknowledgement of himself as supreme leader.

"Let there be no mistake," he said. "Zion is a theocracy, and will never be ruled by a coterie of petty players, who seem to think the first apostle is dead. I am very much alive."

When the nature of the telegram became known there was great indignation in Zion City. Consequently most of the residents gathered at the meeting house to-day, and it soon became evident that the founder of the city had precipitated a revolt that would not be stayed. All the speakers berated the leader and declared that the affairs of Zion City must be kept out of his hands if there was to be prosperity. When a vote was finally taken on the proposal to depose him from the leadership nobody dissented.

The overseers and their followers believe that Dowie's mind is unbalanced. The courts probably will be asked to appoint a conservator for his estate.

A PASTOR ASSAULTED.

Police Looking for an Italian Whose Wife Sings in the Choir.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., April 1.—The Rev. John Koppeki, pastor of St. Paul's German Lutheran Church of Byram Shore, was assaulted this evening within a hundred feet of the church, his scalp being laid open and his eye blackened. His assailant escaped, but it is expected that he will be caught to-night.

Constables Medley and Fulton are looking for Albert De Paul, a stone cutter, against whom they say they have evidence. De Paul is an Italian, and his wife is a German. She teaches in a parochial school of the German Church on Saturdays and on Sundays sings in the choir, and occasionally acts as organist.

Mr. Koppeki comes from New York whenever services are held. He has been pastor for six months. To-night as he was nearing the church a man ran up behind him and dealt him a blow on the head, felling him.

J. Henry Schmehl, in whose house De Paul and his wife reside, interfered, and a blow was aimed at him with a hammer or hatchet, but he escaped. The minister was picked up unconscious, and was taken into the church.

CARLIST LEADERS FLEEING.

Gunboat Cruising Off Barcelona to Prevent Landing of Arms.

BARCELONA, April 1.—The gunboat Pinzon is cruising off Barcelona in order to prevent arms and ammunition from reaching the Carlists. There have been numerous seizures of rifles at Monistrol, twenty-seven miles northwest of Barcelona.

The leaders of the agitation are fleeing across the frontier, in consequence of the activity of the authorities, who now consider that the movement has practically been stamped out.

NO MORE CROP FAILURES FOR AMERICANS---WILSON

Secretary Says That Scientific Farming Will Avert Them.

MAKING THE DESERTS YIELD

Farmers Studying Conditions with Care—Acreage Yield to be Doubled in Ten Years.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—There will be no more crop failures, confidently declares Secretary of Agriculture Wilson. Farming has become scientific, and Americans will not fear starvation, he said to-day.

The Secretary is anticipating only normal conditions, such as the weather experiences year after year, and does not say that some great calamity in the form of floods or a wide area of freezing weather in July may not descend upon the earth out of some remote corner of the heavens. Reasonable conditions, such as early and late frosts, drought, and prolonged rainy seasons, torrid heat and lack of sunshine, grasshoppers, rust, and other pests and diseases the Secretary believes cannot overcome the farmers.

"There have been material improvements in agriculture during the present decade," said Secretary Wilson. "Important improvements have been made in agricultural machinery, which are of great advantage to the farmers. The Department of Agriculture has by experiments demonstrated what it is possible to do in preparing for climatic fluctuations in heat and moisture, and has made a study of the soils of incalculable benefit to the tillers.

"It is not only possible, but it is practical and is the general rule nowadays, for the farmer to study the soil he has to work, and intelligently select the crops best adapted. The days of old, when the farmers would year after year plant the same crops to gather a fairly remunerative harvest when conditions were exceptionally good and to experience failures under adverse conditions have gone, never to return.

"The farmers now make it their business to know what their lands will do, and they utilize them to the best possible advantage. In 1910 the production per acre will be twice as great as it was in 1900. This increase will be due entirely to the advance which the farmers are making in the direction of selection and methods. The accomplishment of the department in its work among the farmers in bringing about this result is of sufficient importance to warrant all the appropriations that have been made during the last six years for maintenance.

"But the work of the department has not stopped with increased acreage production. Agents have been at work all over the world searching for crops best adapted to conditions existing in various sections of our wide expanse of territory. They have brought us crops which blossom in the deserts, and now in the arid tracts in parts of the West crops are being produced where it was thought only rattlesnakes and lizards could thrive. Irrigation is doing much to make waste lands fertile, but any experienced farmer, given an abundant water supply, which he can control, can produce good results. What the Agricultural Department is attempting is to overcome the natural conditions, and I think much has already been done in this line. More will be done.

"When I say there will be no more crop failures I do not mean that every seed each farmer plants will thrive and produce. We may, however, safely count upon sufficient crops to supply our own needs, and leave a surplus for export.

"A flood may visit some valley, and acres of growing crops may be washed away. Grasshoppers may and probably will again appear in Kansas. Hot winds will blow, but we will not hear so much of the grasshoppers and the hot winds in the future. The grasshoppers will find so much to eat that they will not be noticed, and the hot winds will find so much fresh and green to blow against that they will be checked and cooled.

"The farmers nowadays go about their work with cool deliberation and knowledge of what they can acomplish. They select the seeds of the crops which they know will produce the best results upon the soil to be cultivated. Certain varieties of corn or wheat, for instance, require more heat and moisture than others. Where the growing seasons are usually dry and hot the farmer will not plant the corn which the farmer where more moisture is to be expected would use.

"Farming is fast being reduced to a science if it may not be said that it has reached that stage already. Scientific methods now prevail. Deep plowing, soil investigation, seed selection, improved machinery, all combine to assure the farmers at harvest time of a fair reward for their toil and outlay. There may and probably will be poor crops in certain counties, and I will not say that the crops this year will be as large as last year, but I repeat we will not have what can be called crop failures."

SENATOR ALGER ILL.

But Is Now Better in Atlantic City—Smiles at Detroit Fears.

DETROIT, April 1.—A report is being circulated here that United States Senator Russell A. Alger is seriously ill at a hotel in Atlantic City, N. J., and that his two sons have been summoned to his bedside.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 1.—Senator Alger smiled to-night at his hotel when told that his home city was exercised over a report that he was very ill here and that his two sons, Russell, Jr., and Frederick had been summoned to his bedside.

"I haven't felt better for a long time," said the Senator. "My daughter, Mrs. Sheldon, happened to be here, and I ran down to see her and rest up for a few days, and as the boys were available we invited them here for a sort of reunion."

Senator Alger was quite ill for a day after his arival here, and his Washington physician came to attend him. His health has greatly improved, and the whole party will return to Washington to-morrow.

LEAP OFF BURNING CAR.

Broadway Crowd Sees Women Jump—Engines Put the Flames Out.

A Columbus Avenue car, south-bound on Broadway, took fire at Twenty-ninth Street yesterday afternoon just after 4 o'clock as a result of a short circuit. As a sheet of flame burst from under the car a score or more of women passengers jumped from the side of the car, which was one of the newest of the line and of the open type.

The fire engines responded to an alarm sent in, and extinguished the fire with a loss of probably $300.

The car had passed the Gilsey House going south, and stopped on the south crossing at Twenty-ninth Street, in front of the Hotel Breslin, when a flash of light came out. An instant later a cloud of smoke blew out from beneath the car, and a sheet of flame burst from under the sides of the car and between the seats on the floor.

The cross seats of the open car were crowded. With the first rush of smoke and flames those nearest the west side of the car dropped or fell to the pavement and scampered to the sidewalk.

Women screamed and rushed toward the open side of the car. Some jumped into men's arms, while others took chances on landing on their feet on the asphalt pavement. In a remarkably short time the car was empty.

A few seconds later the floor in the middle of the car was burning merrily. The unusually large crowd on Broadway at the time became interested in the spectacle of the burning car, and a policeman sent in an alarm of fire.

Capt. Hodgins sent half a dozen reserve policemen from the station house to handle the crowd. So far as the police could learn the women passengers escaped without even a sprained ankle. Traffic on the southbound track in Broadway was delayed half an hour, and cars stopped in line as far north as Times Square.

MOB RESCUES A PRISONER.

Sets Free a Boy Arrested for Annoying Dominican Sisters.

The sisters of the Dominican convent at 120 Ridge Street have been molested lately in their weekly journeys to the Mother House in Brooklyn by a crowd of boys who pelted them as they passed through the streets. They appealed to Capt. Cooney of the Union Market Police Station for protection, and he assigned Patrolmen Ward and Baxter to accompany them to and from the bridge.

Last Saturday the sisters were returning to the convent escorted by the patrolmen, and had all but reached the doors when the same crowd of boys that had annoyed them before appeared. One of the boys threw an orange which hit a sister. Baxter collared the offender, and with Ward started to take him to the station.

The news of the boy's capture spread fast through the district, and several hundred men and women gathered about the policemen, deriding them and cursing them in Yiddish. The crowd made a rush and freed the prisoner. Both policemen then drew their revolvers and kept the rioters back. Jacob Gainsburg struck Ward in the face and was arrested. He was fined $5 in the Essex Market Court yesterday morning.

SPRING IN HOTEL BASEMENT.

Geological Speculators Think the Belmont Is Getting Catskill Water.

Gushing from the rock in the fifth basement of the new twenty-eight story Hotel Belmont, at Forty-second Street and Park Avenue, is a spring with a daily flow of 10,000 gallons. The spring was discovered seventy-five feet below the street level, after every inch of the way to it was blasted. To-day it is flowing at the rate of more than 400 gallons per hour into a cistern hewn in the floor of the fifth basement. Large pumps are now emptying this cistern every fifteen minutes into waste pipes, but if the water proves pure it will be utilized in the hotel.

Several persons who have seen the spring, and who profess to know something about geology, have advanced the theory that it has its source in the Catskills.

"At first blush, laymen may deem it a rash statement to say that the spring has its origin in the Catskills," observed one interested person. "But it's an accepted fact that certain springs in the Mississippi Valley have their sources a thousand miles away in the Rockies, and right out on Long Island I know of springs being traced to the hills of Connecticut by analysis of the water."

GOLD PIECES TO IMMIGRANTS.

John D. Crimmins Distributes $300 at Ellis Island.

John D. Crimmins, who was at Ellis Island yesterday, gave away $300 in gold to a number of the new arrivals. Dora Lapiventz, a little Polish girl, is $10 richer as a result of Mr. Crimmins's visit.

As Mr. Crimmins and Commissioner Watchorn were passing through the railroad room they saw the little girl struggling along under a bundle that was twice her size. Mr. Crimmins took the bundle from the child, and carried it as far as the boat. There he took the little girl in his arms, kissed her, and gave her the $10 gold piece.

In the main inspection room a large number of women were waiting their turn to be examined, and all carried large bundles. Many of them came in for a share of the gold pieces that Mr. Crimmins carried.

He also made presents to a number of young Irishmen, who told him of their hopes and ambitions in the new country.

STOLE FEATHERS OFF BIRDS.

Arkansas Robbers Visit an Ostrich Farm and Get Plumes Worth $1,000.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., April 1.—Not content with cracking safes and robbing homes in and about Hot Springs, a gang of thieves that has recently been very active in this vicinity went to Hot Springs ostrich farm and stole fine plumes valued at more than $1,000.

The robbery was reported to-day by Manager Thomas Cockburn of the farm, who said that some of the plumes were plucked from the birds, though the finer feathers, five of which were worth $50 each, were taken from the storage room next the manager's residence. The manager expressed great surprise that some of the robbers were not badly injured when they ventured among the birds, who are by no means gentle.

TILLMAN WILL OPPOSE ROOSEVELT AMENDMENT

Thinks Few Democrats Like Plan for Court Review of Rates.

REPUBLICANS NOT SATISFIED

Some of the Lawyers Say the White House Proposition Would Be Unconstitutional.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Senator Tillman, who has charge of the Railway Rate bill in the Senate, said to-night that he was not satisfied with the court review amendment to the measure which was agreed on yesterday at a conference between President Roosevelt, several Republican Senators who are supporting the Hepburn bill, and members of the Inter-State Commerce Commission. The Senator said he would oppose it on the floor of the Senate, and he expressed the opinion that not half a dozen of his Democratic colleagues would support the amendment.

Senator Tillman declares the amendment does not meet the situation fully, inasmuch as it makes no provision that there shall be no suspension of the railway rate fixed by the Inter-State Commerce Commission pending litigation.

This is a contention which Senator Tillman and other Democratic Senators have urged, as they argue that a failure to provide absolutely against a suspension of the rate operates to nullify the objects for which the legislation is desired.

The Senator added that he would prefer to vote for the House bill as it stood than to accept the amendment, for the pending measure gives the right of review where constitutional questions are involved.

The President's amendment has been the subject of general discussion among Senators to-day.

The straight-out Hepburn bill Senators do not like it, despite the verdict at the White House conference. The Democrats say it is a clear case of flunk for the President, and they will try to align themselves on the Bailey amendment. The Texas Senator will be in the Senate to-morrow and take up the struggle with vigor.

The lawyer Senators on the Republican side are not in love with the White House amendment. They say it is not constitutional and will attack it. The main criticism is that any limitation placed on the judicial power of the courts is as objectionable in this amendment as in the bill itself. It is urged that the amendment does not permit the courts to review the just and reasonable character of the proposed rate, but only permits a review on the ground of confiscation.

A poll of the Senate by the friends of the Hepburn bill, as given to-day by one of their leaders, seems to show thirty-seven Republican Senators for the White House amendment. Only twenty-nine are counted upon, however, by the managers of this proposition. Their list leaves out Knox, Spooner, Foraker, Dick, Elkins, and Scott, and three others whose names could not be learned. The New England Senators, with the single exception of Lodge, are being counted unalterably against the amendment.

Senator Long of Kansas will to-morrow introduce the White House amendment and it will at once be debated, Long beginning with an explanation and defense of it.

It is not likely that the propositions advanced by Senators Spooner and Knox, to provide a plan by which the railroads may deposit bonds or cash to cover the difference between an old and a new rate pending litigation, will come into the open just yet. Unless the debate should take a sharp turn during the week, and it should appear that there can be no hope for substantial results from any of the amendments so far introduced, the bond or cash plan may be held back for a fortnight or more.

Senator Spooner had a conference with President Roosevelt at the White House to-day, presumably on rates.

ANOTHER RENT STRIKE.

There's Talk of a Big Anti-Landlord Association, Too.

Many red flags and a few American flags were on the big six-story tenement at 367-69 East Tenth Street yesterday afternoon. Big rudely-painted signs said that "A Rent Strike Is on Here," and that "This House Is Boycotted." Last night Chinese lanterns were swung from all the fire escapes to draw attention to the house. A mob of nearly a thousand men, women, and children gathered in front of the house at dusk and hooted at the landlord.

The trouble was caused by the raising of the rents; the tenants say it was from $1 to $2 for every apartment. Then dispossess notices were served on the tenants, and this morning every member of the thirty-six families will march to the Municipal Court in Clinton Street to contest the matter. They have employed counsel.

Yesterday afternoon members of the thirty-six families held an indignation meeting in the rooms of Rosie Kentfer. Hot speeches were delivered, and into them entered many times the name of the landlord and the words "tyrant," "liberty," plutocrat," and others.

Last night emissaries were going about through the lower east side warning tenants to be ready to fight their landlords, who, it was confidently reported, expect a general raising of the rents on May 1. There was vague talk of forming a Protective Tenants' Association, which should gather money to fight the landlords whenever they want to raise rents.

DENOUNCE EXCISE ACTION.

15,000 Schenectady Church Members Attack Assembly Committee.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., April 1.—Fifteen thousand church members in this city today signed resolutions expressing indignation at the action of the Assembly Excise Committee in killing the Tully-Wainwright Local Option bill. They represent every denomination in the city, and include the congregation of the Jewish temple. The action was taken at the request of the Anti-Saloon League.

The resolutions will be presented to Assemblyman Wemple of this city with the request that he bring the matter up in the Assembly.

The consent of a member of the Assembly has already been obtained to move for the discharge of the Excise Committee and again to bring up the bill. This will be done to-morrow or Tuesday.

PASTOR'S HOUSE FIRED.

The Rev. H. L. Jones of Chattanooga Had Denounced Lynchers.

Special to The New York Times.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 1.—At an early hour this morning incendiaries tried to burn the residence of the Rev. Howard L. Jones, pastor of the First Baptist Church, who in a sermon last Sunday denounced lynchers of Johnson in the strongest language at his command.

Since the sermon was delivered, Dr. Jones has been receiving anonymous letters almost every day telling him that something would happen to him.

HAVANA, April 1.—Mrs. Roosevelt, accompanied by her children, Ethel, Archie, and Quentin, arrived here to-day on board the Mayflower.

DAVID B. HILL RETURNING.

His Health Has Improved Greatly Since He Went South.

David B. Hill, who went to Camden, S. C., early in the Winter because his health was very poor, will return from the South in a few days.

Friends of Mr. Hill who have seen him recently say that his health has improved greatly in the last few months. When he went South his condition was such as to worry his friends a good deal.

SAID "HERE" WHILE DYING.

Governors Island Private Fatally Hurt Going to Roll Call.

Private Michael Tierney of Company C of the Fifth Regular Infantry, the garrisoning regiment on Governors Island, was running to the barracks on the island late Saturday night, to answer to his name at the 11 o'clock roll call, when he ran into a rock post just outside the barracks and received injuries of which he died half an hour later. Tierney was one of the best liked and one of the most conscientious men in the command.

After he ran into the post Tierney continued on his way to the barracks, and, despite his injuries, was able to take his place in the line and answer to his name. Half an hour after he retired he was dead. An autopsy showed that he had ruptured his liver.

The young soldier will be buried with military honors to-morrow afternoon.

STORM A STAGE ENTRANCE.

A Hundred Young Men Assault Actresses' Escorts in Cleveland.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, April 1.—A hundred young men stormed the stage entrance to the Opera House last night, slugged the stage hands, defied the police, and pummeled the actresses' escorts.

A number of men congregated at the stage door on Friday night and were driven away after they had insulted several of the women with the show. Last night, reinforced by scores of friends, they gathered on Sheriff Street toward the close of the performance of "Woodland," and made a rush the minute the first girl emerged. The stage hands, armed with clubs and other stage property, then issued forth, only to be beaten back. Three patrolmen were jostled about when they escorted the chorus girls to Euclid Avenue, and escorts of the girls were badly bruised.

Police reinforcements later arrived and dispersed the crowd.

DOCTOR'S TERRIBLE DEATH.

Suffocating, Tried Vainly to Direct Efforts of Fellow-Physicians.

Special to The New York Times.

DERBY, Conn., April 1.—Blood poisoning, contracted through a scratch received while operating on a patient, to-day killed Dr. Roscius Y. Downs, a prominent Ansonia physician, who was 48 years old.

The poison gathered in one lung, and caused an agonizing death by suffocation. Drs. Cooper and Parmlee, local practitioners, and Drs. Bacon and Russell of New Haven, were called, and Dr. Downes endeavored to direct their treatment, striving desperately but vainly to speak.

PITTSBURG OPERA SLUMP.

Receipts of Only $50,000 for the Eight Performances.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 1.—The engagement in this city of the Metropolitan Opera Company, which closed at the Nixon Theatre last night was not the success that had been expected. There were eight performances and it was believed that the total receipts would reach $80,000. When the count was made the receipts were a little less than $50,000.

Last season four performances were given and the receipts were $40,000.

KILLED AT OPEN CROSSING.

Driver of Milk Wagon Found Neither Gate Nor Gateman.

Harry W. Coe, a milk wagon driver of 1,558 Third Avenue, lost his life by attempting to cross the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad tracks at 141st Street and Southern Boulevard early yesterday morning. The accident, the police say, was due to the fact that the railroad is moving its tracks further westward, and that the workmen had taken away the gate protecting the crossing.

Coe's wagon was half way across the track, when the engine of a freight train, going about twenty miles an hour, struck it, smashing the wagon, killing the horse, and throwing Coe about forty feet away. He was dead when picked up.

Thomas Day, whose duty, it is said, was to be on hand to warn drivers and foot passengers of on-coming trains, and Engineer Ralph H. Edwards, were arrested, but were paroled by Coroner Schwannecke.

Coe had been in the employ of the Borden Milk Company about two months. He leaves a widow and family at Newton, N. J.

INDIAN RECORDS STOLEN.

Dawes Commission Robbed and Rolls Hawked About the Country.

MUSKEGEE, I. T., April 1.—It became known here to-day that the Dawes Commission has been robbed of some of its records and valuable information.

Indian rolls which are not supposed to be public property are being sold over the country for whatever price can be obtained for them, ranging from $50 to $450.

AUTO LEFT SISTERS TO DIE IN THE STREET

Mrs. Stein of St. Louis Killed; Mrs. Kuchler Mortally Hurt.

NEW ROCHELLE IS AROUSED

Ministers Denounce Autoists—Two Sisters, Together for Birthday, Run Down on Way from Church.

A red automobile knocked down Mrs. Alvina Stein of St. Louis and her sister, Mrs. George J. Kuchler of Sycamore Park, at New Rochelle yesterday. One of the men in the machine leaped out and turned over the victims. He saw they were badly injured, and without attempting to assist them rushed back to his seat. The chauffeur put on speed and the automobile disappeared before any one could stop it. Mrs. Stein died at 9:30 o'clock last night, and at a late hour Mrs. Kuchler was not expected to survive the night.

Mrs. Kuchler was just 73. Her sister, Mrs Stein, had come East to spend her birthday with her. They went to church yesterday morning and were quietly walking home together along West Main Street. Mrs. Kuchler's house stands just beyond the New Haven Railroad bridge over Main Street, and it was under this that the accident happened.

A large touring automobile had passed through the town and had preserved a respectable rate of speed in defiance of the police. As it reached the western end it put on more speed. Miss Sadie Scott was walking a little behind the two women, and heard the tooting of a horn. She stepped to one side and let the machine go past.

Mrs. Stein and Mrs. Kuchler were not so fortunate. Apparently they did not hear the signal, and went quietly on. They were struck from behind and hurled with great force against the stone abutments of the bridge.

The chauffeur was able to bring the machine to a stop within twenty feet. He swung it around and a man who was on the front seat jumped off. He rushed up to the prostrate women, turned one over on her side, cast a hurried glance in the face of the other, and dashed back.

He made not the slightest effort to give them help, though he evidently realised how serious the matter was. Three women were in the back seat of the automobile. They took pains to prevent recognition by covering their faces with handkerchiefs and veils. As soon as the man had regained his seat the car turned back and made off at full speed toward the centre of New Rochelle. Its number was, however, taken down by Miss Scott.

The autoists, in rushing away, knocked over a dairy wagon near the bridge. They didn't even slow up to see how the driver fared. He was not hurt, however.

Mr. Kuchler was quickly summoned, and he and others ran to the help of the two women. They were taken to the hospital, where it was found that Mrs. Stein had had her left arm crushed, and that Mrs. Kuchler had sustained a fracture of the skull and internal injuries. Mrs. Stein never recovered consciousness. Her sister had not at a late hour last night.

The police refused to give out the number of the machine as reported by Miss Scott. No automobile answering her description went east after the accident, and unless it turned off from the centre of the town and made its way back to New York by White Plains, the police fear she has made a mistake.

Mrs. Kuchler is the mother of Alderman Karl Kuchler, Police Commissioner Henry Kuchler, and George W. Kuchler, all of New Rochelle.

Great indignation prevailed at New Rochelle last night, and references were made to the accident by several ministers. They spoke of the desecration of the Sabbath by automobilists and declared it was intolerable that people walking home from church could not use the public highway in reasonable safety.

For some time past automobile speeding has been a serious nuisance in New Rochelle. Three weeks ago the City Engineer laid out courses on East Main Street and Pelham Road, with the result that there were three arrests last Sunday and ten yesterday. Judge Van Auken let those arrested last week off with almost nominal fines, but yesterday he fined seven of the men arrested an average of $30 each, and held the other three in bail for examination. Among those fined was Arthur Hammerstein of 60 West Seventy-eighth Street.

TWO THROWN FROM AUTO.

Assistant Prosecutor Shaw and His Wife Injured at Montclair.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., April 1.—Assistant Prosecutor Ralph Shaw and his wife were severely injured here to-day. They had driven from their home at Little Falls in a motor car. Their three children were with them.

On Valley Road their machine ran into another which was standing beside the road. Both Mr. and Mrs. Shaw were thrown out. Mr. Shaw's arm was fractured and his wife had two ribs broken. She was also bruised about the body. The children escaped with bruises.

MOTOR CAR KILLS A CHILD.

Son of Assistant Treasurer Cullman of Metropolitan Opera Run Down.

Six-year-old Frederick Cullman, the son of William Cullman, assistant treasurer of the Metropolitan Opera House, was struck and killed by a motor car in front of his home, 48 West Sixty-fifth Street, late yesterday afternoon. Mr. Cullman saw the accident from a window.

The little boy was playing in the street when the car, driven by Harry D. Graff, a chauffeur, of 11 West Sixty-fifth Street, came along slowly. The child ran in front of it. Graff tried to avoid hitting him, but one of the lamps struck the boy, seemingly on the head.

He dropped to the pavement, but at once got on his feet again and started for the door of his home. He had crossed but half the distance of the sidewalk when he fell again.

Dr. William P. Byrne of 23 West Sixty-fifth Street, George Swatland of 439 Manhattan Avenue, and William H. Murphy of 36 West Sixty-fifth Street, were in the motor car. Dr. Byrne leaped from the machine, picked up the child in his arms, and ran up the steps of the Cullman residence with him. Mr. Cullman met him half way, while the mother waited inside the door. Dr. Byrne carried the boy to a couch and laid him down. He was startled to find that the child was dead. There was no bruise or other evidence of injury.

Graff was arrested, although Mr. and Mrs. Cullman declared that he was not to blame.

4 YALE MEN ARRESTED FOR MIDNIGHT FIGHT

Policemen Assaulted and Undergraduates Badly Hurt.

WOMEN SEVERELY JOSTLED

Early Morning Row in Streets the Fiercest in Years—Most of the Principals Escape.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, April 1.—A street fight among Yale students and town boys, the fiercest in New Haven for years, occurred shortly after midnight at Church and Court Streets, less than 100 feet from Police Headquarters. Four arrests were made, after the police had used their clubs freely and had dispersed a crowd of 500 persons. Just how the row started and whether it was a town and gown riot or at first only a fight between student factions cannot be definitely learned.

As a result of the battle four Yale students were arrested. All are badly battered. The names given by the men and their addresses were as follows: William F. Rogers, 20 years old, of 86 Wall Street; William L. Smith, 20 years old, of 387 Temple Street; Thomas Jenkins, 19 years old, of 411 Temple Street, and John L. Browning, 19 years old, of 118 College Street.

After the fight started several women and girls who were going home from the Hebrew Charity Fair in Music Hall were caught in the crowd and jostled severely. Police came running from all directions. Detectives Ward and Dunlap rushed out from headquarters, but the crowd which surrounded the battling students was fast increasing, and it was with difficulty that they made their way through it.

Then the fighters turned on the police and struck at them, hitting both Ward and Dunlap and smashing Ward's hat. Soon Sergeant Gibson with a squad of bluecoats arrived, and after that the police had the crowd on the run. Sergeant Gibson got a blow in the neck that roused his fighting blood, and the clubs swung freely. One student was so badly done up that he lay motionless on the pavement with both eyes closed and swollen. He was taken to the lockup, followed by a mob which completely blocked the corridors of the station house.

Sergt. Gibson went out again with his squad and drove the crowd down Court Street into the green, where the students gathered in groups.

One group of students started to break in the front door of the Tontine, until the proprietor, Mr. White, appeared and stated his willingness to give bond for the arrested men if the students would disperse. The boys conveyed the news to the crowd on the green.

Later Edward A. O'Neil of Whalley Avenue furnished bonds of $200 in each case, the students being held on charges of breach of the peace.

While most of the principals succeeded in making their escape, an effort will be made to obtain their names from the prisoners in court to-morrow morning.

DIED CONSULTING A DOCTOR.

Heart Disease, for Which He Sought Advice, Killed Welch.

Coroner Van Patten investigated at New Rochelle yesterday the death of James Welch, 35 years old, who died suddenly there in the office of Dr. Chambers. Welch, who was a carpenter, had been ill of heart disease. He went into Dr. Chambers's office and said:

"Doctor, I have something the matter with my heart."

"Sit down," directed the physician.

Welch sank into a chair with a gasp, and a minute later he expired. An autopsy showed that he had died of valvular disease of the heart.

SUICIDE LEFT DIRECTIONS.

Mrs. Sticker Told Her Landlord Just What to Do When He Found Her.

Mrs. Johanna Sticker, who was 40 years old, and whose husband is said to be an engineer, committed suicide early yesterday morning in her bed in the furnished-room house of John T. Von Brunk at 254 East Sixty-eighth Street. She fired a revolver bullet into her temple.

Her husband visited her occasionally, but had not been to see her for two weeks. Her landlord never learned why they did not live together. Mrs. Sticker rented the room about four months ago.

A light in Mrs. Sticker's room attracted Mrs. Von Brunk's attention yesterday morning. This note was pinned on the door, which was locked:

> Please notify the police. Get an ambulance. Come in the other door, through the closet, with the key. The key is in the kitchen, in the corner under the milk bottle. I would like to have one minute alone, to kill myself.

The closet door was usually blocked from the inside by a large chest. Von Brunk, however, found the key in the place named in the note, and when he tried it in the closet door, the door opened readily. Mrs. Sticker had moved aside the chest, evidently so no door would have to be smashed.

Mrs. Sticker was found dead on her bed.

Stuck in the mirror over the dresser was this note, addressed to Mr. Von Brunk:

> I have given my last dollar to my husband, Mr. Sticker, so I have nothing to pay you the $17 I owe you. I also have nothing to bury myself. Please tell that to the police. Everything left belongs to you, Mr. Von Brunk.

Mrs. Sticker occasionally attended the Church of St. Vincent Ferrier. Thinking that the church authorities might be able to find her husband, as they promised to try to do, Coroner Shrady did not immediately order the removal of her body.

IMPATIENT, HE SHOT HIMSELF.

A Suicide Because He Couldn't Get $50 for Engagement Ring.

Nathan Apteil, a furrier, 28 years old, who lived with a sister at 34 East Seventh Street, Manhattan, went to the home of his mother, Mrs. Sarah Apteil, at 589 Flushing Avenue, Williamsburg, yesterday afternoon, and because his brother, Joseph, deferred giving him $50 with which to buy an engagement ring for his fiancée, drew a revolver and shot himself dead.

The suicide caused such excitement in the neighborhood that half a dozen policemen had to be sent out from the Clymer Street Police Station to keep order. When Apteil asked his brother for the money, the latter told him to wait until to-day, when he would probably give it to him.

Apteil then called his niece and dictated the following letter to her:

"Dear Brother Joe: Please go down to No. 65 West Houston Street, first floor, H. Silverman, my employer, and get $10 coming to me for my week's pay to-morrow night at 5 o'clock.

"NATHAN."

He then went into a room adjoining the dining room, where, standing in front of a mirror, and with the family watching him, he drew a revolver, placed it to his temple, and blew out his brains.

IMMIGRATION FIGURES GROW.

Record Figures of 1904 Broken—Prosperity Among Laborers.

ALBANY, April 1.—During the last three months of 1905 there were 165,540 alien arrivals at the Port of New York, according to the quarterly bulletin of the State Department of Labor, made public to-night. This is an increase of 9,000 over the record-breaking figures of a year ago, the influx from Italy alone being larger by 20,000 than in the last quarter of 1904.

"New York becomes the home of 63,413 of the newcomers," says the bulletin, "and the fact that 35,728, or one-fourth of the 140,000 immigrants over 14 years old, can neither read nor write is not altogether reassuring."

The bulletin says that the closing months of the year 1905 were the busiest that the wage earners of the State have seen in many years. Among 92,000 working people in 85 different trades and occupations only 111 per 1,000 were idle at the end of December, as compared with 196 at the close of the previous year, and 231 at the close of 1903.

SIXTEEN ELEPHANTS SURROUND A CHURCH

Cincinnati Congregation Held Prisoners by Circus Runaways.

RUSE SAVES SUNDAY SCHOOL

While Pastor Waves Red Cloth, Distracting the Animals' Attention, Children Rush to Safety.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, April 1.—Frightened by the whistle of a locomotive, a herd of sixteen elephants, belonging to a circus in Winter quarters at the Fair Grounds, stampeded this morning, and, breaking from keepers and attendants, charged up the quiet streets of Elmwood Place just after services in the various churches had been called.

The elephants turned into the grounds of the First Baptist Church, and, trumpeting shrilly, routed the late comers and securely imprisoned the congregation.

The Sunday school classes had been dismissed a short time before the charge of the animals, but the children remained in the vestibule. Supt. Furlich and the pastor waved a red cloth from one of the side windows of the church, and the elephants walked around to investigate it. During their temporary absence from the front of the church the children rushed for the street.

Samuel Krug, 7 years old, and Wilbur Wilson, 12 years old, were knocked down in the rush and painfully trampled. As they were being helped toward the fence in front a big tusker ran after them. The animal knocked Krug down and bruised him about the arm and side, but made no effort to trample him.

All of the elephants remained at liberty for more than an hour, and the last one was not captured until 5 o'clock.

LION LOOSE IN CHICAGO.

He Takes to a Cellar and Is Enticed Into a Cage.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 1.—Just when the habitués of the North State Street barrel houses were leaning drowsily against their kegs and boxes this afternoon they were treated to a diversion that kept them wide awake for several hours. This diversion was the overturning of a cage of lions at Kinsie and State Streets, the escape of one of the animals and its recapture.

The lions are the property of the Martha Florrine Company. They were being taken from the Calumet Theatre to the Chicago & Northwestern Station. A cage containing the six animals was being hauled on a dray. The cage was overturned and some bars broke.

Bashua, the oldest of the lions leaped from the broken cage. Tunis and Kate, the two other occupants of the same compartment, tried to follow, but were driven back. The hasty retreat of the crowd that had been following the cage left the street clear for half a block, and Bashua and Charles Cook, the keeper, faced each other.

Cook drew a pistol from his pocket, and the lion dashed into a factory cellar.

Cook did not know exactly what to do under such conditions. The windows of a lodging house across the street were filled with heads, and suggestions and advice was shouted to Cook.

"Why don't you let the end of the cage down the stairs and make him run into it?" asked some one.

The suggestion appealed to Cook, and the end of the cage was let down into the cellarway. Bashua jumped into it.

SOFT COAL OWNERS ARE SURRENDERING

the district convention, which begins Tuesday.

The miners of the Fairmont (West Va.) coal section are taking no interest in the situation and have not entered into the present controversy. Of the 40,000 miners in West Virginia only 5,000 are affiliated with the United Mine Workers. About 1,500 are in the Panhandle section, and these have ceased work.

Announcement was made from Greensburg to-night that the scale had been granted by the operators of fifteen mines in Westmoreland County.

In the Pittsburg district, while the scale agreement expired last night at midnight, there have been no steps taken that would indicate a general suspension of work. To-morrow is a holiday, being Mitchell Day, the anniversary of the granting of the eight-hour day to the miners, and all mines will be closed. On Tuesday, however, the district conventions' Scale Committee will have in readiness the new scale, and then it is expected that most of the operators will sign.

"If the independent operators in this district hold out against signing the scale there will be plenty of trouble when the men employed by the Pittsburg Coal Company go back to the mines," said President Patrick Dolan to-day. "The men in the independent mines will not enjoy lying idle while their fellows are at work, and we will have difficulty in preventing disturbances."

This district is in a peculiar position, as it has no district officers to sign the scale offered by the Pittsburg Coal Company. Dolan says he will sign it as President of the district, but he has been removed by order of the district convention, backed by John Mitchell. He refuses to accept this as legal, and says he will take his place in the convention Tuesday morning. Frank Feehan, elected at the special election, will also demand the place. Dolan will not permit the tellers of the election to report, as he refuses to recognize its legality. Dolan says he will force his opponents to go to court to oust him from his position, and until they do he will serve as District President.

ANTHRACITE MEN TO QUIT.

Union Miners in Eastern Pennsylvania to Obey Orders.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., April 1.—Mine workers' unions throughout the anthracite region met this afternoon and to-night, and without exception agreed to obey the suspension order, effective to-morrow morning. The union leaders declare that not a man except the engineers, firemen, and pump runners will report for work, and that these men will be limited to the number required to keep the mines free from water, in compliance with the order issued by President Mitchell.

The operators admit that they do not expect many men to agree to work to-morrow, but to all those who report at the collieries they will, whether the collieries produce coal or not, pay the average wages they would earn in a coal producing period. Some of the operators declare that they will at once proceed with repair work, but it is a question whether the union leaders will allow timbermen and laborers who do this work to enter the mines.

The large coal companies will unanimously conform to the policy they have adopted of not arousing the temper of the mine workers by any pronounced effort at work, and the individual operators say to-day that for the present they will act in harmony with the large companies, but that their course for the future has not been defined, and will not be until the result of the negotiations between the anthracite operators and the mine workers is known. A number of the individual washery owners say that they will make an effort to resume work Tuesday morning, and they expect a number of their men to report.

WHEELING, West Va., April 1.—Of the 40,000 bituminous miners in West Virginia, not over 5,000 are affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America. Of these 5,000 about 1,500 are in the Panhandle district and have gone out. The other union miners are scattered over the State, most of them in the Kanawha, New River field. In the Norfolk and Western fields the miners are almost entirely outside the organization, and the great bulk of the men are continuing at work, with here and there small strikes caused by local disagreements.

FEAR RUSH OF CONSUMERS.

Dealers' View of the Situation—Clergyman Criticises Miners.

The coal merchants, it was stated last night, are looking forward anxiously to the conference to-morrow between the anthracite operators' committee of seven and President Mitchell of the mine workers and his committee. They do not expect any yielding on the part of the operators, especially as the officers of the unions saw fit to call a strike while negotiations were still pending. What the dealers fear this week is a stampede of the consumers who hesitated filling their cellars before the strike was actually declared, in the hope that there would be no strike and that they would get the benefit of the April reduction in price.

As to the supply of anthracite in New York, it is admitted that it is largely guess work to estimate it. It is known, however, that a large supply must be on hand, and the dealers fear, they say, that speculators have been busy and have corralled a good deal of it, to sell at enhanced prices during the strike. It was stated last evening that a meeting of the Coal Merchants' Association will be held some time this week to size up the situation.

A letter dealing with the present situation from the Rev. Peter Roberts, Mahanoy City, Penn., who is looked upon as the best-known authority on the coal situation in America, was made public by the anthracite operators' Committee of Seven yesterday. Mr. Roberts has lived among the mine workers and preaches to them every Sunday. He sympathizes with them, so that his opinion would not naturally favor the operators. He has written two books which are handbooks on the subject of anthracite mining, one entitled "The Anthracite Coal Industry" and the other "The Anthracite Coal Commission." He says in his letter that a majority of the mine workers, in his belief, did not want to strike, and in his opinion a mere majority should not settle so serious a question. If the individual opinions of the mine workers were to settle the question at this time, there would be no strike, he says. He continues:

"The demands of the miners are absurd. I am surprised that the operators have not made more capital out of that ridiculous list of demands for uniform wages for 146 different classes of labor. I have asked myself often what they mean by presenting such an absurd lot of details. It shows plainly, as Mitchell admitted before the Arbitration Commission, that he does not know the anthracite region. It also shows that he cannot manage the anthracite men, who are, indeed, a difficult lot to control."

KINGS REPUBLICANS TO MEET

Dady-Woodruff Fight May Come Before Executive Committee To-day.

The Executive Committee of the Kings County Republican General Committee is to meet to-morrow afternoon in the Temple Bar Building, 44 Court Street, Brooklyn, and discuss plans for the reapportionment of the various Assembly and Senate districts.

The Dady-Woodruff fight is likely to crop up, and a lively time is expected. Although Michael J. Dady is not a member of the Executive Committee, it is generally expected that he will hold the proxy of D. Harry Ralston, the executive member from the First District.

Although Mr. Woodruff has a majority of the members with him, Col. Dady is expected to make some trouble for Mr. Woodruff and his friends. The whole affair will be thrashed out in the meeting of the General Committee April 10.

At this meeting, too, the report of the Committee of Twenty-one will be presented. This report will advocate direct nominations in Brooklyn by the direct method.

DR. FULDA ON TRANSLATING.

A Good Poem Almost an Accident, Says the German Author.

Dr. Ludwig Fulda, the German author, addressed an audience of about 500 men and women on "The Art of the Translator" at Liederkranz Hall last evening.

Dr. Fulda began by explaining that the desire to know something of a foreign author often relegated accuracy of interpretation to a secondary place and so that the best of him, that which alone made him worthy of translating was lost.

"The translator's art," he added, "is not one of production, nor yet one of reproduction. He must be able to reform the work.

"In prose he should be able to maintain the characterization. The complete work of an author is very much like a painting. Every little stroke of the brush has been put on with an eye that sees the picture as a whole.

The failure to understand the picture that the author had in mind necessarily leads to a distorted depiction of the work. To be a successful translator the workman ought to be a writer himself. It is not enough that he can translate business letters properly.

Dr. Fulda explained that an author ought to harmonize as far as possible the work he is translating to suit the mind of the nation for which he writes. He cited the translation of the Bible into German, from which he said, every German reader almost got the impression that Christ was a German.

"Difficult as prose is to translate," Dr. Fulda went on, "poetry is more difficult. The really good poem is often an accident, and it is difficult to repeat such accidents in a foreign tongue."

Dr. Fulda thought it perhaps unreasonable to expect in a translator the genius of the author he was translating, but that it certainly did not seem unreasonable to expect of him the degree of ability to write in his own tongue grammatically and to strive to be true to the author whom he was attempting to interpret.

BURGLARY SUSPECTS HELD.

Fifth Avenue Residents Can't Identify Them, but Others May.

William Rossol and Robert McDonald, arrested as suspects in connection with burglaries in Lower Fifth Avenue last week, were arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday and held to await a hearing to-morrow. Prominent householders, including Mr. and Mrs. Frank Witherbee of 4 Fifth Avenue, who suffered to the extent of $10,000 by the thievery, were in court to see if they could identify the prisoners.

The two men were seen last Monday evening in Washington Square by Detectives Fitzgerald, Conway, and Holahan. The next morning the Witherbee home was robbed. Following, as it did, half a dozen other robberies in the same neighborhood, detectives were detailed from the Central office and Capt. Stephenson, commanding the Mercer Street Police Station, put his best men at work.

Friday night the same detectives who had seen Rossol and McDonald Monday night, ran across them at Bleecker and West Broadway. They were standing in a doorway. Fitzgerald recognized Rossol at once.

"That's my man," he said, and started toward him.

Rossol pulled a jimmy from his pocket and attacked the detective. There was a brisk fight, in which Detective Conway took part and the suspects were subdued.

None of the victims of last week's burglaries could positively identify the prisoners, but there was sufficient testimony to justify them. Capt. Stephenson said he would have further evidence when the case comes up to-morrow.

CITY'S RAILWAY TRAFFIC.

93,000,000 More Fares Paid Last Year Than in 1904.

ALBANY, April 1.—The State Board of Railroad Commissioners made public to-night a compilation of statistics of the number of passengers carried and transferred on the street surface, elevated, and Subway railroad lines of New York City during 1905, as compared with 1904. The number of paid fares was 1,171,151,698, an increase of 93,498,451. The number transferred was 271,195,524, an increase of 7,816,362. The car mileage was 230,249,455, an increase of 28,664,543.

NEW TRAFFIC RULES.

The Regulations in Force at the Plaza Will Be Changed.

New traffic regulations in Fifty-ninth Street and in the vicinity of the Plaza will be put in force by order of Police Commissioner Bingham to-morrow. The changes were made on the recommendation of Inspector Flood, the head of the Traffic Squad.

No vehicles are now allowed to travel south on Fifth Avenue between Sixtieth and Fifty-eighth Streets. This regulation is to be abolished, and all kinds of vehicles will be allowed to pass north and south.

All heavily laden and slow moving vehicles bound east on Fifty-ninth Street, from Seventh Avenue, are now required, on reaching Sixth Avenue, to turn south and to proceed along the west side of Sixth Avenue between the west car tracks and the curb to West Fifty-seventh Street, and thence east to Madison Avenue, before again turning north. This regulation will be abolished, and both heavily laden and slow moving vehicles bound east from Seventh Avenue in Fifty-ninth Street will be permitted to travel east on the south side of that street, and to proceed north on Fifth Avenue to Sixtieth Street, and thence east, or south on Fifth Avenue to Fifty-eighth Street, and thence east.

All vehicles going south from Central Park will be allowed, after crossing the car tracks on Fifty-ninth Street, to proceed across the Plaza in a southeasterly direction to Fifth Avenue through an aisle of safety to be established.

MOTORIST PLEASES CRANE.

He Commends a Chauffeur Who Surprises Him by Pleading Guilty.

Magistrate Crane, whose feelings against speeding motorists have many times been expressed, found, in the Harlem Court yesterday, a chauffeur who admitted that he was guilty of breaking the law. The Magistrate was so pleased that he delivered a commendatory lecture to the chauffeur instead of the scathing one he usually administers to automobilists arraigned before him.

This frank chauffeur was Christian Suhr, 23 years old, of 350 Fulton Street, Brooklyn. He is employed by Anderson T. Hurd, a real estate agent having an office in the Times Building. He was arrested at 133d Street and St. Nicholas Avenue late Saturday evening by Patrolman Cunningham, who said he was going twenty-five miles an hour.

"What have you to say to the charge?" asked Magistrate Crane, sternly.

"I'm guilty," replied Suhr.

Magistrate Crane blinked. But he soon recovered from his surprise.

"Young man," he said, "I congratulate you. You have some manhood about you. When you grow older, and perhaps grow rich, always try to keep that manhood and have consideration for others.

"Your picture ought to be enlarged and hung in the Automobile Club of America, with an inscription describing your honesty, as an example to others."

Nevertheless, the Magistrate was compelled to hold Suhr in $200 bail for trial in Special Sessions. His employer gave security.

SAY ODELL'S PLAN WILL WIN.

His Followers Think Parsons Must Take His Apportionment Scheme.

Supporters of Chairman Odell of the Republican State Committee declared last night that President Parsons of the County Committee would have to abandon his tentative reapportionment plan for New York County and accept the new plan which Chairman Odell and twenty-two district leaders in the county have mapped out.

The Odell committee, with William Halpin at its head, is still at work putting the finishing touches to the new apportionment plan, while President Parsons's committee, headed by William C. Wilson, is also continuing its labors, but without much hope of inducing the Legislature to approve its work, since the County Committee is expected to approve the Odell plan.

Chairman Odell remained in the city yesterday and held conferences at the Republican Club with his followers. No announcement of the proposed new district lines will be made for several days.

COURT TO POLICE CAPTAIN.

"Arrest Thieves and Let Respectable People Alone," Says Magistrate.

Patrolman Tearse of the Macdougal Street Station arraigned Michael Contard, a butcher, of 62 Sullivan Street, before Magistrate Steinert in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday on a charge of selling meat on Sunday.

"Where are you from" asked the Magistrate of the officer.

"The Macdougal Street Station."

"Who's your Captain?"

"Capt. Russell, Sir."

"Is he from Brooklyn?"

"No, Sir."

"Well, you tell him that I discharged this prisoner with instructions that he send his men out and arrest the thieves down in his precinct. Tell him to let respectable people alone."

Patrolman Welch, also of the Macdougal Street Station, arraigned Frank Rosanio of 185 Sullivan Street. The Magistrate asked:

"What's the charge?"

"Selling six needles on Sunday, Sir."

"Oh, you're from the Macdougal Street Station?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Discharged. Tell your Captain to put his men out to catch burglars, and tell him that down in his precinct men take money from women on the street. Tell him I said for him to stamp out that practice and let the small shopkeepers sell pins and needles all they care to at any time."

EXTRA! THE THIRD RAIL!

The B. R. T. Men Are Getting Out a Railroad Magazine.

An event of interest to street railroad men in Brooklyn was the first issue, on Saturday, of The Third Rail, a magazine published by the benefit association of the employes of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. The new publication, which is to be a monthly devoted chiefly to the interests of the men who work on the cars and in the shops and stations of the railroad company, is filled with bright and interesting matter, most of it being contributed by the railroad men themselves. The cover of the first issue is in three colors, literature being typified in the figure of a woman with a pen and book. An elevated train and a trolley car are also shown in the drawing.

One of the stories has to do with a plan to build homes for the employes of the road. There is also a story about a motorman who spent a short vacation abroad. Details of the cost of the trip are given, and it is asserted that such a vacation is within reach of any motorman who saves his money. One fiction story is about a conductor on the Hamburg Avenue line who fell in love with a passenger on his car.

TERRIER FOUND AND LOST.

"Pinkie" of Hoboken Appears Doomed to Stay in New York.

There was a joyful reunion yesterday afternoon in front of the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Pinkie, the lost fox terrier, was stolen two long months ago from the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Heuschel of 1,016 Washington Street, Hoboken. Everywhere they searched, even enlisting the detectives of Hoboken. But 'twas all in vain. And then yesterday they came over to New York for a Spring promenade on Fifth Avenue.

There was a mutual and immediate recognition when Mrs. Heuschel and Pinkie looked into each other's eyes in front of the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Pinkie yelped ecstatically, and though he was attached to a string at the other end of which was a young man with a bored look on his face, Mrs. Heuschel grabbed up Pinkie in her arms.

The young man listened wearily to the story of the losing of Pinkie. He said he had paid a high price for the dog, but if Mr. and Mrs. Heuschel would come to his house later in the day and prove their original ownership of the dog they could have him. He gave them a card that bore the name of "James Allen." He scribbled on it "No. 342 East Forty-second Street," which he said was his home address.

Later in the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Heuschel went to the Forty-second Street number, but no one there knew "James Allen." Then the losers of Pinkie took their story to the Tenderloin station, where they received many assurances of sympathy. Sergt. McCarthy wrote down a minute description of Pinkie.

HELD BUNDLES AND BABY.

When His Wife Didn't Return Albert Called on the Police.

Sarah Albert of 208 East Houston Street didn't know she was playing an April fool trick on her husband, Nathan, but she was. She started out with him Saturday night to buy a chicken, three loaves of bread, four pickles, and a box of matches. They carried the baby with them.

After the shopping was all done Sarah Albert put the baby in her husband's arms, told him that she was going to run around the corner to speak to a neighbor, and then disappeared. Time went on and she didn't come back. Albert didn't know exactly where his wife had gone. The baby grew heavier and heavier, and still she did not come back. Then the husband carried the baby, his provisions, and his troubles to the Fifth Street Police Station.

Policeman Sherry went out to investigate. Within a block he found the wife standing where the husband had stood. She was crying for her baby. She was taken to the police station. In Yorkville Court yesterday morning, when she was charged with abandoning her husband, Magistrate Pool dismissed the case with a wave of his hand.

"Go home and make it up yourselves," he said.

Saves Five Children from Fire.

Five children of John Stewart, ranging in age from 10 years down, were rescued from fire by Policeman Christofel last night at 880 Westchester Avenue. Christofel saw smoke pouring from the windows, and broke open the door. He found the five children in bed, and carried them to a neighbor's. Stewart and his wife were out calling. The fire was soon out.

Stuyvesant PIANOLA PIANO
Price $550 Payable in moderate monthly amounts if desired

THE piano is the most popular musical instrument in the world. The Pianola enables anyone to play it. The Metrostyle makes it possible for the musically ignorant to play artistically, but it does not curtail the individual expression of the musician.

The combination of all these into one instrument constitutes the first complete piano—a piano with the ability to play included.

Of the forty or more so-called "Piano-players" on the market, the Pianola is the player which the greatest musicians pronounce "the only one deserving of serious musical consideration." The Stuyvesant Pianola Piano is the only piano at its price that contains the genuine Pianola.

Copyists of the Pianola Piano idea have encountered many manufacturing difficulties because one organization did not control both the piano and the player. The Aeolian Company anticipated these inevitable troubles. They knew that a perfect union was possible only where all parts were under one control. They, therefore, secured, (in addition to the Weber, Steck and Wheelock) the Stuyvesant Piano, a well-known, old established instrument of beautiful tone, responsive action and artistic appearance.

At $550, the Stuyvesant Pianola Piano represents remarkable value. There are other "Player-pianos" sold at nearly twice its price and yet lacking its important and vital advantages. Send for catalog.

SERENADE AT SALOON DOOR.

But It Drew No Beer and a Red-Hot Fight Followed.

Policeman James Duane of the Alexander Avenue Station had a hard fight yesterday afternoon in trying to arrest a 200-pound truck driver and a woman who was serenading the bartender of a Bronx saloon, in the hope of obtaining a can of beer.

There was a rough and tumble fight between the trio that lasted fifteen minutes. The woman was carried away by friends, and Duane and the truck driver, both much the worse for wear and tear, were taken to Lebanon Hospital, where it took the surgeons an hour to patch up their hurts.

Duane has the reputation of never losing a prisoner, no matter what the odds against him. About 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon he heard discordant howls in the vicinity of 144th Street and Park Avenue, and discovered a bedraggled female with a battered tin pail storming the side door of a saloon.

When pleadings were in vain she started in with the serenade which caused the proprietor of the place to double lock the door and draw the curtains.

Duane ordered her away and she abused him and tried to strike him with the can. He caught her by the arm and started for the station house.

About this time Edward C. Bennis, 32 years old, of 720 East 146th Street, appeared and told Duane that the woman was a friend of his, and that if he was wise he would let her go.

The policeman told him to mind his own business, and Bennis struck him in the face. The two clinched, and the woman started to kick and claw the policeman.

Duane was getting the worst of it when Policeman O'Mally arrived. The woman was dragged away by several toughs while a few blows from O'Mally's club took all the fight out of Bennis.

The truck driver was ultimately taken to the station house and held on charges of interfering with an officer and felonious assault.

EJECTION AND PUNCHING AT THE UNION MEETING

One Man Gets a Black Eye, and the Police Are Called.

THAT CLOSES OPEN SESSION

Tschaikoffsky, the Russian Revolutionist, Had Pleaded with the Central Federated for His Cause.

The Central Federated Union gave a hearing yesterday to Nicholas Tschaikoffsky, the emissary of the Russian Revolutionary Party sent here to arouse the sympathy of American workingmen in the Russian revolutionary movement. He was received with applause when he addressed the delegates as fellow-citizens. He felt it obligatory on him to come to the meeting of the Central Federated Union, the central body of the labor unions, he said, to ask for its sympathy in the struggle of the Russian workingmen for liberty. He continued:

"I believe the trades union movement to be the core of the national movement for life and liberty now going on in Russia. There are more than 10,000,000 of people in the movement in Russia now, and the unions are acquiring magnificent power.

"I am not here to tell all the horrors of the Government outrages since the time that men and women were shot down in cold blood when they went with a petition to the Czar. I am here merely to enlist your sympathy."

Resolutions of sympathy were carried, and it was decided to make the usual donation given to outside organizations.

There was a fuss at the meeting over the ejection of a man who was declared to be an intruder hostile to the regular unions. The man ejected was Edward J. Hanley. The fuss was started by James Holland of the Eccentric Firemen. He shouted that there was an enemy of labor in the hall, pointed to Hanley and yelled:

A sneak is sitting there, he has done harm to my union and to the engineers, and he shouldn't be here."

The usual cry of "Put him out!" was raised. August Waldinger, the Sergeant at Arms, was instructed to put the man out, and started to do so. Hanley resisted, and there was a struggle all the way to the door. Several delegates lent a hand. There was a free fight in the hall afterward, and Hanley got rough usage. He reappeared soon with Policemen Hamilton and Fuhse. One of his eyes was black, and he was in bad shape generally. He said that he wanted Holland arrested for hitting him in the eye.

Holland was not in the hall, and the Chairman, James Hand, ordered the policemen out. The bluecoats went out. They came back again with Hanley, and there was a cry that the reserves were coming. Thereupon the meeting was adjourned in a hurry.

The reserves did not come, so after some more scuffles, in which Detectives Landers and Hart took part, all outsiders were ordered from the hall, and the union went into executive session.

Service Not Interrupted by Wash-Outs.

Marius de Brabant, General Agent in this city of the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, has received advices that there has been no interruption in the service of the Los Angeles Limited in consequence of the washouts on the line, as these trains are being detoured from Ogden to Los Angeles via the Southern Pacific. The damage is by no means as serious as was reported. It is being rapidly repaired, and through service will be resumed within ten days.

Falls Dead Going to a Wedding.

Louis Dinklespiel of 46 West Eighty-ninth Street, while on his way to a wedding in the house of Mrs. Nathan Glickman, at 32 West 112th Street, about 8 o'clock last night, fell dead just as he stepped off the sidewalk at 112th Street and Fifth Avenue. Mr. Dinklespiel was 50 years old, and was a clothing manufacturer. His business address was 112 Fifth Avenue.

FATHER JOHN ATTACKED.

Man Strikes at Him at the Altar—Sacramental Cup Smashed.

KRONSTADT, April 1.—Father John Sergieff, better known as Father John of Kronstadt, was attacked in the Cathedral here to-day while descending from the altar to administer the sacrament.

His assailant struck at him with a loaded cane, but Father John dodged the blow, which smashed the cup. The man was arrested.

The penalty for violation of the sacrament in Russia is death.

RUSSIAN SENATE DENOUNCED.

Indignation Over the Acquittal of Neidhardt and Kurloff.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 1.—The Opposition organs express themselves in no measured terms over the acquittal by the Senate of M. Neidhardt, Prefect of Odessa, and Gov. Kurloff of Minsk on the charge of complicity in the Jewish massacres. They say that the Judges in the Senate are mostly recruited from superannuated Governors, who naturally are biased.

Moreover, it is said, M. Durnovo appeared as a special pleader on behalf of the accused, declaring that personages like Neidhardt and Kurloff had not acted counter to the wishes of the Government, with whose intentions they were well acquainted.

Prof. Hessen, a prominent Jewish publicist, says that the Senate's verdict will cause a feeling of panic and horror throughout the Pale.

Many newspapers have been publishing further accounts of witnesses of the horrors at Odessa and Minsk last November.

FATAL HOSPITAL TRANSFERS.

Coroner Harburger Says the Practice Costs Thousands of Lives.

Coroner Julius Harburger was the principal speaker at a meeting of the Albemarle Association, 42 Second Avenue, yesterday afternoon. He told of the bill drafted by him to punish those who transfer sick persons from one hospital to another.

"Only recently I had two cases under my jurisdiction," said the Coroner, "one in Roosevelt Hospital and the other in the Hudson Street Hospital. The patients died within two hours after being transferred to Bellevue. I have made further investigations, and I find through reports of various institutions that between 8,000 and 9,000 have been transferred to Bellevue Hospital within the last year. Thousands of lives are lost by this practice."

EXPLOSION IN LAUNDRY.

Several Rescues at First Avenue Fire That Came with It.

Policeman Sheehy saw flames coming from the rear of a Chinese laundry in the basement of the five-story tenement house at 841 First Avenue just before 12 o'clock last night. While Sheehy was hurrying to turn in an alarm there was an explosion in the laundry, and the back stairway was filled with flames and smoke.

Sheehy and Policeman Dwyer then rushed upstairs to arouse the occupants of the house. They found all of them either groping about in the halls or climbing down the fire escapes. On the first floor they came across Mrs. Hammerman and her daughter, Fannie, who is 22 years old, half unconscious from smoke. They carried the two women to the street and then returned upstairs, where they remained until all the members of the eighteen families who live in the tenement were safely out.

While a fire ladder was being hoisted to the fourth floor of the house it slipped. Two of the firemen on it slid back to the fire truck all right, but the third, whose name could not be learned, fell to the ground, twenty feet. He escaped uninjured.

The damage caused by the explosion and the flames, which were confined to the laundry, is estimated at $1,000. The laundry is owned by Tom Lee, who was not around during or after the fire.

Jostling Brokers Make It Up.

Arnold C. Saportas of 42 East Twenty-eighth Street and Daniel Ritchey of the Broztell, in Twenty-seventh Street, the brokers who caused each other's arrest in Fifth Avenue on Saturday afternoon on charges of assault, refused to press either complaint when arraigned before Magistrate Steinert in the Jefferson Market Court, yesterday. Both were discharged.

ODESSA LIBERAL TICKET, NUMBERING 66, IN JAIL

Workmen Are Ordered to Choose Reactionary Candidates.

ELECTIONS IN CAPITAL TO-DAY

Reports That Bombs Will Be Thrown Into Polling Places—Moderates and Conservatives Combine.

ODESSA, April 1.—On the eve of the preliminary elections among the workmen of sixty-six factories all the sixty-six candidates were arrested because they displayed too Liberal tendencies, and the authorities have directed the voters to choose other candidates, belonging to the Reactionary parties.

Prof. Ivan Michaelovitch Zanchevsky, Rector of the university here, will be placed on trial before the Senate. He is charged with organizing the student militia which defended the Jews during the massacres last November.

Gov. Gen. Kaulbers has prohibited all election meetings, saying he fears disorders might result.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 1.—To-morrow the City of St. Petersburg will choose electors to the Municipal Congress, which in turn will elect six members to the National Parliament. The banks will be closed and business will be suspended in order to give voters an opportunity to cast their ballots.

Many rumors are afloat to the effect that the revolutionists intend to create disorders and throw bombs in the polling places.

The close of the campaign was marked by great activity and considerable excitement. Speeches were prohibited, but hundreds of thousands of circulars were mailed to voters, and the Constitutional Democrats employed the expedient of dispatching their reading matter by messengers in order that it should be sure to reach the persons to whom it was sent. The newspapers are filled with appeals to the voters.

The strength of the Constitutional Democrats has compelled the Moderates and Conservatives to pool issues. The Octoberists and Progressive Economists, with the Law and Order and Trade and Industries Parties, have put in the field a "block" ticket. Nevertheless, the Constitutional Democrats expect a sweeping victory, and the indications are that they will carry the day.

HIGGINS ON ODELL.

Governor Makes Clearer His Attitude on State Chairmanship.

ALBANY, April 1.—Gov. Higgins returned to the capital this afternoon from New York. He was asked:

"Did you say in New York yesterday that you believed the interests of the Republican Party would be strengthened by the continuance of Mr. Odell as Chairman of the State Committee?"

"I certainly did not intend," said Gov. Higgins, "to express the belief that the continuance of Mr. Odell as Chairman of the Republican State Committee would strengthen the interests of the party in this State. In New York yesterday, replying to questions, I stated that certain financial influences and some politicians who make politics a business believed that their interests would be strengthened by Mr. Odell's continuance as Chairman for the present, having in mind pending legislation of importance to them."

The Governor would add nothing to this statement.

SCARED BOY TO HIS DEATH.

Auto Frightened Lad So He Fell Under the Wheels of a Car.

While playing with other children in Eighth Avenue, near Forty-ninth Street, late yesterday afternoon, Charles Stolze, 6 years old, son of William Stolze of 339 West Forty-ninth Street, was run over and killed by an Eighth Avenue car. Frank Conway, the motorman, was arrested.

The boy's playmates and others say the little fellow had climbed to the top of a heap of earth piled along the east track by the gas company, which is repairing mains at that point, and was balancing himself there when an automobile rushed by.

Young Stolze was probably frightened by the rush of the machine, lost his balance and fell across one of the rails of the track just as an empty Eighth Avenue car came along.

Motorman Conway declares he did not see the boy at all. Young Stolze was caught by the wheels of the rear truck, which passed completely over him.

Jefferson Dinner Speakers Chosen.

Announcement was made last night at the Democratic Club that the speakers at the annual Jefferson dinner, to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria on the night of April 16, will be Judson Harmon, President Woodrow Wilson, W. Bourke Cockran, and Mayor McClellan. President Wilson of Princeton University will speak on "Jefferson." The others will select their own subjects. The list of diners has been restricted to 500.

The Oregon Loses a Boat in a Gale.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 1.—The battleship Oregon arrived here to-day from Manila via Honolulu. After a short stay at this port the Oregon will go to the Puget Sound Navy Yard for repairs. Entering this port the Oregon encountered a severe northwestern gale, in which she lost her port quarter boat.

"Make it personal While it is clear in Your mind—Telephone."

The President of one of our largest corporations advised all his department heads as follows:

"Use the Telephone, you will bankrupt us on postage.

CONTEMPLATING
Distinctiveness: Its Sources
RELATIVE TO READY-FOR-SERVICE CLOTHING FOR MEN
Of Which This Is Number One

System is devised to simplify method, and method is nothing but a means to the end.

Our tailoring system is our strength. It leaves nothing to hazard. It becomes operative before a garment is begun and stays with it to the end.

A bolt of cloth which the weaver warrants shrunk, subjected to our system, shrinks fully three and a half yards more—enough for an entire suit.

Were we blind to this fault, we would invite a "draw-string" edge on a coat, or trousers with one leg longer than the other.

Such is the source of distinctiveness in our ready-for-service garments for men.

NO FUN SPED THE 118 TO FORT LEAVENWORTH

No Dry Eyes as the Prisoners Left Castle Williams.

NO BASS HORN IN THE BAND

For Big George Van Wyck Was in the Handcuffed Line—Governors Island Knew 'Em All.

"Every man of 'em had a tear in his eye," said Sergt. De Lattre, Supervisor of Castle Williams, the military prison on Governors Island, in describing the departure yesterday from the ancient castle of the 118 men recently ordered transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., by the War Department at Washington. It was the biggest transfer of military prisoners there has been in this neighborhood in more than twenty years, and so great was the desire of relatives and curiosity seekers to see the shackled young fellows taken from the island that the Government issued a misleading order so as to make as private as possible their exit from what had been termed "the easiest snap in the shape of a prison on the face of this earth."

It was exactly 1 o'clock when the bugle sounded in the circular yard of Castle Williams for the prisoners to assemble. As the last note of the bugle died away, and the men started down the stairways to form in line and be handcuffed, thirty-six picked men from the Fifth Infantry under command of Lieut. Vincent L. Elmore, Sergts. John Hunt and Terry Ryan and three Corporals marched in. They constituted the guard that will see to it that the prisoners behave themselves on the three days' journey from New York to Leavenworth.

Each prisoner had a knapsack containing, in addition to the blanket that will keep him warm at night, the few necessaries that he will require while on the way to the bigger and much stricter prison in Kansas. The men were handcuffed in pairs, formed in line, and the order to march was given. The line was flanked on each side by eighteen regulars, with a Sergeant leading the way, another following in the rear, and the Corporals stationed at proper distances along the line.

Just before Lieut. Elmore gave the order, "Forward, march," the prison band, under the leadership of Jake Young, assembled in the yard and gave a farewell concert. The band was minus a bass horn, for big George Van Wyck, who has been blowing the big horn, was among the 118 ordered West by the War Department, and all the arguments that the Castle Williams officials could advance failed to get the order for his transfer revoked. Leader Young had also been ordered to Leavenworth, but the pleas in his case were successful, and at the last moment an order came from Washington that because he was leader of the band he would be permitted to serve out his sentence in Castle Williams.

As the prisoners marched through the big iron gate on their way to the pier at the northeast end of the island the band struck up "Auld Lang Syne," and that was the last sound from within the grim old fort that most of the men who left it yesterday will probably ever hear. At the pier the Quartermaster's Department steamboat Col. Wright was waiting for the prisoners, and as soon as they were all on board the lines were cast off and the vessel steamed away for Weehawken. The orders issued read: "Via New York Central and the Grand Central Station," but this was just to mislead and stop a crowd from assembling at the West Shore station in Weehawken.

At Weehawken a special train of cars was waiting for the prisoners. It consisted of a baggage car, two regular passenger coaches for the prisoners, and a dining and sleeping car for the guard. The baggage had been placed on board several hours before, and the minute the men had been assigned to the seats they will occupy on the way to Leavenworth the conductor shouted, "All aboard," and the Castle Williams unfortunates, each of them still showing that "tear in his eye," were off.

After the men had left the castle those that remained behind told stories connected with this one's and that one's imprisonment. Benjamin Stine, in the years that he behaved himself, had been a Quartermaster's Sergeant, and at the time when the order came for his transfer to Leavenworth was the Chief Clerk in the prison office. He was a well-educated, model prisoner, and it will be hard to find a man among the 250 still in the prison who can fill the job as well as he did. The officers tried their best to have him retained, but, like Van Wyck, the bass horn player, he still has a long time to serve, and the department said that he had to go. Stine was in for desertion, his case being a particularly flagrant one.

Then there was "Dick" Sullivan and Alonzo Kildou, two of the twelve men who were so fond of drink that several weeks ago they broke into the paint shop attached to the prison and stole a lot of wood alcohol. One of the twelve died, and Sullivan and Kildou's lives were saved only after the hardest kind of work on the part of the doctors attached to the Fifth Infantry.

"Jack" Doyle is another of the unfortunates who has gone. He was one of the famous prisoners in the castle. Two years ago Doyle tried to escape by letting himself down from the roof of the castle on strips of an old army blanket that he got hold of. He was half way down the wall when a blanket strip broke. He fell on a pile of old cannon balls and broke his leg. He limps badly to this day.

Close friends are Frank Larrabee and "Johnnie" Kramer. A little less than a year ago they made up their minds to leave Governors Island, and decided to cross Buttermilk Channel in an old rowboat that was moored alongside the coal shed. Just before the time they had set to embark they visited the Post Quartermaster's office and tore into shreds all the American flags they could lay their hands on.

"They had lost their love for the old flag," said a soldier yesterday.

Larrabee was caught soon after he landed in Brooklyn, but it was four months before Kramer was landed. Larrabee got five years and Kramer four years additional for the trouble, the most serious part of which was the mutilation of the National colors.

When the prisoners marched out of Castle Williams yesterday, "Joe" Tilton and "Pete" Brennan were handcuffed together. They had begged that favor of the prison officers. Just a year ago these two prisoners, while scrubbing the floors of the bachelor quarters then occupied by Lieut. Christy, found a bottle of whisky kept by that officer for medicinal purposes. When they had finished the bottle they felt so good that they dressed up in Lieut. Christy's best uniforms and went to sleep in his bed. They were found asleep a few hours later by the guard that was sent to look for them when they failed to show up at the dinner roll call.

Most famous of all those transferred, however, is Harry Baker, ten times a deserter from the United States Army. Baker's habit was to enlist in one regiment and then suddenly disappear, to re-enlist a little later on in another command. He remained with each regiment usually a few months, but sometimes only a few days. Then he always disappeared again. He always re-enlisted under a different name, but the descriptions sent out of him under the various names always tallied, and at last the officers found out that a professional deserter was making the rounds of the regiments in the army.

The upshot of Baker's desertions was that an official description of him was sent to every post and every recruiting station of the army in the United States. A few weeks after the description was issued he was identified and arrested just as he was about to be accepted as a recruit in the regiment then stationed at the barracks in Columbus, Ohio. His court-martial and sentence to a long term in Castle Williams followed.

"Until a few weeks ago," said a soldier attached to the Castle Williams guard, "Baker was a model prisoner. Then he was told that he was going to Leavenworth, and it almost broke his heart. The result was that he got hold of some whisky, got loaded to the neck, and got a year extra for his good time."

Cleveland Moffett Tells Y. M. C. A. Men About Dangerous Callings.

Cleveland Moffett talked of dangerous callings before the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon. His text was supplied by the Chairman, Alexander F. Irvine, who declared: "God said 'by the sweat of thy brow shalt thou earn thy bread', not by the breaking of thy neck. Yet 80,000 men are killed at their work every year in the United States."

Mr. Moffett did not lay claim to any special bravery for the men about whom he talked. "They do it," he said, "because they have to. Soldiers used to be thought the bravest men. That's silly. The days are coming when if half a million men are ordered to march out and kill another half million, they'll reply, 'Not on your life!'"

He illustrated the courage of the bridge-workers by the story of John Regan, who had to walk across a girder on the Brooklyn Bridge, 250 feet high, in a high wind. Half way across he thought he would like to smoke. So he stopped, balanced himself on one foot while he struck a match on the other, and then calmly went on. But one day bridge-workers awake and find their courage gone, apparently without cause. Then they must quit at once or an accident is sure to happen.

"The steeple-jack," said Mr. Moffett, "fears sudden noise more than the height. When Bob Merrill is on the top of Trinity steeple and wants to strike a match he warns Joe Lawlor, his partner, very carefully. But Bob's worst plight was in Cincinnati. The man working with him went mad and suggested racing him in a jump to the ground 200 feet below.

"'Kid' Benjamin made an unexpected balloon ascent at Coney Island. The balloon went up suddenly, and when it was 800 feet up the aeronaut heard some one crying up in the balloon. It was a 'newsy' who had clambered up the netting and was now howling to beat the band.

"'What are you howling at!' was the question.

"'Cos sixty pennies has just rolled out o' me pants,' replied the youngster."

SEA ANEMONE GETS WELL.

Hospital Treatment at the Aquarium Saves Its Life.

Supt. Spencer of the Aquarium was exhibiting yesterday a beautiful sea anemone which he has practically recalled from the dead. The anemone is a very large one, with brilliant red tentacles, which when expanded make it look more like a splendid chrysanthemum than anything else. It is one of two given to the Aquarium a few days ago. When received it was so nearly dead that it looked more like a piece of dry cherry wood than anything else.

The anemone was fished up out of ninety feet of water off the Cholera Banks, and when brought to the surface, with its companion, was attached to a five-pound piece of rock. When it got to the Aquarium it was so nearly dead that Mr. Spencer at first doubted whether it was worth his time to try and save its life. He finally decided that it was, and had it placed in one of the hospital tanks in the rear of the exhibition tanks.

Saline injections and saline baths were given the anemone, and after several days of careful nursing Mr. Spencer noted that it showed unmistakable signs of improvement. The treatment was continued, and one morning the thing had so far improved that Mr. Spencer decided to give it an oyster fragment for breakfast. For dinner it had a piece of soft clam, and for a late supper got a tenth of a teaspoonful of chicken broth. Three days later the anemone had entirely recovered and was discharged from the hospital. It is now the handsomest of all the rare marine things that are to be seen by the privileged few who are allowed to enter the big room where the things not on exhibition are kept.

The second anemone is still very low. Yesterday it was so ill that it had turned completely inside out. The saline injections are still being employed, however, and Mr. Spencer said he was certain the thing would be as well as its partner in a few days.

BEATEN FOR SOMEONE ELSE.

The Police Make This Explanation of a Williamsburg Man's Assault.

With a broken nose and internal injuries, John Mohr, a salesman, 21 years old, of 140 Franklin Street, Williamsburg, was in a critical condition last evening in the Eastern District Hospital. He was assaulted by unknown men early yesterday morning, near Throop Avenue and Gerry Street. By the time the police from the Clymer Street Station reached the scene the assailants were gone. The police seem to believe that Mohr was mistaken for some one else.

Mohr had been out calling with an older brother, and when the two parted John set out alone for his home. Just as he passed a saloon at Gerry Street and Throop Avenue, he was jumped on by half a dozen men who had been concealed in a nearby doorway. Before he could shout for help he was seized by the throat and then kicked and punched. Not a word was spoken, and when his assailants left him, Mohr sank to the sidewalk insensible. He was found there by some men who passed.

A Matchless Exposition of Easter Millinery.

The Big Store invites you to its biggest and best Millinery Show. Famous for years for a magnificent combination of millinery art, novelty and beauty with commercial common sense and moderate prices, the present showing will be found easily to eclipse anything heretofore displayed.

Description is impossible—the hats are both too many and too beautiful to be described. We can only give you a glimpse of the VALUES and promise you that the STYLES are such as you could picture in your most exalted moments of imagination.

Original Model Hats from Paris.

Carefully selected from masterpieces from the hands of the most famous milliners of the world. Original prices, $40.00 to $75.00. Will be sold to-day at $30.00, $25.00 and.... $20.00

Superb Trimmed Hats---Copies & Originals.

With the best that Paris could do for inspiration and as models, we have produced a large number of trimmed hats which we ask you to compare, beauty for beauty, with anything the city can show. To these our own designers have added hundreds of their own creations. Special prices to-day, $25.00, $20.00, $18.00, $15.00, $12.50, and an especially large variety at........ $10.00

More than 3,000 Trimmed Hats at $5.

A line for which we have been so long famous, and in which our leadership has been so universally admitted, that little comment is necessary beyond the statement that the present showing at this price is both the largest and the best we have ever displayed.

Tailored or Street Hats 95c. to $7.50.

Another line in which we are admittedly pre-eminent. We give a choice of over a thousand styles at these moderate prices. In this, as in the $5 line, we promise value-for-price nearly double obtainable elsewhere.
(Siegel Cooper Store, Millinery Salon, 2d Floor, Front, 19th St.)

Women's Suits-A Masterful Demonstration

TAKE any feature you choose to rest your judgment upon, whether upon the variety shown, style given, originality displayed or the values at the prices, we can prove supremacy in any of these and in all.

The worst about such a statement as this is that every store says exactly the same thing and nobody pays any attention to it in consequence. What form of words can we use that will convince you that we mean every syllable of our claim earnestly, honestly and literally?

This IS the largest showing of sensibly priced Suits in the city. It DOES give you the largest variety you can find and the best choosing at the medium prices. And our prices ARE the lowest in New York for suits of anything like the character of these.

If this is all true, it's important to you to judge if we may be trusted on other statements and claims. So test our claim and treat us according to your finding.
(Siegel Cooper Store, 2d Floor, Front, 18th St.)

Women's Coats

Supremacy---and Why.

Contrary to the practice in most large stores, our Women's Coat Section is conducted as a branch separate and distinct—not a mere adjunct to the Women's Suit Store.

Subdivision of this sort permits of specialization to a greater degree than would otherwise be possible. The coats are selected and sold by an organization which gives that one line of merchandise its entire attention.

The result is easily seen. We show not only more styles, but more carefully selected styles, than any other store in New York.

Detail is impossible in a display so vast. It can only be summarized thus:

Tailored Covert Coats, smart, natty styles in the popular short lengths, strapped and stitched, at prices from $5.00 to $20.00

Black Broadcloth Jackets of excellent qualities; some strapped and some braid trimmed styles; others plain tailored styles for elderly ladies; priced from $5.00 to $32.50

Silk Etons, of good, reliable taffetas, braided, strapped or silk trimmed styles, lined or unlined, at prices from..$7.50 to $27.50

Broadcloth Etons, in a bewildering variety of styles of excellent materials, tastefully trimmed. Prices...$7.50 to $24.75

Evening Coats, of broadcloth, in white and pastel shades, lace or imported silk; most exquisite effects ever produced. The prices range from...$21.50 to $74.50

Pony Coats of covert cloths and black or white broadcloths; beautiful braid or lace trimmed styles. Prices from....$9.75 to $36.50

Coats in 50 inch lengths of domestic or imported mixtures, black or colored broadcloths, chiffon Panama cloths or French voiles. Prices range from $8.75 to $47.50

Raincoats—This collection embraces every garment, the modest and the luxurious, the coat of utility and the coat of beauty; the best rainproof worsted and Prunella cloths. Prices from $7.95 to $54.75

Women's Waists.

A Showing of Beautiful Styles at Attractive Prices.

You will find the Waists on to-day in a big new store of their own—Second Floor, Centre, and east of the Grand Staircase. More space had to be provided to give the wonderful assembly of Easter styles a proper showing.

This waist stock is one of several lines in this store which bears the proud distinction of "the largest in New York." We specialize, as is our custom, in the medium-priced lines, and offer you a larger choice at the prices, which interest the overwhelming majority of women, than you would have if you had the stocks of two or three large stores that we know added together.

Don't get the idea that we do not sell the finer classes of waists. Our prices run up to $35—and at that price we sell the waists that the stores who do not specialize in the medium-priced lines mark $40 or higher.

THREE HANDSOME LINGERIE MODELS AT 5.00 EACH.

Two of these artistically beautiful models are in white, the other in black; made of imported French batiste; exquisite lace trimmed model and pleasing values, at.......... 5.00

HARDEST OF ALL HARD HEADS

It Belongs to Mandy of the Circus, and They Broke Stone on It Without Denting It.

Marie Bayrooty, the Syrian girl who last year whirled for thirty-two minutes without cessation, making something like 2,240 revolutions, established a new record yesterday afternoon in Barnum & Bailey's Freak Hall. She made 2,990 whirls in thirty-seven minutes.

This is a new world's record, putting Whirler Ben Ali Hassan in the shade by fifteen minutes and nobody knows how many whirls. When the last note died and the last whirl had been achieved, Marie was as fresh as paint. She ran across the floor to the nearest reporter and pinned a rose on the lapel of his coat, remaining until her fame had been suitably sounded. Then she sat down and gave the other freaks a chance.

Unparalleled as was the feat of Marie, the performance of James Mandy, the Man with the Iron Skull, was no less interesting to the favored ones who gathered at Madison Square Garden. According to Barry Gray's biographical sketch Mr. Mandy was born in New York in 1881, and when still an infant took a peculiar delight in butting his head against the wall or giving himself wallops on the skull with whatever came handy.

"He was never so happy," reads the sketch, "as when his playmates would strike him on the head with sticks or stones. His next-door neighbor, being a doctor, one day called Mandy into his office and made an examination of his skull. He discovered that instead of Mandy's skull being normally in sections it was all in one piece."

However accurate the early diagnosis of the next-door doctor, it may not be denied that Mandy invited assaults upon his head yesterday afternoon with everything from a slungshot to a sledgehammer. He broke a plate and a plank upon his pate just to show that he was in good trim and then got down to real business. Offering for inspection a slungshot well worthy the proudest traditions of Cherry Hill, he ingot down to real business. Offering for invited the strongest man within the sound of his voice to wield it upon his skull, and when the room had resounded with the volunteer's blows smilingly made ready for the supreme test.

A piece of stone 13 inches square and 8 inches thick was placed upon a pedestal and a full grown man struck it half a dozen times with a sledge hammer. The stone remained intact. Mandy then balanced it upon his head and invited a continuance of the assault. There was no outsider in the lot of onlookers who was willing to wield the hammer, and one of Barnum and Bailey's hired men responded to the call.

It took a dozen blows, each exerting a pressure of from 500 to 1,500 pounds to shatter the stone, the fragments of which flew in all directions. Mandy was still smiling.

Miss Bayrooty and Mandy were by no means the whole show. George Augur, the giant, held a one-hundred-dollar bill in real money high in air, and invited anybody who would to stand in a chair and seize it, to have it to hold forever. A reporter, with the lust for gain, essayed the feat, and failed, while the Lilliputians, the giantess, the fat lady, the dog-faced boy, and the bearded woman laughed at him.

Everything, including the refreshments, was under the management of Col. Tody Hamilton, Barnum & Bailey's paramount, peripatetic, pyrotechnic, palpitant, perspicacious, polysyllabic, perennial, pictorial, polite, perceptive, plastic, pallilogistic, practical, peerless, and preeminent press agent.

A TIMES FOUND IN THE BUSH.

Prospectors in Australia Read Every Word of It Though News Was Old.

Charles E. Ripley, a mining engineer of San Diego, California, is here on his way home from a three years' prospecting trip in Western Australia in search of gold. In speaking of his experiences, at the Grand Union Hotel yesterday, he incidentally told about finding in the Australian bush a copy of THE NEW YORK TIMES, dated Nov. 9, 1904.

"I found the paper," said Mr. Ripley, "at a point just below Mount Muller, which is situated right at the threshold of the Great Sandy Desert in Western Australia. With three other prospectors I had trekked from Bera Bera, and while we were making camp I came across a tin biscuit box hidden in a large rabbit burrow nearby. Out of the box I fished a well-fingered copy of THE TIMES six months old.

"The paper contained all the news about the election of President Roosevelt. It was the first newspaper we had seen for two months, and although much of its important foreign news was old to us the paper nevertheless was a valuable find, and especially so to me, as I was the only American in the party. We read every line in it from the motto down to the smallest 'ad.' On the blank margin on top of the front page there was scribbled in pencil:

> I leave this paper in the hope that the finder will derive from its perusal an hour's relaxation from the monotony of life in this hell of a country.
>
> Yours, UNCLE SAMUEL.

"After we had all got through reading the paper I put it back in the biscuit box and replaced the box in the rabbit burrow."

IVINS, WOODBURY INQUIRER.

To be Aldermen's Counsel in Street Cleaning Department Probing.

William M. Ivins, late Republican candidate for Mayor, is to be counsel for the Aldermanic committee which this week will take up the investigation of the Department of Street Cleaning under Commissioner Woodbury.

While no official announcement has yet been made, and while Mr. Ivins himself declines to discuss the matter at this time, it became known yesterday that for two weeks he has been aiding Alderman Griffenhagen, the Chairman of the investigators. Mr. Ivins has been going over the complaints filed with the committee and the evidence that is in hand. A definite announcement of the work to be taken up and the line to be followed will be made by Chairman Griffenhagen after the next meeting of the committee on Wednesday.

Both Commissioner Woodbury and Deputy Commissioner Gibson will have their own special counsel, independent of the Corporation Counsel's office. Commissioner Woodbury has retained Bowers & Sands and Capt. Gibson has the services of William Rand, Jr., ex-Assistant District Attorney.

THE DANGER OF SPLENDOR.

It Is Demoralizing All Classes, Says the Rev. Dr. Peters.

Pleasure seeking as a profession was what the Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters preached against in his third sermon for women in the Baptist Church of the Epiphany yesterday. His text was Timothy I., v. and vi., "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth."

The surrendering to the supreme demands of social life, he said, was an increasing evil among us, and plays an important part on the morals of the Nation. If "history is philosophy teaching by example," the American people should take warning, said Dr. Peters, for there is "no lesson plainer taught in the republics of history than that luxury, extravagance, and immorality, consequent upon vast wealth in the hands of a few, is the certain forerunner of decay."

Dr. Peters referred to the estimate of a writer that in New York there are 100 women who spend $30,000 each every year on dress, 1,000 who spend $15,000 each, and 5,000 who spend $5,000 each—6,100 women spending an aggregate of $43,000,000 a year.

"And this," said Dr. Peters, "in a city where more than 20 per cent. of the population are at some time in the year dependent upon charity for their daily bread; where one out of every ten is buried in the Potter's Field; where more than 20,000 evictions occur each year in the Borough of Manhattan alone; where 70,000 children go to school every morning without breakfast. It is true that the privileged classes can afford to do these things, but the splendor of which our extremely wealthy are so vainly fond is fast asserting itself with extraordinary virulence upon all classes, demoralizing not only the lower and the middle classes, but injuring the coming generation by the contempt thrown upon the sober virtues of industry and economy.

"I have seen in the palaces of the millionaires scenes of domestic bliss perfectly Edenic, but there are many palaces where wealth anticipates every want, and yet, where an ache sharper than consumption's tooth gnaws at the heart. In the rustling silk over $10,000 rugs you can hear the hiss of the adder, and through $20,000 tapestried walls come sobs like the simoon of the desert."

ARCHBISHOP OPENS MISSION.

New Institution to Care for Habitues of Bowery Lodging Houses.

The new Holy Name Mission established at 157 Bowery for the men who live in the lodging houses of that thoroughfare was blessed and formally opened by Archbishop Farley yesterday afternoon. The mission is the first institution of its kind established on the Bowery by the Catholic Church.

The limited space of the hall was taxed to its utmost to accommodate the crowd, all of whom were specially invited. Father Daniel C. Cunnion, who will be in charge of the mission, said that it was established principally as a rendezvous or meeting place for unfortunates of the Bowery district who have no place to go but the saloon. In cases of destitution the aim is to take care of the needy, at least temporarily.

"We have arranged with a number of lodging houses to supply homeless men with shelter for a brief period at least," said Father Cunnion. "The same arrangements have been made with nearby restaurants to give them meals."

Archbishop Farley, who is the originator of the scheme, then said:

"This has been my dream for several years. We have churches on both sides of the Bowery, but it has been left to the Salvation Army and similar organizations to provide comfortable places for these unfortunates to gather.

"This work will be endowed by the whole of the Holy Name Society of New York, the Knights of Columbus and other Catholic organizations and societies—and I also expect to contribute my little share. We hope to be the guardians of these poor fellows and be the means of fulfilling the prayers of the fathers and mothers of the wandering ones."

Father Cunnion read a letter from Mayor McClellan praising the work of the Mission of The Holy Name.

The building is three stories high. The second floor will be devoted to what Father Cunnion terms "trusties," or men who become regular attendants.

SKIPPER'S GOLDEN WEDDING.

Capt. and Mrs. Munson of Harlem Will Celebrate To-morrow.

Capt. and Mrs. John Noble Munson, who are old and well known residents of Harlem, will celebrate their golden wedding to-morrow evening by giving a reception at their home, 583 East 158th Street.

Capt. Munson, who is 73 years of age, his wife being 67, was formerly one of the best-known yachtsmen of this city. As the owner of the sloop yacht Game Cock he won the championship cup and pennant of Long Island Sound and the East River for several successive seasons in the early sixties.

He was a personal friend of C. Godfrey Gunther, Mayor of New York in 1864-66, and saved Amelia Augusta Gunther, the young daughter of the Mayor, from drowning off the Atlantic Highlands in 1866, when the mainsail of the yacht on which a party was sailing jibed and the boom swept the child overboard.

Capt. Munson brought the boat up into the wind, plunged overboard and dragged the child aboard again.

For seventeen years Capt. Munson has been an electrical engineer in the employ of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad.

TAFT TO SPEAK AT TUSKEGEE.

Celebration of the Institute's 25th Anniversary Begun.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., April 1.—The celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute was begun here to-day. Bishop Doane of Albany, N. Y., preached the anniversary sermon in the college chapel before a large congregation. Other exercises, at which prominent speakers from different parts of the United States will be present, will be held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Secretary Taft will deliver an address on Wednesday morning.

The keynote of Bishop Doane's sermon was "The Hope of the Negro Is in the Negro Himself." He urged the educated negroes to live among and uplift the illiterate and ignorant of their race, saying that the educated negroes had a responsibility far greater than many of them ever realized. He paid a high tribute to Dr. Washington and his work.

ARRESTED THE WATCHMEN.

The Police Thought They Might Be Burglars at Bernheim's.

Sergeant McEwan of the West 100th Street Station heard, late last night, that there were burglars in the house of Lewis Bernheim, at 122 West 120th Street. He hurried six of his men into a patrol wagon and made for the house on the double quick. The Bernheims had been robbed of several thousand dollars' worth of property a few weeks ago, and the Sergeant was anxious to wipe this blot off the precinct.

When the patrol wagon drew up to the house three innocent-looking men came out of the basement. They were seized at once. They said they were not burglars, but were employed by a protective agency and had responded to an alarm from the house.

They were taken to the station, however, and were held until the manager of the Protective Company identified them. They were Edward McCue, Samuel Silverstein, and Louis Fisher. Burglars may have been in the house, but the police could find no sign of them, and nothing was missing.

PARKER'S FRIENDS SEEK CONTROL IN THE STATE

Said to be Laying Plans to Block the Hearst Campaign.

MAURICE M. MINTON IN CHARGE

The Present Movement Started by the Same Persons That Nominated Parker at St. Louis.

Evidences of political activity on the part of the old friends and associates of ex-Judge Alton B. Parker have come to light in the last few days, and it is apparent that the old-line conservative Democrats intend to make a hot fight for control of the next Democratic State Convention. They are already gunning for the Hearst element and are in touch with leaders, big and small, in all sections of the State.

In the last few weeks letters have been sent broadcast over the State to State Committeemen, County Chairmen, district leaders, and party workers generally, inquiring after the local conditions in the party, its strength, the power of the conservative element, and making especial inquiries as to the strength that may have been developed by the radicals under the tutelage of the Hearst agents. Reports have been received from the various counties and the organization effected has been put in good working order, in the hands of Maurice M. Minton, who conducted the two-year preliminary campaign prior to the nomination of Judge Parker in 1904 for the Presidency.

All the work of the old Parker organization is being run from Minton's office, at 43 Exchange Place, and there is a string of up-State Democrats filing into his place of business every day, bringing in reports on conditions in their localities, furnishing lists of party workers, and getting advice and inspiration as to how they should best conduct the early stages of the fight. Apparently, the Gubernatorial campaign is the sole object of the activity of the old Parker managers. With the seeming knowledge and sanction of Judge Parker and ex-Lieut. Gov. William F. Sheehan, Minton's work has been going on for more than a year, but it has only been within the last few weeks that his activity has become general, and has extended beyond the knowledge of a half dozen or so of the up-State leaders who have been working in harmony with the entire propaganda.

Just what part Judge Parker and his law partner, Mr. Sheehan, are taking in the movement is something of a mystery, but that they are in harmony with what is being done is evident. Some of their personal friends from up the State have been referred by them to Minton to discuss party matters, and it is also apparent that ex-Senator David B. Hill and John B. Stanchfield figure in the situation. It is, in effect, the same contingent that started the Parker boom, and which carried it to a successful climax in the Democratic National Convention at St. Louis nearly two years ago.

At that time Minton had been the active agent and factor in the situation for months, had visited all parts of the country, and had directed the propaganda and the expenditures of the preliminary campaign funds. When the nomination was effected and the campaign ended in Parker's defeat, Minton held together the nucleus of the old organization that had made possible the nomination of Parker as against the Hearst propaganda and its lavish use of money. It has been upon this framework in this State that he has since been building for the Parker-Sheehan contingent. He declines to say anything about the work that is going on, but the scores of up-State Democrats who are coming to his office weekly show plainly its scope. Democrats in a position to know something of what is being done declared last night that the combination has no special candidate in view for the Gubernatorial nomination, but is working to develop the strongest possible conservative candidate, so as to name a winning ticket and defeat the Hearst element in the convention and in the campaign, should Hearst himself run on a third ticket.

CAUGHT BY WOMAN DETECTIVE

Miss Thompson Accuses Dock Department Clerk of Shoplifting.

Miss Gertrude Thompson, a detective in a Broadway store, appeared against a man who said he was Frank T. Earland of New Brighton, S. I., a Dock Department clerk. When Earland was arraigned in Jefferson Market Court yesterday, charged with grand larceny, Miss Thompson said:

"I saw this man take a couple of neckties on the ground floor of the store, and followed him upstairs. In the overcoat department he put on a new coat belonging to the store. I followed him downstairs and when he stepped outside I handed him over to Special Policeman Farrell."

The prisoner was held in $1,000 bail for a hearing to-morrow.

SPRING WON BIG ROAD RACE.

Marathon Runners Finished First and Second in Star A. C. Event.

Three members of the American team which will compete in the Olympic games at Athens took part in the Star Athletic Club road run yesterday. M. Spring of the Pastime Athletic Club turned tables on W. Frank of the Irish-American Athletic Club, and won by about fifteen yards. Frank defeated Spring in a similar race on the preceding Sunday. J. Forshaw of the Missouri Athletic Club, the Marathon champion, finished eighth in a field of twelve. The race was the last try-out for the Marathon runners, who will leave for Athens to-morrow.

Gen. Francis H. Harrington Dead.

NEW ORLEANS, April 1.—Brig. Gen. Francis H. Harrington of the United States Marine Corps, retired, died while on a visit to his son-in-law, Capt. Hall, at the naval station here to-day.

Gen. Harrington was born in the District of Columbia on June 2, 1844, and received his first commission in 1864. He served as Second Lieutenant on the Kearsarge in the Pacific fleet in 1867-70, and as First Lieutenant in the Juaniata on the European station, 1873-76, and in the training ship Saratoga, 1881-83. He was on the Panama expedition in 1885, and was promoted to Captain the same year. He served on the Pinta from 1889 to 1892, and then put in several years in the marine barracks at Boston, Washington, and Mare Island. He participated in the fighting at Guantanamo during the Spanish war. His last command was the marine brigade in the Philippines.

Jasper Lawman Dead.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 1.—Jasper Lawman, the landscape and portrait painter, died at his home here this morning. Had he lived until to-morrow he would have been 81 years old. He was born in Cleveland, and early developed a fondness for art and went abroad to study. He was a pupil of Couture, in Paris, and after completing his studies with him he toured Europe for several years. Upon returning to this country he made his home in Pittsburg, and here he spent most of his life.

Mr. Lawman painted portraits of Henry Ward Beecher and a number of other well-known Americans. He is survived by a wife and four daughters, Mrs. George Roebling and Mrs. Edgar Howarth of New York, Mrs. W. H. Loud of Boston, and Miss Mollie Lawman.

ROSEBEN GALLOPS FAST AT GRAVESEND TRACK

Carter Handicap Entry Has His Best Trial of the Season.

HORSES HAVE BRISK WORK

W. B. Jennings Arrives from San Francisco with Proper and Other Seasoned Horses.

The centre of training operations on Long Island, the Gravesend race track, attained the liveliest stage of its activity this Spring yesterday morning. The pleasant weather gave opportunity for much more than the usual amount of Sunday morning exercise, as the track was in better condition than it has been for two weeks.

The most notable horses that were out included the three Carter Handicap entries, Roseben and Jacquin, trained by Frank Weir, and the filly Whimsical, trained by T. J. Gaynor. The best move of the day was that by Roseben, a half mile in 0:52⅘, his fastest gallop of the Spring, and one that was completed in the most impressive style. The distance of the Carter is a trifle further than is believed to be best suited to the sprinter holding the world's six furlongs record, but Roseben has trained so well and looks so strong and fit that he is the horsemen's choice by almost unanimous consent, and even before his good gallop was rated the strongest favorite that the Carter Handicap has produced in its history.

There remains just fourteen days before the running of the race, which will allow Roseben about four more work days, and the horsemen in consequence have about ceased to look about for any entry to beat him. None of the horses handicapped higher than Roseben now are regarded as likely to start, and the indications are that Trainer Weir will trust Roseben alone, though Jacquin was sent a fair gallop.

Whimsical, one of the most conspicuous of the prospective starters against Roseben, had a good gallop and easily covered three furlongs in 0:41, her move being of a character to indicate that she will be ready for the race two weeks from to-day. Another of the smart fillies among last season's two-year-olds, Flip Flap, trained by A. J. Goldsborough, has been galloping as if she were meant for early racing, but it is likely that Flip Flap will make her first appearance for the year in stakes for three-year-olds.

Aside from the work of the Carter Handicap horses, the thoroughbreds that attracted the most attention were the many two-year-olds of Fred Burlew's big string, which worked in several sets and turned off quarters in about 0:25 with great ease. Burlew is preparing to be plentifully represented in the early races for two-year-olds, and has his charges in about the most forward condition of any of the young horses at Gravesend.

The most notable arrival of the day was that of Walter B. Jennings, from San Francisco, with a stable of eight seasoned horses from the Pacific Coast Winter campaign, which were unloaded at the Sheepshead Bay station of the Long Island Railroad. About the best-known horse in the stable is Proper, but Dainty will soon rejoin the establishment.

Benning Entries for To-day.

The Weather Outlook for April.

Ulsters and shirtwaists may be equally popular attire during the month which began yesterday, if the records of the Weather Bureau for the last thirty-five years are any criterion. Chief Forecaster Willis T. Moore explicitly says they are not. The records show, however, that the average normal temperature of April for more than a generation has been 49 degrees. The mercury has touched 90 (in 1896) and has been as low as 20, (April 5, 1874.) But the average even for that month was 41 degrees.

This Razor must pay for itself before You Pay me a Penny —and a Postal gets it. I Guarantee to Keep your Blades Sharp Forever Without Charge.

I am the man you hold personally responsible for every promise made in this advertisement.

P. C. SHERMAN.

WILL you let me send you a razor—without a cent deposit?

Then I will keep it sharp and keen for the rest of your life free.

That's my plan—my new plan of selling razors.

No other razor makers in the world sell razors this way—because they can't—their razors won't stand it. Mine will—it's the way it's made.

Now, I don't say "Send me the price of the razor, and if, after you have tried it, you find that it isn't all I claim, I will send your money back."—Not me.

On a "money back" proposition you may feel that there was some chance of not getting your money back if you wanted it—I won't let you feel that way about my razor.

For if the razor don't do all I say, you send it back at my expense and you're out nothing, for you've paid me nothing and you owe me nothing.

Simply do this—Send me your name, occupation, home and business address—and in any manner that is convenient or agreeable to you introduce yourself to me.

I'll take all the risk and send, prepaid, a Sterling Safety Razor with 24 blades, or an Old Style Interchangeable Razor with 12 blades.

When you have tested it 7 days, if you find it the finest and easiest shaving razor you ever used, keep it.

Then the razor must pay for itself—that's my new plan.

You see the average man should be shaved at least three times a week—at 15c a shave that's 45c a week for shaving.

So, if you decide to keep the razor, all I ask you to pay me is what you'd pay the barber—45c a week for a few weeks until the razor is paid for.

That way I make the barber buy you the razor.

At that my razor doesn't take any more money to pay for itself than you would have to pay out of your own pocket for an ordinary razor.

And I go even farther.

I see to it that your blades are kept sharp forever—free.

With any other safety razor you are always paying out money because you must keep on paying for new blades or resharpening as long as you live.

But with the Sterling all you do is, send me 12 dull blades, at any time, with 10 cents to cover postage, and I return them to you perfectly sharp free of charge.

That's really "no honing and no stropping."

Did you ever hear of anything as clever as this in the razor line?

It's this way—the reason I can make this offer is because I'm not in the least doubtful or afraid of my razor.

My STERLING blades are made of the finest razor steel that money can buy—costs me twice as much as the steel used in any other razor blades.

And mine is the only razor on the market that is made of genuine Sheffield steel—that is not a cold rolled steel.

With my careful, systematic process, each STERLING blade is hardened, tempered, ground and honed in oil, all by hand and then hand stropped—so that my razor must hold its edge.

And each of my STERLING blades must pass the SHERMAN test, the most rigid test to which a razor blade can be subjected.

No other razor blade could pass this test.

But I must make certain that the temper and cutting edge of every STERLING blade are perfect and lasting.

I cannot afford to pass any but faultless razor blades, because my razor is made to shave with, and not made to sell.

And because of all this I can afford—and am glad—to send you the razor prepaid for free trial without any deposit but your name and address and the introduction. You must introduce yourself to me or I'll have to write you to do so, and that will delay shipment of the Sterling.

You can buy the Sterling Razor for $5.00, but I am willing to send it to you and let it pay for itself.

Now—write me to-day, stating whether you wish the Safety or Old Style interchangeable, and let me send you the razor. State whether you wish to cut close or medium, and whether your beard is wiry or fine. Don't send me any money—only a postal.

Remember the razor is yours for a week free—then either keep it and let it pay for itself with the guarantee that I must keep the blades sharp forever—free—or return it to

A. A. U. ABANDONS CASE AGAINST M. W. SHEPPARD

Committee Cannot Reconcile the Conflicting Testimony.

RESERVES RIGHT OF RECALL

Irish-American A. C. Wants to Send Runner to Athens, but Entries Closed Two Weeks Ago.

The Scotch verdict of "Not Proven" was rendered by the Registration Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union in the case of Melvin W. Sheppard of the Irish-American Athletic Club, who was charged with competing in professional games at Maspeth, L. I., on Sept. 4, 1904, and Philadelphia on July 4, 1905. The finding of the committee fails to exonerate Sheppard from the charges and leaves a doubt as to his amateurism. The case has occupied the centre of the stage of the athletic world for the past month. A mass of conflicting testimony was presented to the committee, consisting of J. P. Boyle, Pastime Athletic Club, Chairman; John C. Stiel, New York Turnverein, and Michael Flynn, Star Athletic Club.

Hallen, a professional runner, brought the charges against Sheppard, and at the previous meetings of the committee, positively identified Sheppard as having competed in the professional races in question. Last night he appeared before the committee and stated that he had made a mistake as to the identity of Sheppard in the Philadelphia professional games and wished to correct his evidence in this particular instance. He said that he had been convinced of his mistake by Peter Hegleman, the long-distance professional runner, who had competed in the disputed race, and two other witnesses, who were present.

The Registration Committee is not satisfied that the charges against Sheppard were either proved or disproved. It was a question of veracity, and the members did not feel able to decide which statements were truth, and rendered the following decision:

> Resolved—As the evidence produced on both sides in the matter of the investigation of the charges against Melvin W. Sheppard before the Registration Committee is not deemed satisfactory to the committee for the purpose of dismissing or sustaining the charges, and there being no present prospects of procuring more satisfactory testimony and proof the committee has resolved to proceed no further at present, and will drop the charges, at the same time reserving the right to renew the present charges and investigation on its own motion.

In explanation of the motion Chairman Boyle said that it restored Sheppard to his former amateur standing and dismissed the charges against him, but did not entirely remove the suspicions against him. It gives Sheppard the right to compete in any amateur games without protest, but reserves the right to the committee to reopen the case at any time should further evidence be forthcoming.

President P. J. Conway of the Irish-American Athletic Club, after the decision was rendered, announced that if the American Committee on the Olympic Games declined to send Sheppard to Athens to-morrow the Irish-American Athletic Club would send him.

It has been the general impression that if Sheppard was exonerated he would be included in the American team, but it is impossible to include him now, as the entries for the events closed over two weeks ago.

Julian W. Curtiss of the American Committee, in discussing the possibility of Sheppard's being included in the team, said: "It has been the object of the Committee on Olympic Games to select only those athletes whose record is beyond question. The entries are all closed, and it does not seem to me that any action is now possible. Personally I think it would be a great mistake to send Sheppard. I do not know anything about the case, nor do I know Sheppard. I would prefer for America not to be represented at Athens rather than have any man go whose record is questioned."

Slosson's High Billiard Average.

George F. Slosson defeated Ferdinand Poggenburg yesterday at 18.2 balk-line billiards by the score of 500 to 29. Slosson was in splendid form and averaged 45 5-11, with high runs of 170 and 134. Poggenburg's average was 2 7-11. Slosson will play Harry Cline of Philadelphia every afternoon and evening of this week.

Killed His Brother's Murderer.

NATCHEZ, Miss., April 1.—Harry Beard, a well-known planter, who lived near Vidalia, was waylaid and killed last night by a negro employe with whom he had a disagreement some months ago. Charles Beard, brother of the dead man, who was with him at the time, shot and killed the negro.

PLAN AUTO CAMPAIGN IN GENERAL MEETING

Racing and Touring Problems May Be Simplified This Week.

PHILADELPHIA DIRECTOR OUT

Defection of Pennsylvania Clubs Will Cause Changes—Hard Work Needed in Good Roads Movement.

When the Directors of the American Automobile Association meet on Thursday of this week at the Automobile Club of America they will find more than the usual number of important subjects awaiting their attention. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., is expected to be present, and it is believed that he will discuss with the entire board the changes and conditions for the Vanderbilt Cup race. The meeting of the Racing Board, therefore, may be consolidated into a general conference on racing matters with the Directors' meeting. President John Farson and Secretary S. S. Gorham, who will both arrive in the city this week from Chicago, have expressed a wish to attend the first meeting of the Racing Board, and by combining all of these interests of the American Automobile Association in the general meeting time will be saved and as good, if not better, results may be obtained.

No confirmation has yet been given by Chairman Jefferson De Mont Thompson that he is to ask ex-Chairman Robert Lee Morrell to become a member of the board, but there are strong reasons for believing that such will be the case. It is barely possible that other changes may occur. Many automobilists are wondering why Mr. Morrell was not asked to serve on the board in the first place, but even at this eleventh hour, when his presence seems necessary in the interests of automobile harmony and good fellowship, it is universally hoped in motor circles that he will accept the office.

Paul Deming, the Chairman of the Touring Committee, will doubtless be present, and if so automobilists will be glad if the Directors or his Touring Committee will make an early announcement of the plans for the much-discussed Glidden Cup tour. In the present unsettled state of affairs, suggestions for new routes are coming to the front nearly every week. As nobody has established anything definite, every one seems to feel that he can exert the much-needed influence.

Another matter of vital interest affecting the welfare and growth of the association that will be seriously discussed is the action of the Philadelphia and Pittsburg clubs in refusing to remain longer in the American Automobile Association ranks. They have formed a State federation of their own. Both of these clubs had Directors on the American Automobile Association board. H. Bartol Brazier of the Philadelphia Club has already sent his resignation to Secretary Gorham. W. C. Temple is the Pittsburg Director. He was very active in American Automobile Association matters two years ago, and was seriously talked of as Chairman of the Racing Board.

The report that will be presented by Asa Goddard regarding the condition of roads in New England will probably pave the way toward exerting greater influence upon individual clubs, through the National body, to work for better roads, and, having got them, to see that they are properly maintained. For roads that are supposed to be good, Mr. Goddard found many stretches of the Boston-New York route in lamentable condition. The American Automobile Association is taking a greater interest than hitherto in the good-roads problem, and Mr. Goddard is about to gather data on roads and possible improvements in the West, working first under the auspices of the recently organized Ohio State Automobile Association.

INDOOR TENNIS LEAGUE.

New York, Boston, and Philadelphia Players Interested.

Lawn tennis players have begun the organizaton of a league for indoor play which will assume considerable importance to the sport. Already New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and Philadelphia organizations have shown an enthusiastic support of the idea. The plan was brought into action by the recent dual competitions in singles and doubles between the Seventh Regiment team and those of the Brooklyn Heights Casino. During the playing of these matches it was developed that several of the regiments in this city and Brooklyn were fostering the sport in their armories. That the success of the Seventh Regiment each year in holding the National championship since it became a failure at Tuxedo had led the Boston militiamen to take up indoor lawn tennis, and also the Philadelphia Cricket Club, of which A. L. Hoskins of the Executive Committee of the National Association is foremost in lawn tennis affairs.

Holcombe Ward, who is to be a member of the international American challenging team, has practiced considerably indoors during the Winter against Malcolm D. Whitman and others at the New York Lawn Tennis Building in West Forty-first Street, and also at the Casino, Brooklyn, where he has met Frederick B. Alexander, Hugh Tallant, and a number of the ex-collegiate champions. In fact, the opening of the Casino brought about a remarkable impetus to the indoor play. Beals C. Wright, the National champion, who will also be of the American international team, has been getting his strokes early in order on the Boston Cadets' courts.

The meeting for the formation of the league for indoor lawn tennis will be held within a few days, William B. Cragin, Jr., of the Seventh Regiment, and Hugh Tallant, Brooklyn Heights Casino, heading the movement. The organization will be perfected before the outdoor season begins, so that the Autumn season indoors may begin with an inter-city championship in which New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and Philadelphia will be represented. There is also planned an inter-regimental series of handicaps, and also a championship in this city, as already courts in the armory of the Twelfth Regiment, Ninth Regiment, and Twenty-second Regiment are in use, while in Brooklyn the Twenty-third Regiment has already aranged for a dual meet in the Autumn with the players of the Seventh Regiment.

OLYMPIC ATHLETES ARRIVE.

Five More Reach New York, and Last Two Came To-day.

The final roll call of the American Olympic team will take place at the New York Athletic Clubhouse at 5 o'clock this afternoon, when all the members of the team to sail to-morrow on the Barbarossa for Athens, via Naples, will be gathered together. All but two are now in New York, A. B. Glover, the Purdue University pole vaulter, and Eli B. Parsons, the Yale half miler, being scheduled to arrive this forenoon. Four of the team reached the city yesterday afternoon and were quartered at the New York Athletic Club, while another arrived at midnight.

The first to reach the city were the two Chicago University boys, J. J. Lightbody and Hugo Friend. Both were in splendid condition, and looked fit to sprint for Olympic championships to-morrow. Friend is in better shape than he has been in a year, and expects to do better in both hurdle and broad jump than he has ever done in competition. Last year when he was bothered by a sprained ankle he jumped 22 feet 11 inches, while in practice prior to his accident he had cleared 23 feet 6 inches. He expects to reach or better the latter figures at Athens.

Lightbody has been running indoor at Chicago all Winter and is fit.

The second pair to arrive were from Boston. R. G. Leavitt, the old Williams hurdler, now representing the Boston Athletic Association, and J. J. Fowler, the Marathon runner, representing the Cambridgeport Gymnasium, came in early in the afternoon. Fowler met Forshaw, the St. Louis long-distance man, at the clubhouse, and the two were plainly interested in each other. Leavitt said he thought he would be able to equal his college record of 0:15 4-5 in the high hurdle and might beat his low hurdle mark.

H. J. Bornemann, the Chicago Athletic Association diver, got in at midnight, making the last of the lot to come except Parsons and Glover.

GIANTS WIN AT LOUISVILLE.

Champions Use Sixteen Players and McGann Makes Only Error.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, April 1.—The New York team this afternoon easily defeated the Louisvilles of the American Association by the score of 7 to 3. It was a question of class and condition. As the Giants excelled in both qualities the result was a foregone conclusion. Nearly all the runs were made as the result of bases on balls, due to the fact that the pitchers had not been able to get into first-class condition on account of bad weather.

Outside of the wildness of young Ferguson the New York team played a beautiful game on a soggy field. The fielding of the visitors often electrified the big crowd, which almost continually cheered the champions. Manager McGraw took part in the game in the last three innings, and with the assistance of Robinson and McGann pulled off a fast double play.

The general impression among the local "fans" after seeing the Giants play to-day, is that the team which will represent New York this season is much stronger than it was last year. This belief is based on the great strength which has been added to the pitching department. The score:

THE DAY ON THE SPEEDWAY.

Many Light Harness Drivers Out for First Work of Season.

The Springlike weather yesterday brought out a number of light-harness drivers on the Speedway. The road was in fair condition on the long stretches, but somewhat heavy in certain spots. There were few brushes, the drivers contenting themselves with easy jogging. Many of the horses were high in flesh, and showed the benefit of the long Winter rest. M. Cosgrove, driving Rosebrine, engaged in two lively brushes with W. Cunningham behind Trixie. Andrew Crawford drove Invader both morning and afternoon. Capt. J. C. Fleming's team made a good showing, and John F. Cockerill sent Honor Bright and Grace several fairly good miles.

Among the others who were seen on the Speedway were L. M. Boynton and Dada Bell, Dr. H. D. Gill and Lady Direct, A. L. Meyer and Bertha M., W. M. Jermyn and Boraima's Brother, Nathan L. Ely and Fantana, George A. Coleman and Kingmond, W. Cahill and Charles Brandon, Elmer Stevens and Fannie K., Joseph Wegman and Pioneer, Harry Phillips and Jim Shevlin, Harry L. Toplitz and Judge Boardman, B. Stillings and Miss Janet, and Joseph F. Gibbons, who drove a new pacer, but declined to tell its name.

Educational Alliance Football.

By winning yesterday the Carlyle team ties with the Wordsworth eleven for the Association Football Cup, offered by the Educational Alliance for competition among the eight teams of the association. The game, which was played at Bronx Oval, resulted in a score of 2 to 1. Both teams have won 11 games and lost 2. Line-up:

Carlyle, 2.	Positions.	Wordsworth, 1.
Krone	Goal	Fleishman

Goals—M. Leder, Brown, Aleinikoff. Referee—T. H. Tabor of the Boys' Club. Time of game—Thirty-minute halves.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Besides the Directors' meeting of the American Automobile Association this week, there will be important meetings of the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers and the Licensed Association. The latter body will discuss the show question next year. The members of the mechanical branch of the Licensed Association will meet on Friday.

E. R. Hollander of the Hol-Tan Company sailed for Europe last week. During his absence he will visit the Fiat factory at Turin, and he will probably complete arrangements for the entry of a Fiat team in the Vanderbilt Cup race. Mr. Hollander stated some time ago that Lancia would surely drive again, but some change will be made in the other drivers of the Italian cars.

Charles J. Glidden, the world-touring autoist, reached Colombo, the capital of Ceylon, on March 8, having completed a motor trip of 1,334 miles in Ceylon. He found good roads, and after staying in Colombo a day or two left for Cochin-China. Since Dec. 1, when Mr. Glidden began his India trip, he has traveled 6,248 miles by automobile.

E. W. Sutphen of the English Daimler Automobile Company will sail for Europe this week. It has been rumored that one or more English Daimlers will be entered for the Vanderbilt Cup race, and Mr. Sutphen hopes to make final arrangements for this purpose during his absence abroad.

According to the lastest statistics, Michigan produces more automobiles than any other State in the Middle West. In the 34 plants located there, 13,702 motor cars were built during the past year, an average of 403 to each concern. The total value of the cars was $18,061,900, averaging $1,317 per car.

The automobile stage line instituted in the Nevada desert from Goldfield to the Bullfrog district, a distance of eighty miles, is in prosperous operation. The automobile road, which is not the same as taken by the regular stage line, is in excellent condition. The machines used are Pope-Toledos, the cars being equipped with special bodies seating nine persons.

A five-hundred-mile reliability trial was recently held from Gothenburg to Stockholm under the auspices of the Swedish Automobile Club. The contest was won by a 24 horse power Fiat car, and a 12 horse power Darracq was second.

Notes of the Oarsmen.

President James Pilkington has taken up the Pelham Bay regatta course project again. He is anxious to get the Harlem River clubs interested in the proposition, and will shortly call a meeting for the purpose of appointing committees to complete the preliminary details, which were begun last Fall. Mr. Pilkington will see the members of the Park Commission in the near future to secure their approval before going ahead with any more plans. He expects to see the work started on the course before the Summer.

The membership of the new Hudson River Rowing Association now includes the following clubs: Atlantic, Active, Bloomingdale, Hudson, Waverley, Woodcliffe, and Valencia. George A. Hitchcock, Active Boat Club, is President; H. J. Lang, Bloomingdale Boat Club, Secretary, and E. A. Thygerson, Woodcliffe Boat Club, Treasurer. The selection of the date for the first regatta will be decided at the next meeting of the association, which will be held at the Atlantic Boat Club house next Sunday.

There was a good representation of oarsmen on the Harlem River yesterday. The Metropolitan, Dauntless, Union, Nassau, First Bohemian, Wyanoke, Nonpareil, Crescent, Atalanta, and Harlem Clubs sent out big delegations. The weather was delightful and the first real practice rows of the season took place.

Capt. Callahan of the Metropolitans sent out a senior and intermediate four in the morning, and Putnam, Groden, Thompson, and Hertel, the promising junior four, showed up well in the afternoon. The Nassau Club was represented by over a dozen men, and a lively season is expected. The club will enter crews in all the local organization regattas. The Nonpareil double—C. S. Titus and J. O'Neill—who are planning to enter the Hamburg Regatta next July, were out twice, while Fred Fuessell and Julius Bradley, the New Harlem Rowing Club pair, made an excellent showing. Capt. Nagle looks for big things from Fuessell and Bradley this Summer.

Prominent among the oarsmen who were on the Harlem River yesterday were J. F. O'Connor, A. Nichol, A. C. Wickers, G. F. Weiman, P. A. Chanut, W. A. Kohler, and G. B. Hayward, Nassau Boat Club; Robert Hardy, C. Putnam, W. S. Dunn, Andrew Corbett, Robert Graham, Louis River, and J. Callahan, Metropolitan Rowing Club; C. S. Titus and J. F. O'Neill, Nonpareil Rowing Club; W. H. Hart, P. Kyte, J. Villam, Charles Plsveye, Louis Major, J. Sedlack, and J. Kaser, First Bohemian Boat Club; Fred Fuessell, W. A. Neal, Warren Grayley, and J. Bradley, Harlem Rowing Club; W. Turner, G. Betts, and J. Pattenaude, Crescent Boat Club, and others from the Dauntless, Union, Atalanta, Lone Star, and Friendship Clubs.

THE FATE OF FOOTBALL IN HANDS OF OFFICIALS

Rules Committee Puts Responsibility on Men on Field.

MUST LIVE UP TO THE CODE

Success of Its Earnest Efforts to Remodel Game Depends on Them—Central Board's Plans.

When the American Intercollegiate Football Rules Committee adjourned at the Murray Hill Hotel on Saturday it was with a consciousness of work well done. During the past month the committee has received many letters commending the thoroughness of its work and the spirit that has actuated its deliberations. There can be no question that, without unduly sacrificing the game, it has conceded all the legitimate demands for reform and has produced a code, which so far as any man can tell, will eliminate all the objectionable features complained of.

The committee feels that the success of its efforts depends largely upon the work of the officials who are to serve on the field. Laxity and negligence can undo all the good that has been done. It is essential if the new code is to be tried with absolute assurance of eliminating malpractice that competent officials shall be secured who will interpret the rules alike and who will enforce them strictly in spirit and in letter. Upon the committee of five appointed on Friday devolves the responsibility of enforcement. They will act as the Central Board of Officials and will carry out the purpose of the General Committee in their appointment. The exact plan that they will follow has not been definitely laid down, but a pretty clear idea of their purposes was obtained from the full discussion of the subject in the Murray Hill Hotel conference. Prof. James J. Babbett of Haverford College, who is the chairman of the committee, said on the subject yesterday:

"It is not the purpose of this committee to enforce any drastic regulations or to take the jurisdiction or independence of action away from any institution or student organization. It plans to act distinctly in an advisory capacity for the present, with special endeavor to establish an esprit de corps and proper spirit that we wish to exist in the football department of every institution.

"The committee desires to co-operate in every possible way with every local effort which is being made to observe and carry out the spirit of the rules formulated. So far as feasible it will act as a central board of appeal to instruct in the proper interpretation of the rules, enlarge where possible the group of desirable officials, and, if requested by universities and colleges, assist in the selection and appointment of officials. It will work entirely in harmony with the present group of well-known and competent officials and will endeavor, so far as possible, to preserve the present non-professional type of officiating in intercollegiate games. Sub-sectional committees will be formed throughout the country to aid in carrying out the detail work of the Central Committee."

Prof. Babbett further said that the committee of which he is Chairman, which includes Prof. L. M. Dennis of Cornell, Walter Camp of Yale, Prof. J. B. Fine of Princeton, and Prof. C. W. Savage of Oberlin, would meet in New York from time to time during the next four or five months and gradually form and carry out the plans outlined. They will first appoint sectional boards in various parts of the country, conforming the seven subdivisions introduced by the General Football Conference last December.

It is intended that these boards shall gather from the various universities and colleges that will accept the new rules and play under them a list of officials who are considered competent and trustworthy. The ability of these men will be carefully investigated and the results tabulated, so the various colleges may have before them when the time comes to select officials a list of names of those deemed competent. No college will be required to accept these names, but there will be no excuse for inefficiency in officials not named on official lists.

Another phase of the football meeting that is interesting and on which little stress was laid is the fate of the project for a field laboratory. In speaking of this feature Prof. Fine, who was a member of the committee appointed to provide for that point, said:

> The idea of a field laboratory met with unanimous approval both within and without the committee, but under present conditions it is impractical, and will not be tried. Were the changes less radical, the plan might be worked out advantageously, but where could we get men who could test the value of such plays as the forward pass will introduce, or the "onside kick," to coin a phrase? With a new system of play entirely and radically different from anything we have had before there are no men capable of giving an exposition of its possibilities until they are developed by a year's actual practice on the field. Another year the field laboratory will doubtless prove a good thing.

This was a $950 Cadillac in the hands of a well-known insurance manager whose letter we have on file. "I am frank to say," reads the letter, "that I do not think there is any other single cylinder car, or in fact very many higher power cars, that can show this performance for a period of nine months."

The experience of every Cadillac owner points to the same facts—ease of operation, low cost of up-keep, economy of fuel, and never-failing service. Come and have a ride in the model you like best.

THE WALTERS PIANO CO.
Manufacturers of
HIGH-GRADE PIANOS,
226 & 228 East 63d St.

Messrs. Bloomingdale Bros.

Gentlemen:—We accept your order for 500 of our beautiful Walters Belford Pianos, to be delivered to you in time for your Easter sale.

These pianos are the finest that skilled labor can build. The design of the cases is original, beautiful and attractive. We have put our expert knowledge into every detail of these Walters Belford Pianos. They are creations in piano construction and

Masterpieces of Piano Building

We do not know of a piano (and we are acquainted with almost every piano that is manufactured) at double the price you are going to offer these pianos for that will equal them in tone, durability, beauty of design and workmanship. It is an opportunity rarely heard of where one can become the possessor of the highest grade piano at ONE-HALF ITS WORTH, on such liberal terms as you offer.

These Walters Belford Pianos are one of the handsomest and most beautiful pianos we have ever made. Their tone is one of the main features, being rich, mellow and resonant; the touch is exceptionally elastic and responsive.

The 500 pianos we are making for you will be sold very quickly, and it will be the cause of making lifelong friends for the house of Bloomingdale Brothers. Yours respectfully,

The Walters Piano Company.

A DEMOCRATIC HOUSE?

Our Washington dispatches report that the Republican leaders go in fear of a Democratic majority in the House of Representatives in the next Congress, while the Democratic leaders seem less sure of the change and not too eager for it.

The impression in the country generally is, we think, that it is high time for a change, and that one would pretty surely take place if the opposition party were in a state of morale and organization to make the most of the discontent actually existing with the party in power, but that this is so far from being the case that the Republicans are likely to rub along with a reduced majority. Close observers of the currents of popular sentiment in specific localities, and there are no closer than the Republican leaders, see, however, symptoms that the Republicans will not be able to resist the adverse forces which, disparate as they undoubtedly are, may be united against them next Fall. The chief of these forces are directly inconsistent one with the other. On the one hand, there is a strong feeling that the Administration and the party in Congress are more or less directly responsible for the scandals that have been recently exposed, of which the heavy campaign contributions in the year 1904 were so prominent a feature, and to this feeling is added the resentment of organized labor at the failure to comply with the demands of the trades unions as to labor measures. On the other hand, there is a rather deeply rooted distrust among conservative men of the policy of the Administration and of the House of Representatives on questions like that of railway rate regulation.

Certainly the classes affected by the first of these feelings have little in common with the class affected by the latter, and it is not easy to see for what definite end they may unite. That, nevertheless, will not necessarily prevent them from uniting. An adverse majority in the House of Representatives is not a revolutionary happening for an Administration in the latter half of its term. It has occurred so frequently that until recently it was regarded rather as the rule than the exception. Nor is it unprecedented that such a thing should follow a tremendous victory for the party temporarily rebuked. The then unprecedented triumph of the Republican Party in the second election of President GRANT did not prevent the advent of a Democratic House from the elections of 1874. So long as the party in power retains its hold on the Senate its discontented members do not feel any great qualms in tumbling them out of the House. It is far from improbable that this may be done this year.

What the ultimate result would be it is impossible even to surmise with any definiteness. One thing we can be pretty sure of. If there is to be a Democratic House opening its first session in December, 1907, and sitting well into the Presidential campaign of 1908, the party will have a chance to show what it really wishes, to discuss with some sense of responsibility what its course shall be for that campaign, and thus to offer to the country a more definite choice than it has had in a good many years. It will be a great opportunity and a severe test.

AS TO DISHONEST JUDGES.

Mr. A. S. GILBERT, in a letter which we published yesterday, argues that the bill abolishing the rotation of Judges in the Municipal Court districts is right. Mr. GILBERT says that those who favor the Judges' rotating from district to district proceed on the assumption that every Judge is dishonest, that he cannot be trusted to sit in the district which elected him. He assumes that they are all honest, but that some of them are slothful, and that the court calendar, for example, in Judge FALLON's district, which is the Ninth Judicial District, is topladen and congested when that earnest, hard-working, and competent Judge finally gets around there in the orderly course of rotation. Mr. GILBERT further states that Judge WORCESTER, of the Eleventh District, is unfamiliar with the German, Polish, Yiddish, Russian, Italian, and other sprinkling of tongues in the Fifth, so that he is unfitted to hold court in this district to which rotation must assign him.

We would ask Mr. GILBERT whether, in his estimation, the Fifth Judicial District ought to be equipped with a polyglot Judge, jury, and court attendants to accommodate its divers nationalities, or whether that were at all requisite or possible in American procedure. By our law every litigant is entitled to the stenographic notes in his case, part of which perforce are in English, and for this purpose the translation by the interpreter is as necessary for the litigant as for the presiding Judge.

The nine o'clock rule for opening court is stricken out in the bill. Does our correspondent suppose that thereby the indolent Judges who are now "ten o'clock scholars" would hereafter open court much before noon? And if they sat, vegetated, rotted out their terms in their own districts, where would be the Fallon to come in and detect their plight and drag forth their musty calendars?

The intent of the present municipal system is not to keep dishonest Judges rotating, as Mr. GILBERT thinks—though rotation breaks the continuity of dishonest schemes—but to prevent the election of such Judges. Everybody knows that we are exposed to having districts governed by corrupt political leaders, in which an honest Judge, if compelled to sit out his term, cannot remain honest and keep his job. In such conditions honest men would be rapidly succeeded by Judges selected to respond upon occasion to pressure from the corrupt leaders of their districts. The circumstances and incidents leading to the removal from the bench of Judge HERMAN BOLTE, and to the institution of the present system, furnished ample proof that it is beneficial to rotate the Municipal Court Judges from under the thumbs of their district leaders, and to place them in courts where they may exercise their judgment unperturbed.

In the County of New York, in the Supreme Court, General Sessions, Special Sessions, Surrogates' Court, City Court, and Magistrates' Courts—in the whole State judiciary, in fact, rotation is the rule. Why except the Municipal Court?

FROM ALASKA TO PATAGONIA.

Under the title "The Pan-American Railway" Mr. CHARLES M. PEPPER contributes to the current number of Scribner's Magazine the first of a series of articles on "The Railways of the Future." A generation has passed since HINTON ROWAN HELPER produced his project of the "Three Americas Railway," and to the cursory observer the execution of it looks as far off as ever. "Alaska to Patagonia" is, to be sure, for any practical purpose of the near future, only a "geographical expression." But the reader of Mr. PEPPER's paper, who reads it in connection with his sketch map of the hemisphere, will wonder mainly at the extent of work that has already been done and that would be available as parts of the stupendous whole. There are now no gaps from New York to the border of Guatemala. The gaps in Central America aggregate some 1,200 miles, in Colombia 845, in Ecuador 455, in Peru 1,285, in Bolivia 180, which brings us to the frontier of the Argentine Republic. In South America the road naturally follows the axis of the Andes, utilizing the astonishing Oroya Railroad, built a generation ago, and graphically described at the time of its opening by WILLIAM HENRY HURLBERT. A startling suggestion for the Peruvian missing link is the utilization of the "old stage road" of the Incas, which is likely to be found the line of least resistance, just as the Union Pacific travels almost exactly "the old Mormon trail."

To be sure, there is a good deal of land left to the southward between the Argentine frontier and Cape Horn, just as there is a good deal to the northward of Vancouver, where the Pan-American would invade the "territory" of the Bering Straits Road. But the Argentine frontier Mr. PEPPER takes provisionally as his terminus. From this point a transcontinental line to Rio Janeiro is projected, and from that, again, a spur northward to Pernambuco. But it is only the 10,000-mile stretch from New York to the Rio Quiaca that Mr. PEPPER takes into practical consideration as the trunk line of the Pan-American. To complete this there are needed 4,000 miles of road, the cost of which he estimates at $160,000,000, or $40,000 a mile. Mr. PEPPER gives figures going to show that the actual links in Central and South America were built for less money.

Evidently the financial obstacle is by no means insuperable. There are individual Americans who could build the road out of their own pockets, and would do so if they were once convinced that it could be made to pay. Every Government concerned is already at work on local roads which would and could be incorporated in the Pan-American, and every one would of course contribute its good-will to the total scheme. If the Pan-American be only a dream it is an impressive dream. But in our time we have seen stranger dreams come true.

THE PRICE OF IMMIGRANTS.

It is a curious coincidence that the arrival of 11,383 immigrants in a single day should happen just as Congress is considering increasing the restrictions upon such candidates for American citizenship, or perhaps we should rather say for American wages. One bill imposes a head tax of $40, which would be, and perhaps was meant to be, prohibitory. The bill which was reported to the Senate on Thursday increases the duty, or head tax, to $5. Uncle Sam does not need the money, but he thinks it well to make the business pay the expense of conducting it.

Canada's policy is different. Canada pays a bounty. She snaps up our recruits under our noses, and even entices away our citizens, with pockets full of money to pay for cheap Canadian lands. This may or may not operate as a sort of mortgage upon the Dominion, which we shall foreclose when mutually agreeable. As to that we express no opinion. What concerns us at the moment is that while we levy customs upon newcomers Canada has paid to scores of her agents in our Western States $3 per man, $2 per woman—something too cheap that—and $1 per child. Commissions are also paid to agents across the ocean upon a scale indicated by the fact that a single railway is said to have 2,500 agents in the United States.

Which leads us to ask, Why do we deport immigrants when they are salable to Canada? It may be objected that they are not ours to sell, but that could be obviated by giving them their freedom when they put us in position to collect Canada's bounty rather than against their will return whence they came. No objection need be anticipated from Canada, for their appetite for population is keener than ours, and what we reject would be acceptable. Even without any special arrangements Canada last year bought $14,428 worth of American immigrants. We admit this is surprising, for we did not imagine that any one could be induced to go to Canada for the sum named. We were aware that many thousands were crossing the boundary in search of cheap farms, but we never heard any of that class accepting a price for themselves. Possibly the price was collected by ticket agents and immigration societies unawares to the emigrants themselves.

Canada, as it appears from a return in The Toronto Globe, pays highest for Icelanders at £1 per head, children half price. This rather wounds our self-love, for even Americans who sell themselves ought to be worth more than any other nationality which does the same thing, but at least Americans are worth more than Englishmen. Seven shillings for Englishmen and twenty shillings for foreigners is the regular tariff. Altogether Canada bought last year $102,663 worth of population, and wants more of the same at regular rates. The Toronto Globe throws doubt upon the wisdom of this bounty system. It is not our place to intervene, but we should really like to know why Englishmen are placed at the bottom of the scale, when the highest preference is given to British goods. If Icelanders are worth £1, are not Englishmen worth more than 7 shillings?

THE MORTGAGE TAX CAMPAIGN.

The present state of public opinion is such that, while some would be especially careful about publishing unfounded assertions and aspersing motives, others would improve the opportunity to deepen the irritation and unrest. So long as this is a mere matter of newspaper policy it is no especial concern of ours, but we are concerned not to let such a policy endanger legislation which we regard in the public interest. We have heretofore expressed approval of the principle of the mortgage tax amendments, and we regret to see that they are opposed by misstatements meriting correction.

We refer to the assertion that the bill will "defraud" the State of millions of dollars. Insinuations that $500,000 is "coming up"—whatever that may mean—we leave to others to deal with, having no information regarding them, and not believing that those making the insinuations have any more. In our opinion the statement that—

> The men who have undertaken the contract to kill the mortgage tax are said to be bound by an agreement by which they will receive 5 per cent. of the amount they save the companies by its repeal—is not fit to be printed unless the publisher is in position to prove it. Whether it be true or false, the assertion has nothing to do with the merits of the bill, for a good law might be supported by indefensible methods. It is very different with assertions which go to the merits of the proposed law, and which are falsified by the law itself. For example, Senator LEWIS has been quoted publicly as saying:

> If the mortgage tax law is permitted to remain on the statute books until July 1 it will yield the State $6,000,000. If it is repealed the State will not secure any revenue to speak of. The corporations have seemingly entered into a deal to hold back the payment of the tax on mortgages to give the promoters of the scheme to repeal it a chance to get in their fine work.

And yet the bill reads thus:

> Section 22. All taxes imposed by or which became due, payable, or collectible on or before the 30th day of June, 1906, pursuant to Chapter 729 of the Laws of 1905, shall be imposed, become due, be payable and collectible, and shall be paid over and distributed in the same manner and with the same force and effect as if this act had not been enacted; and for the purpose of collecting, paying over, distributing, and enforcing any such taxes, Chapter 729 of the Laws of 1905 shall be deemed to be in force, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

No taxes, therefore, can be escaped by the enactment of the law. Nor do we regard the statement that the State would lose money by the enactment of a bad law any reason for its passage. The State is in no such need of money that it can afford to secure it in this manner. The proceeds of the stock tax law are enough larger than expectation to offset any loss from the repeal of the mortgage tax, the proceeds of which are grossly overestimated, in our opinion. We should judge the law to be well on its way to enactment when imputation of motives and misleading statements of fact are resorted to by its opponents.

BAY RUM AND TEETOTALISM.

New England's efforts to promote abstinence among her people have, taken altogether, been vigorous and sustained, and a measure of success has crowned them, though they may not have met all the expectations of the primeval teetotalers who gave the scheme its first push. There were a good many obstacles in the way besides the open and visible ones, and the road of reform, like Jordan, was a hard one to travel. Old interests and rooted appetites had to be battled with, and when the rum demon itself, throned on its basis of jugs, mugs, kilderkins, and other wicked depositories, was whacked on the head and rolled over in the dust, as it was sometimes in some places, it was found that that demon aforesaid had a great host of allies masquerading in weeds of innocence, and that these had not been touched at all. There were the long lists of patent medicines for one thing. Imps of the bottle and the pit had had a finger in mixing most of them, but with all the saloons shut, the righteous, athirst, could fall back on them assured of a measure of solace, violating no virtuous convention and involving no loss of social standing or character. What barrels of ginger extract, what floods untold of fortified fluids of various name but common remedial pretension, have been then and there consumed since the teetotal movement set in in days so far off that they seem but as phantoms of days pale with the discovery, though it was not altogether a new one, and perhaps not a true one, that virtue and cakes and ale could not go together. They are—that is, those floods are—even as the tides of New England's encircling seas, their Propontic flood so far knowing no retiring ebb, and with none even hinted at.

As having a bearing on the subject at large it has now been found out by the tonsorial guild at Holyoke, a Massachusetts town always celebrated for its reformatory activities, that the use of bay rum in their business sets up an imaginative action in the minds of their customers, impelling them to rush off and take a drink as soon as they can get outside of the shop. The local scientist explains the impulse on the ground that the bay rum absorbed by the skin creates the need of a counter-irritant to be applied internally, and that cause and effect are thus logically joined together. It has not escaped observation, however, that bay rum costs $3 a gallon, and that a copiously whiskered generation like that inhabiting Holyoke sops up a generous quantity of the expensive fluid, thus shaving down the barber's modest margin of profit and creating in him a strong incentive to cry down the moral influences attending the use of the volatile and fragrant distillation named. It is thought that the profession may have engineered the crusade against a harmless and refreshing toilet balm, being instigated thereto by sordid purposes rather than the moral and reformatory ones which they lay claim to. They have united in the agreement to banish bay rum in their business and use only cold water instead, but the chill of that application will most likely multiply rather than diminish the number of drinks taken in the commune. The movement is not important enough to spread very far, and Holyoke will quite likely have a monopoly of it till it gets tired and comes back to its old-fashioned customs and toilet waters.

If the dispatches from Odessa are correct as to the motives they assign for the action reported, the Russian Douma will be a most imperfect organ for the expression of the popular will. The prohibition of all political meetings from fear of disorder, the arrest of sixty-six candidates "because they displayed too liberal tendencies," and the order to the electors to choose reactionaries amount, of course, to the denial of representation. It is a stupid policy. The resentment implanted by such repression will not remain permanently without effect. A year ago the Russian workmen had no rights to be violated. A year from now it may be found more unsafe to violate them than to respect them.

"Free alcohol" has an insidious suggestion of unlimited intoxication which may turn the minds of the sensitive and suspicious against the bill recommended by the House Committee of Ways and Means. But distrust is wholly misdirected in this instance. Free alcohol, that is to say, untaxed alcohol so treated under Government inspection as to be made wholly unfit for drinking or for medical purposes, is as harmless as coal oil morally and more innocent as concerns physical risk. It is an element of great value in the arts and manufactures of the country and for fuel, light, and power, and it may be made a profitable by-product of the farm. The tax ought to have been removed years ago. The testimony in support of the repeal is simply overwhelming, and has been for near a score of years. The bill will doubtless pass the House, but may be held up in the Senate. It ought to pass that body also, for there is not a single rational argument against it so far as we are aware.

Speaker CANNON can do nothing better for his party and for the country than to continue to sit hard on the Ship Subsidy bill. It is reported that a deal is proposed to him by which the Senate will accept his views on the Statehood bill if he will consent to the passage of the Senate subsidy measure. That would be the most reprehensible log-rolling. The two things are in no sense connected. Each House should be responsible for its own action as to each. It so happens that the Senate is dead wrong as to the Subsidy bill and the House is equally wrong as to the Statehood bill. Here is a case where emphatically two wrongs do not make a right. The Subsidy bill has only a local support at best, and the Middle West, in which Mr. CANNON is especially interested, is strongly opposed to it. Let it die.

STANDARD LIFE POLICIES.

Fire Insurance Offers No Analogy to Justify Present Agitation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The proposition to standardize life insurance policies, now under consideration at Albany, suggests a reference to the history of the introduction of compulsory standard forms in fire insurance.

To begin with, the demand for a standard form of fire policy came from the underwriters themselves. The reputable fire companies wished to get rid of the litigation which was almost inevitable when losses occurred, owing to differing policies on the same risks. In fire insurance the "loss" is generally "partial," and the liability of each company on the risk is dependent on the liabilities of each of the others. When policies differed greatly, the adjustment was always difficult and generally unsatisfactory. In life insurance, however, the "loss" is always "total," the liability of each company is independent and clearly shown, and usually no formalities are required except the simple "proofs of death."

As compared with the very general desire which existed for a standard fire policy, it seems that the idea of prescribing a compulsory standard life policy is merely the hobby of a very small number of people. There has certainly not been anything like an organized movement in favor of it on the part of company managers, agents, or the general public, but on the other hand it has called forth considerable opposition.

New York was not the first State to adopt a standard fire policy. In fact, the need for such a form had been felt long before any Legislature acted and steps had been taken to fill the want. As far back as 1821 a New York society of fire underwriters drafted a uniform policy which came into general use. In 1866, when the National Board of Fire Underwriters was organized, its first work was the introduction of a standard policy for the use of its members. The subject of a compulsory standard form had long been agitated in several State Legislatures, but without definite results until 1873, when Massachusetts adopted such a form, New Hampshire following suit in 1885. It was not until 1886 that New York adopted a standard fire policy, thus having the benefit of some sixty years' experience in the use of standard forms as the basis of its legislation.

How about the proposed standard life policy forms? Apparently they have been wholly formulated since the Armstrong Committee began its labors.

Then a word as to those who drafted the bills. The Standard Fire Policy was formulated by the New York Board of Fire Underwriters, a body of trained and experienced fire insurance men, who called to their aid the counsels of fire underwriters all over the country.

Just who are responsible for the standard life policy forms in the pending bills is not apparent. Their number is probably less than ten, of whom only a very few have had any practical experience in the business of life insurance.

If we must have standard life policies, would it not be better to consider the subject with a little of that thing called "common sense," rather than enact, on a few weeks' notice, laws which have been shown, on excellent authority, to be full of serious defects both in letter and principle?

"Automobile Tyranny."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At this time, when anti-automobile legislation is pending, it is desirable to call attention to one form of automobile tyranny which certainly should be stopped by legislative enactment, if the power to do so rests with the Legislature.

The particular form of tyranny referred to is the use by motorists of the narrower country roads, of which there are so many in this State, and to which the pleasure horse has virtually been banished.

Until recently the automobilists have been satisfied with the highways and turnpikes, but last Summer they invaded the lanes, by-ways, and bridle roads, barely wide enough in many cases to permit vehicles to pass each other, thus making the use of these narrower roads unwise and dangerous to the benighted driver or rider of the horse.

On roads wide enough for him to get away from the machine, the horse is becoming somewhat accustomed to the automobile, but to be crowded against one on a narrow road is more than the most passionate devotee of motoring can expect the animal to stand.

In common with many others, I think the Legislature should pass an act prohibiting the use by automobilists of roadways less than thirty (30) feet wide in any part thereof, and requiring the Road Commissioners throughout the State to properly designate by signboards the roads so prohibited.

Again the Acrobatic Gas Bill.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

These are facts:

The Consolidated Gas Company furnished gas to myself, wife, and servant in a five-room apartment for cooking purposes only for about two years, the bills ranging from $2.40 to $2.80 per month.

Bill for January, this year, was about $2.80.

Bill for February (28 days) jumped to $4.20, though gas was used as in the past for cooking only and by the same cook.

We called for inspection of the meter by the State Board, and paid a fee of 40 cents. In response—

An apparent employe of the Consolidated Gas Company called and took the meter away, and in a few days the Consolidated Gas Company reported that the registration was correct.

Is this the manner in which the public is to benefit by 80-cent gas?

A FUND FOR PEACE.

Progress of the Movement to Promote International Good Feeling.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since my last letter to THE TIMES advocating that a fixed percentage of the annual sum devoted to the army and navy be appropriated to provide funds for an active policy of peace, the editor of The Review of Reviews says in his March issue that "200 of the Liberal and Labor members of the English Parliament have accepted the principle as sound and practicable," and "probably the first step will be to create a national hospitality fund, to be placed at the disposal of the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary."

If the International Parliamentary Union, which we entertained so well here, should plan to meet in London next year, such a fund as this would be sorely needed, for without it the Lord Mayor might feel obliged to do as did our worthy Governor of New Hampshire at the Portsmouth peace meeting, pay the expenses out of his own pocket.

"The Fatherland" (Hague, Holland,) has well said that "mobilization and the maintenance of workers bringing about peace costs money, and just the lack of money with which to work prevents the practical abolishment of war, a very small fraction of the millions spent every year for military purposes for peace through force should be used to bring about peace through justice, that is, for war against war."

"In the place of their being a guarantee of peace," says Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, "the restless organization of armies is a danger to the peace of the world. The new English Liberal Government is in earnest to avail of every possible measure for peace."

Having a fund as mentioned Governments could busy themselves promoting international good feeling by disseminating accurate information to check the machinations of those who are working to bring about war, and could also entertain properly the representatives of other nations.

This idea, so practical and so sorely needed, was commended by our late most able statesman, the Hon. John Hay, and by the great French Minister, M. Rouvier, and is approved, as I believe, by our greatest of peacemakers, Theodore Roosevelt.

We have our New York Peace Society and the Columbia University has its society, and there should be no delay in making a steady attack on accursed war. Man-selling has ceased from our land, so also should man-slaying. Let us have in every constituency in our land an arbitration league, whose members shall agree to vote only for that political party which will hold that arbitration of international disputes must be offered or accepted by our Government if offered to us by an adversary. Concentrate upon this issue and our cause is won.

RAGGING IN THE BRITISH ARMY.

Generally Brought On by the Victim—Promotion from the Ranks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a reader and admirer of THE TIMES, may I be allowed to reply to your article entitled "British and American Hazing"? An erroneous impression of the average British officer is likely to ensue from a careless acceptance of the reports of the Scots Guards ragging at present to hand.

I hold no brief for ragging or hazing of any kind, but I am sure that in the British Army at least the victim brings it upon himself, and the reasons therefor are much stronger than those submitted by the victim in this case. If his cabled statement is true—why did he join a Guards regiment, where, as every Britisher knows, the standard of regimental expenses is very high? Or, having joined and discovered his mistake, why did he not exchange into some inexpensive regiment where he would have much greater opportunity of acquiring or practicing his soldierly accomplishments, for the Guards see no service in India, and have for that reason less opportunity for rapid promotion.

You speak of the British Army as an aristocratic institution, as though aristocracy and the possession of money were synonymous. They are not—over there, or here, I hope. Also provision is made for the promotion of at least twelve men from the rank and file annually to the rank of commissioned officers. These are given allowances in addition to their pay to enable them to meet the requirements of their new position. Some in addition are promoted for gallantry or special services. The names of Gens. Macdonald (Sir Hector) and Hamilton must be familiar here. So you see we are not so frightfully aristocratic in the services over there, even if we do not make army surgeons into Generals or call naval engineers "Admirals."

Abundant Water Supply Near at Hand.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Engineer Falks's recommendations as stated in yesterday's TIMES on the subject of water supply are without doubt the clearest, most sensible, impartial, and businesslike ideas yet offered. Here are a few questions (and there are many more) which might be asked of the valuable (?) and high-salaried Water Commission:

Why is it that at Croton Falls, N. Y., a dam is to be built west of the village covering one valley and damming only the west branch of the Croton River, while if built south of the village the lake would cover four valleys and receive the flow from east and west branches and other small streams, and also give seven times the quantity of storage? The borings and engineer reports were all made at an expense of several thousand dollars one year ago, recommending this site.

There are many available places left for storage. For instance, four miles east of Golden's Bridge, Westchester County, lie the three Waccabuc Lakes, all connected and covering a large tract of land—they are natural spring and brook lakes. The outlet flows into the Croton system. Why not place a dam across the valley at the outlet of these lakes?

Germany in World Politics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Teuton's" letter in to-day's TIMES is interesting as a fairly temperate view of the Moroccan question from a German standpoint, although prodding British political and commercial aggression.

If "Teuton," however, will refresh his geographical knowledge with a glance at an atlas, he will find that his statement "Morocco adjoins (France's) territory in Tunis," is away off; Algeria intervenes.

Then when he glorifies the Vaterland with "in the last thirty-five years few people have lost their lives through the politics of Germany," what about the miserable killing of Germans and native Herreros, leave alone the immense financial loss, going on for the last two years in Southwest Africa?

Talking over the Kaiser's attitude in regard to world politics a friend remarks, "It is not so much his interference that ruffles as the bumptious way he does it," and another one adds:

Flighty Billie's show-off tricks
Give the world a pang
When he splurges with a clown's
Sudden bounce and bang;
For his butt-in antics yield
No more thrilling shocks
Than the children's German-made

A NEEDLESS SACRIFICE.

Seemingly Unnecessary Loss of Life at Bedford Street Fire.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is seldom, if ever, that any criticism is called for in the working of our admirable and efficient Fire Department, but the terrible loss of life sustained by Engine Company No. 14 at Monday's fire in Bedford Street should, I think, merit a thorough investigation by Commissioner O'Brien. It was evident to any novice that the buildings on fire were doomed and the tall walls of the seven or more stories of the factory were liable and likely to fall in all directions at any moment. Why, then, were any of the men allowed to work in the flimsy little shanties on Carmine Street, or anywhere in close proximity to the imminent danger of the tottering walls?

Chief Croker and Deputy Chief Kruger and a host of other experienced officers were in command and could not have failed to realize the terrible and threatened danger to the men who were so ruthlessly slaughtered. Should not the order to "back out" have been given and all precaution necessary have been taken to prevent the fearful fate of those brave men? Better a hundred buildings should have been consumed than one life needlessly lost.

I do not attempt to deny the danger always attending a great fire like this one—but the wanton killing of 14 officer and men should certainly call for a rigid and thorough "Court-martial" by the Commissioner.

Concerning Mr. Conkling.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What about Senator Roscoe Conkling? Who was the greatest Senator New York has ever had, and the Nation, too, unless it was James G. Blaine? Please answer.

A READER OF YOUR PAPER.

New York, March 30, 1906.

Mr. Conkling was a man of ability, energy, and high patriotic aims; but he was by nature an intense and rather narrow partisan, and in constructive statesmanship or broad legal views of the Constitution we do not think he was the equal of the Senators to whom we refer. This we say with entire respect to the memory of a great political leader, who commanded the devotion of multitudes of his fellow-countrymen.—[Editor TIMES.]

Treatment of the Mail Horses.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the horses used to draw the mail wagons in this city were properly cared for it would not be necessary to have them replaced by others, as they could be brought all the way up "to the requirements of the occasion," referred to by "H. M. B." That nearly all of them are ill-used or neglected is perfectly apparent to any one. As an example, any one passing the rear of the Post Office can always see several horses unblanketed in rain, wind, snow, or sleet, while the blanket reposes on the driver's seat—simply because he is too indifferent to put it on. The large wagons should have at least three horses to pull them, and nearly all the wagons now drawn by one horse should have two. If these animals were only used half a day this would not be necessary, but they are used all day, and it is no wonder that with the heavy loads and long hours they should closely resemble bags of bones.

I see by THE TIMES that probably one woman will be elected as an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. I think it will be an excellent idea. It is to be hoped she will institute one or two changes, and that among them she will have agents of the society on the streets to remain all day in the busy sections of the city. Having them on the spot to prevent abuses would be far more effective than having outsiders always reporting.

From an Admirer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an old-time Bryanite I desire to thank you for the fairness and breadth of mind manifested in your editorial in to-day's issue of THE TIMES entitled "Mr. Bryan Upon Socialism." Such honest, clear-headed articles cannot fail to do much to heal the wounds class hatred and restore to reason both the "wild-eyed radical" and the "pig-headed conservative."

Of course, all people cannot be expected to agree upon all public questions, but a difference of opinion is no excuse for slander. It seems to me that it was about time that the flood-gates of abuse and misrepresentation were closed, and that passion was displaced by calm, sober thought. THE TIMES is certainly doing its part to bring about the reign of reason.

Pelham Park for Hospital.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why is it in the discussion of a suitable site for a new city hospital that so little has been thought of Pelham Park? That park lies on the open Sound, so that it meets all requirements, if the proximity to salt water is essential for such an institution.

The proposal to take Manhattan Beach seems to me to be inadmissible for many reasons. One reason alone would seem sufficient—its great cost. With New York bonds selling lower than those of many small cities, it is about time to think of saving money rather than spending more.

Why, under such circumstances, should the city neglect to avail itself of the land which it already owns?

THE BALLAD OF THE MARLINSPIKE.

The gallant schooner Marlinspike, as spick and span a craft
As ever luffed into the breeze, with spinnaker abaft,
Was sailing o'er a tropic sea, as placid as a lake,
When Elmer Twigg, a mariner, thus to the Captain spake:

"The flyin' fish is sleepin', Sir; the moon is hard alee;
The Muse, with her rambunctious paw, has been atICklin' me.
The voice of po'try fills my soul, so give me pen and ink
And lock me in the capstan head; I think I'm goin' to think!"

They did as Elmer bade them do; they gave him ink and pen;
They locked him in the capstan head and told him to say when,
And then the gunwale they belayed and made the scuppers tight,
And listened by the capstan head expectantly all night.

At seven bells they heard him snore; they said: "He's overwrought!
It must be so tremendous-like to wrastle with a thought!"
At half-past seven bells he cried: "My messmates, do not fear!
The Muse is hoverin' round me and she's even pinched my ear!"

And thus till ninety-seven bells; then dawned upon the crew
A light; they said: "We guess the game that Twigg is up unto!"
So they unlocked the capstan head. He lay in slumber deep,
And on a paper he had scrawled: "Oh, wot a thing is sleep!"

* * * * * * * * * *

He watches all the night and day and steers and writes the log
And swabs the deck and shaves the crew and cooks the things they like
And writes them up three times a month aboard the Marlinspike.

THOMAS R. YBARRA.

SUPT. SHEARER'S REMEDY FOR SCHOOL DEFECTS

Would Abolish Examinations and Substitute Teaching Tests.

PROMOTIONS WHEN MERITED

No Waiting to the Half Year's End, Says Head of Elizabeth, N. J., Schools in His Fourth Paper.

Having considered defects, causes and remedies, the question now before us is as to how each of the requisites of a more satisfactory plan may be established in any school without the expenditure of a dollar or the employment of an additional teacher. It is important that this be done in such a way as not only not to increase the teachers' already grievous burdens, but in such a manner as to greatly relieve both her and the pupils from senseless over-pressure.

The first requisite of a better plan of organization is accurate classification—that no teacher may be required to receive pupils not fitted to advance. The classification will be determined by the method of promotion or demotion from any grade to the next. Therefore, the basis of promotion must be carefully considered.

Final Examinations Must Go.

It is of vital importance that examinations be abandoned as tests of the fitness of pupils for promotion. This is a primary requisite to any pliant plan of organization, for they prevent necessary reclassification, make the time limit the same for all, and are, therefore, the cause and bulwark of the attempted uniformity in school work. No educator who values his reputation will defend them, but, since I found poor, defenseless little ones subjected to the baneful influences of methods handed down from the Middle Ages, some objections to them are briefly stated.

As generally conducted, they are addressed largely to a system of facts committed to memory. They prevent broad and progressive teaching, and make of the teacher a "grind." Every teacher who is to be judged by the results of the final test, must get into rut work and turn out machine pupils. No time can be spent in obtaining the clear explanation, the logical analysis, the useful and interesting knowledge; all these must be left behind; all are neglected for that which will pay in examination percentage.

Brings Mental Indigestion.

What knowledge the children do possess, if it may be called knowledge, has been forced by the hurried committing of "possible questions," "pointers," "tips," and "one-word answers," which cannot be understood or retained. As with the stomach, so with the mind; not that which enters, but that which is digested and assimilated, strengthens and develops. Overloading either the stomach or the mind leads to indigestion, disgust, and nausea.

Final examinations tend to much unnecessary drudgery on the part of the pupils and teachers, and cause many mental wrecks. The pupils know that, no matter what the condition of their health, a failure at this time means utter failure; means the spending of another term in going over the same work. That strength and blood which should go to build up the body and brain are therefore expended in senseless over-pressure. Few, except conscientious teachers and anxious parents can realize the dreadful results of the mental strain upon those of nervous temperaments.

The pupils who have been absent, or who for any other reason are unable to swallow the mass of indigestible material catechised into the rest, fail, even though their ability to do the work in the next grade is far above that of those who get the answers. Surely the question to be asked concerning the promotion of a child is not, What answers can he get? but, Has he the ability to do the work in the next grade? It is indeed a serious thing for a child to lose half a year in school. Little wonder that almost invariably their faculties are deadened and their ambition destroyed by such a failure.

Develops Unlovely Traits.

The effect upon character building of the great temptation to deceit and cheating and the increase in number of the cases of corporal punishment, are not the least objections that may be raised. All must agree that their tendency is to develop and foster deceit, jealousy, and selfishness on the part of the pupils and dishonesty, scolding, and irritability on the part of the teacher.

How often the child is punished by the tired, overworked teacher because of the dread that he may not be able to make a good showing in examination! Punished for not doing what perhaps he could not do and, more than likely, what would be best undone!

The time spent is one-third more than is necessary to give as much useful knowledge and more educational training. This statement is made advisedly, for experience proves that almost one-half of the time is spent in loading up for the examination.

But perhaps the greatest objection to final examinations is because of their tendency to eliminate the personal element and to make it impossible to respect to any degree the individual capacity of the pupil. So long as they remain so long will the serious charge, that "the public school machinery requires uniformity in every child," be well founded, if not unanswerable. So long will the grades be ironclad, as they endeavor to overcome not only the difference of temperament and home advantages, but even the difference in mental ability, which is predetermined.

Should Adapt Schools to Scholars.

Remove this cause of the present system of grading, and you make it possible to grade the schools in accordance with the ability of the individual child, rather than according to the supposed "average ability of the school" of fifty or sixty! Have not the scholars been fitted to the schools long enough? Is it not time to adapt the grades to the scholars?

If the above reasons are not satisfactory it may be asserted, without fear of successful contradiction, that for the purpose of estimating the ability of the children or of determining their power to do the work of advanced grades, examinations are useless and superfluous. Every teacher worthy of the name and place knows long before the examinations what its results should be. Therefore, the teacher, under the direction of the Principal, should determine the advisability of a pupil's moving to advance work.

This does not mean that there shall not be frequent, valuable teaching tests. These are necessary to thorough work along any lines. Some will say that the teaching test is but another name for the promotion examination, but a moment's thought will show that there is great difference between the two.

The one is a careful diagnosis at frequent intervals for the purpose of discovering the disease in its incipiency, that the proper remedies may be applied and the patient saved. The other is a blundering post-mortem to determine the cause of death. Most of us would have no trouble in choosing between the two. The trouble is, too many are looking for what is easiest for them, and not for what is best for the children.

Pupils Must Be Kept with Equals.

The most important requisite of a better plan of organization is such provision for reclassification as will enable the teachers to keep the pupils where they can work to advantage. The proper consideration of this important matter would demand a careful discussion of the advantages of the different class intervals. However, space does not permit such a consideration at this time. If there is objection, from any in authority, to my statement that there can be no proper plan of organization with the grades a half year apart, as they are in New York, I will later give attention to this subject.

I believe all thoughtful Superintendents, Principals and teachers will agree that it is of vital importance that the classes be but a short distance apart, in order that pupils may be reclassified at any time that the best interests of the children demand reclassification. On this subject Dr. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education, says:

"Thirty classes between the first and the eighth year are possible in large schools in cities. That all cities do not avail themselves of this possibility is one of the most serious defects in American school supervision."

How to Adopt a Rational Plan.

In my book on "The Grading of Schools" I have explained, in detail, how it is easy to obtain such a plan of classification as will provide not sixteen grades a half year apart, but fifty to sixty divisions but a month or two apart. While space forbids a fuller explanation at this time, the idea may be made clear by an illustration.

Take, for example, any grade in any school of the city. There will probably not be less than 160 pupils of that grade in the school. Instead of roughly grading the pupils by age or size, let the teachers and Principal arrange them accurately in regular order according to advancement and ability. Grading by age or size is no more sensible than the plan used by the teacher who put the boy in the "B" division because he had the "hives."

In the first room place the forty who seem to be able to advance rapidly; place the next best in the next room; place the next best forty in the next room; place the forty who seem least advanced in the lowest room.

Allow each class of pupils to go forward just as fast as they can do the work thoroughly, broadly, and well, but no faster. In a short time you will have in that grade four classes a short distance apart. Because of application to work, regular attendance, and other reasons, differences will soon appear. Divide each class into two divisions according to ability to advance in the two or three most important subjects. In a short time you will have sixteen divisions of the grade about a month apart, in place of having four classes attempting to do the same work.

Sixty Divisions Below High School.

As there are eight grades below the High School, this arrangement in all the grades will give at least sixty divisions a short distance apart.

When, because of absence, sickness, lack of application, or any other reason a pupil falls behind, place him in a lower division where he can work to advantage. When, because of regular attendance, application, home advantages, or any other reason, a pupil gets ahead of his class so that he does not receive benefit from the instruction, place him in the next higher class, which is about a month in advance of his present class. This same plan also works well in the High School.

When pupils finish the work of one grade satisfactorily, let them start at once upon the work of the next grade in place of waiting until the end of the term. Thus every pupil will advance regularly through the course at the rate which seems best suited to his ability.

Soon a stream of bright pupils from the lower divisions will be found entering the next higher division and the congestion in the lower grades will be a thing of the past. All will be encouraged to press forward by regular, daily, moderate, incentives, in place of being discouraged by the nerve-shattering, time-wasting, mind-killing, marking time, waiting for others. Even the slowest ones will surprise their best friends by their progress, while the slower will be none the less regular and certain than the progress of the brightest.

With such a provision, in place of the teachers being forced to fit every pupil into one of sixteen iron-clad grades, the Principal and teacher can carefully suit each one to one of fifty or sixty divisions, and even these can be made more or less adjustable. We demand adjustable desks to fit the childrens' varying physical differences. Why not insist that the work also be made more elastic, that it may be adjusted to the differing abilities of the individuals and the varying power of the same individual?

Can Be Used in Any School.

Does this plan not appear reasonable? It can easily be adopted by any school. If by one school, then it can be adopted in any city no matter what the size, for every school system is simply a collection of a number of schools which are the units. The plan is therefore just as feasible with 500 units in a city as where there are five.

The third requisite of a proper plan of classification which I have mentioned is that children should be allowed to go forward as fast as they are able to do the work well and no faster. If any one will assert that this is the condition in New York or that this is not what common sense dictates, I will endeavor to answer the assertion.

With the first two requisites met, this third one can be met without any trouble. Elsewhere I have mentioned devices and suggestions by aid of which any one can meet this requirement.

Vaudeville to Help Stony Wold.

A vaudeville entertainment is to be given on Friday afternoon of this week in Carnegie Lyceum for the benefit of Stony Wold Sanitarium, Auxiliary No. 1. This is to raise money to send patients to the Sanitarium this Summer. The performers will include Frank Lincoln, monologuist; the Columbia Philharmonic Orchestra, the French dancers from "The Vanderbilt Cup," Joseph Hart and Carrie de Mar, Grace Cameron, Emma Carus, Cole and Johnson, Annie and Jennie Yeamans, Cheridah Simpson, and Billy Clifford. The tickets are $2 each.

APRIL'S FIRST SUNDAY CALLS OUT ALL NEW YORK

Spring in the Sunshine with Winter's Tang in the Shade.

THOUSANDS IN THE PARKS

50,000 at Coney Island Looking for Summer Pleasures Yet to Come—And Rockaway Has a Crowd.

New York spent its Sunday out of doors. It was coldish in the shade, except in spots sheltered from the wind, but in the sunshine it was well worth being alive.

Half of New York was in Central Park, according to Head Keeper Snyder of the menagerie and the policemen in the driveways. The color specked vistas in every direction bore out their statement. From every path and roadway great streams of humanity, made bright in color by the gay plumes on the women's hats could be seen among the leafless trees.

Nobody remembered a finer early April Sunday, and nobody remembered when so many persons had drifted to the Park. It was fine for driving, fine for riding, and finer yet for just plain walking—and most people walked. The air had a tang and crispness in it that made Winter clothes feel suitable without detracting from the pleasure the sun gave.

Strange to say, none of the attendants in the park were flattered by the monster crowd. "Nowhere else to go," they said. "Neither Coney Island nor Newport have opened for the season yet, so they fall back on the Park."

They seemed right in part there. In automobiles and carriages on the driveways you caught glimpses of faces rarely seen there in Summer, and in the walks were more faces familiar in later seasons on the Coney Island boats. Yet Coney Island had a crowd, too, yesterday.

The signs of Spring are meagre yet in the Park. Trees and shubbery are barren of leaves and buds, save to the imaginations, which sees them long before the common mortal. In patches here and there on lawns, however, you can discern a spot of green. Instead of flowers there was here and there a little white pine stick—that's where the flowers are to be a little later.

The gardeners have marked the spots. Here and there a tulip stalk, those early harbingers of Spring, had pushed its head above ground. Spring was only in the air and sunlight felt by the romping children. It was a day of promise of the natural beauties soon to come.

There were no accidents to speak of. Here and there a rider had trouble with his horse, but the few runaways were captured quickly and without damage.

Despite the cool breezes there were 50,000 visitors at Coney Island. It wasn't exactly a typical Summer Coney crowd, but those who visited the resort found plenty of amusement to open the strings of their pocketbooks. From early in the afternoon the Bowery had a crowd that pushed back and forth and stirred rival "barkers" to outbark each other.

Steeplechase Park threw open its doors, and was as busy as could be. Coney this season is flooded with biblical themes—the Crack of Dawn, the Deluge, Creation, and Judgment Day are only a few of the titles appended to shows to be produced this year. The amusement purveyors believe that the public is clamoring for shows of the weird order, and are making plans accordingly.

Fred Thompson was at Luna Park early in the afternoon and gave a TIMES reporter an idea of the magnitude of the Luna Park of 1906. Practically the whole park has been torn down to make way for larger and better amusements. The whole is reminiscent of the Court of the Golden Fountains at the Hippodrome, with a great deal added. The former dining room has been razed, and a better one built.

The old fire show has been replaced by a spectacular production termed "The Rapids." A pump which furnishes 40,000 gallons of water a minute will provide power for a mammoth cascade in the newest thriller. The "Train Robbery" is another spectacle which will compete for hair-raising honors. A real engine and train of cars have been provided.

The Trip to the Moon is to remain. Last Fall Fred Thompson gave orders that this production be taken out, but before he left Europe he cabled orders that it must stay. It started him on his career, and he said yesterday that it was like losing a child of his own to remove it.

At Dreamland little work is being done, but the owners expect to have the park opened on May 12, when Luna opens.

The loop the loops and scenic railways were running at full blast yesterday, and are as popular as ever. Some April fool jester placed a large sign near the main entrance to Luna Park announcing that it would open to the public, and the sleepy watchman argued until he was blue in the face trying to convince the people that they could not get in. The perpetrator was not discovered. Not a single accident was reported to the police.

There was an unusually large number of visitors at Rockaway Beach, and the few resort proprietors who had ventured to get ready for early Spring business reaped a substantial reward. It was the liveliest Sunday at Rockaway since the season closed last year.

A garage capable of housing 100 automobiles is being erected in Central Avenue, and will be ready for the opening of the season. The building is to be fireproof and fitted for the care and repair of automobiles.

THE GOAT'S THE SIGNAL.

That Means a Certain Harlem Poolroom Is Temporarily Closed.

There is a poolroom keeper in Harlem who has found it rather hard sledding lately. The police have been watchful, and his trade has been able to flourish only intermittently. One week the "boys" found the place running full blast, and the students of form could follow their fancies till the last race came over the wire at 6:30. But a few days later the proprietor always deemed it advisable to "go slow," and when the regulars arrived they were told there was "nothin' doin'."

There was a good deal of grumbling among the patrons as a result of these frequent interruptions of the sport, or science, of picking the winners. Sometimes one of the bettors ran up to the place a few minutes before his "good thing" was scheduled to start. Then when he heard there was no play that day it was too late to reach another room in time to bet on that race.

"They ought to hang some sort of a sign out so that we could tell easier if they were taking bets or not," said a disgruntled bettor after he made several trips to the house only to be told it was "all off." The matter was broached to the proprietor of the place, and he soon devised a scheme by which his patrons could see how the land lay as soon as they turned the corner near the poolroom. And his method was of a distinctly Harlem origin.

"Boys," said he, "you see this vacant lot next my joint. Well, if there's a billy goat tied to that post there, that means skiddoo. But if there's no goat, walk right in and bet till the cows come home."

The scheme has worked wonderfully. All a man has to do is to cast his eye down the street, and if the goat is in the lot he looks for another place to risk his money. Should there be no goat in sight he knows the coast is clear, and approaches the doorkeeper, knowing that he will be admitted.

EAST SIDE'S APRIL JOKE.

It Took In Even Florrie Sullivan, Besides Other Famous Persons.

"Gus" Anger, who is a retired baker, and his chum, "Tom" Nugent, sent out invitations to all their friends on Saturday to come around and celebrate their new proprietorship of the saloon, at Park Avenue and Eighty-fourth Street. Ordinarily that establishment is the property of Charles England, but the invitations were so worded that England's proprietorship was taken to be a thing of the past, and this gathering to be a "grand opening." The supposed new proprietors were on hand early to receive the guests.

"This'll be the grandest blowout of the year, if all the boys show up," they said.

All "the boys" did show up. Alderman Florrie Sullivan was among the first to arrive. He was resplendent with a brand-new scarfpin of the horseshoe pattern, made of real diamonds, and nearly a yard wide.

"They're the goods, boys. Don't laugh at them," said Mr. Sullivan, when some one cast a suspicious eye at the stones.

He patted Anger on the back and poked Nugent in the ribs by way of congratulating them on their rise in the world. In fact, the supposed new owners received the glad hand on all sides and wishes for lifelong success in their venture. They took compliments modestly.

Before midnight nearly every well-known character of the east side had dropped in. There was August J. Glotstein, far famed as the President of the fishing club bearing his name. With him came Jake Newfield, Mayor of Poverty Hollow and possessor of a notorious voice; the Hon. Phil Wissig, and another ex-member of the Assembly, "Ed" Rosenstein. The medical profession was represented by "Moze" Mendelssohn, official corn doctor of the Florrie Sullivan Association, and his confrere, "Doc" George Roe, the original doctor who "never used the knife."

Musical entertainment was provided by "Big" Dell, a 300-pound motorman, who in addition to his daily duties on the front platform fills the office of President of the Watermelon Club. He is incidentally a star pianist.

They all managed to keep things lively until after midnight. Then as each slipped out Nugent gave him a souvenir in a sealed envelope, telling him not to look at it till after daybreak. When they did open the envelopes they found a card inside with this inscription:

APRIL FOOL.

Anger and Nugent have not bought anybody's saloon and the whole entertainment was merely a gentle reminder of the time of year.

McCURDY VERSES TO NAST.

They'll Be Sold at Dispersal of Cartoonist's Property.

An autograph letter and an original autograph poem of Richard A. McCurdy are among the interesting things in the sale of the literary property of the late Thomas Nast, cartoonist, which will be begun to-day by the Merwin-Clayton Company.

Both letter and poem are addressed to Nast. They are accompanied by a typewritten copy of the poem and an addressed envelope. The postmark on the envelope has the date of the month, Nov. 21, clear enough, but the year is so indistinct that the date cannot be made out.

McCurdy got up a hunt on election day for his friends, and invited Nast to join them. The cartoonist, however, preferred the less-strenuous plan of remaining at home and drawing humorous sketches of the hunt, which he presented to McCurdy and his friends. The verses were McCurdy's acknowledgement of the pleasure Nast's sketches had given him and his friends. Here they are:

"No risks I'll run," said the man of fun,
Who was clever with pencil and pen.
"And neither my neck nor my fast I'll break
With the ruck of the hunting men,
But my ease I'll take and sketches I'll make
About free trade and protection;
I only wish that just 'where I am at'
I was certain this day of election.

"If I go to the Plains I shall have for my pains
An attack of acute indigestion;
If my life were insured or I were inured
To croppers, I never should question
The wisdom of breakfast at 1 P. M.
As a regular hour for refection,
I'd join the hunt and as one of them
Jump fences 'till after election.

"I know that they'll miss me up there on the Hill,
They'll wish I were there to greet them,
But I'll show that I bear them a right good-will,
And am sorry I can't go and meet them.
God has given me skill to draw at my will Cartoons for a Nation's inspection,
My wit I'll devote, after casting my vote
To their pleasure, this day of election."

So said and so done. Had he known of the fun
And the ardor his humor created,
He had surely been there to enjoy his full share,
And be welcomed and con-grat-u-lated. [sic.]
Two collarbones shattered, coats torn and hats battered,
Proved the run to be simply perfection,
But their joys were all missed, for he couldn't resist
Making jokes on the hunt that election.

WOULD HAVE COLLEGES TEACH DRAMATIC ART

Otis Skinner and Dr. Felix Adler Take This View.

BOTH SCORE BERNARD SHAW

He Preaches Too Much, Says Dr. Adler—"Mrs. Warren's Profession" Too Real, Thinks Mr. Skinner.

Dramatic art, its abuse, its value to the world of to-day, and its possibilities for the future, was discussed by Otis Skinner before the Society for Ethical Culture at Carnegie Hall yesterday morning.

A department in Columbia or some other large university for the teaching of dramatic art was advocated by Mr. Skinner and Dr. Felix Adler and the plays of G. Bernard Shaw were roundly scored by the two speakers. The subject of Mr. Skinner's address was "The Ethics of the Theatre."

"I have been asked to speak on the stage and its relation to the moral life," said Mr. Skinner. "The theatre must be moral to be an art. To be an art it must be beneficial, for art is uplifting. Think of a life without a song, without a picture or without architecture. You can't imagine such a condition. It is all right to talk about 'going back to nature,' but there must be something in our lives to uplift us. That is art. When the poet Longfellow told the actress Mary Anderson to read poetry, he should have added, 'See a play.'

"Illusion is the first handmaiden of theatric art. It is her magic wand that lifts us out of our workaday lives. I recall the performance of melodrama in Chicago when this element of illusion was so completely maintained that a man leaped over the footlights and stopped the progress of the scene.

"'Art is only great,' said Whistler, 'when all traces of the means used are vanished.'"

G. Bernard Shaw and "Mrs. Warren's Profession" were then attended to. Mr. Skinner said:

"We will take the play written by that clever Irish dramatist lately. It was announced to be placed on the stage. It had been printed in book form and widely read and known. Protests had been made, but it was produced. It should not have been placed on the stage. It was played one night by a clever set of artists and was suppressed. It was real life. It was too real. It was justly withdrawn. It could never have uplifted the stage. But the play from a literary standpoint was superb."

Mr. Skinner then advocated the establishment of a chair of dramatic art in some university, and added:

"You cannot kill dramatic art. No manager desires to produce tawdry plays, but they must give the people what they desire. The dramatic child will grow, and I feel that his future is most promising."

Dr. Adler said that moralists should keep their hands off the drama. It is bad art to preach, said Dr. Adler, and added that the trouble with Shaw's plays was that they preached. Said Dr. Adler:

"The plays that you make by patronizing them are like the politicians you make by electing them. The masses of people should have the best of art. A dramatic department in a college is as important to the future welfare of the Nation as a school for painting or sculpture."

In closing he denounced the star system of theatres.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

IN MEMORIAM.

By the death of Doctor Selwyn A. Russell, which occurred at his home in Poughkeepsie after an acute illness of three days, in which his physicians alternated between hope and fear, the world has lost a man who, by reason of rare mental ability, Christian character and refined personality, was beloved and respected by all who knew him.

After graduating from the Albany Medical College and studying in Vienna, Doctor Russell spent some time in travel. He was one of the intellectual men of Poughkeepsie, and his wide and intelligent view of the affairs of the world marked him as a conversationalist of unusual interest.

That those who knew him best felt that the world was better through his unselfish and spotless life seems but a fitting tribute to his beautiful character.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Under circumstances which afforded complete excuses for thoroughgoing weakness, the stock market in the early days of last week displayed rather noteworthy firmness, yielding grudgingly to unfavorable advices from Indianapolis, the scene of the conference between the bituminous miners and operators, and recovering after each of these relapses something more than the ground lost in them. With the official declaration of a strike in the bituminous regions and a suspension of work in the anthracite districts pending further negotiations this week, prices rose sharply. For this exhibition of steadiness in the face of normally depressing conditions it is possible to find numerous explanations aside from that always held in reserve in the financial district that the stock market never does quite that which one expects. The long and severe decline in prices from the high point which was touched in January may well be adjudged at least a partial discounting of the effects of a strike; the passing of stocks from weak hands into strong in the course of this decline is likewise a matter to be taken into account, and so is the prosperity the country over, which continues with only the slightest abatement, as is illustrated in such remarkable railroad earnings reports as came to hand last week. But perhaps more important than these matters has been the abiding faith that the problem presented in the differences between the factions in the coal dispute would finally be submitted to President Roosevelt under conditions similar to those ruling in 1902 and the expectation that a similar happy outcome would follow this step. The actual submission of the points at issue to the President for arbitrament has come about, and while the belief is still cherished that Mr. Roosevelt will bring about a settlement of differences, a failure in this regard will cause less anxiety than it would were it not for the fact that so great a percentage of the bituminous operators are willing to grant the miners' demands that this production will go far to ameliorate the effects of a strike elsewhere. The question of a strike in the anthracite regions is still in abeyance and the issue here cannot, of course, be foreseen, although Wall Street finds matter for cheer in the fact that the anthracite producers have on hand supplies amounting to almost one-sixth of a year's production, while the chances of a long-drawn-out conflict are diminished owing to the curtailment of income which the union would suffer if the miners in both the bituminous and anthracite fields were out of employment at the same time.

The developments of chief interest in the money market comprised additional engagements of gold in Berlin for shipment to this city, these amounting in all to some $2,250,000, and the activity in call-money rates which was due, of course, to the demands made upon our banks by the unprecedented interest and dividend payments which must be cared for this month. The gold which will flow into this city on last week's engagements comes to us as the result of conditions so peculiar that great international banking houses here have been unable to participate in the movement, which for this reason has failed to present the breadth of other import movements that in the past have served to turn an unfavorable money market into a favorable one. The first engagement of the season, $1,250,000, was made in London, and represented an ordinary transaction in exchange, facilitated by special factors offsetting a not wholly favoring rate of exchange. The other takings of gold, however, have been due to the close working agreement between one of our great banks and the banking house of Mendelsohn in Berlin, which, it will be recalled, is the fiscal agent of the Russian Government. The house of Mendelsohn has received from Russia from time to time, as the cables have faithfully reported, large amounts of gold from St. Petersburg, much of this in the shape of American gold coins secured by Russia during the business depression here in 1893. It is this gold which the importing bank here has secured from the Berlin banking house, and efforts of international bankers here to make like engagements of gold in Berlin through their representatives there have met with the information that except from the source described no gold was obtainable. In the absence of a full explanation of this peculiar situation the movement has been attributed to preparations for the Russian loan, but just why such preparations should follow this form has not been made clear. In spite, however, of the lack of breadth which an import movement of this nature exhibits, there are at work factors which bid fair to place the foreign exchange market in such a position that importations may become more general, and the steady decline in demand sterling rates throughout the week was reassuring in this respect. Outside of the probable easing in European money markets following the Algeciras settlement the most important matter working toward such an inflow is the persistent buying of our bonds by European investors. To note only a single instance, the sales of recent issues, notably of industrial bonds, such as those of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, to Dutch investors alone last week were so heavy as sharply to depress Dutch exchange, and this buying movement of American securities gives every indication of continued growth, for in contrast with the vacillating doubts and hopes of investors here is the firm faith of the European investor in the prosperous development of this country. The rise in call money rates was properly considered a matter of momentary importance only. There can be little real complaint of activity in money which has been brought about because our banking institutions are compelled to finance the greatest interest and dividend disbursements ever made at this time. These disbursements are estimated at nearly $65,000,000, $30,000,000 of which represents industrial prosperity and $29,000,000 the share of stockholders in railroads.

One feature of the week which did not escape Wall Street's observation was the apparent check to the tide of hostile sentiment against corporations, which has run so long and strongly that even the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the United States Steel Corporation felt compelled to acknowledge the baleful possibilities upon business which it might have if permitted to go unstemmed. Like the beginnings of all movements which oppose an influence that has long held sway over the minds of many people, last week's counter movement to the wave found expression in various parts of the country, largely in the shape of a protest against indiscriminate condemnation of the great industries which have added so much to the prosperity of this country in recent years, and which, in fact, have made this prosperity possible. There was no plea for the managements of corporations where illegal or unfair methods have been used in furtherance of business ends, but a distinct plea was made for the exercise of discrimination and for recognition of that honesty of purpose which, beyond any question, exists in the conduct of the bulk of the Nation's business enterprises. And this sane, sound appeal fell upon good ground. The speech of Senator Knox upon the constitutionality of the Hepburn Railroad Rate Regulating bill was in a broad sense an illustration of this healthier movement, for while it contained a full recognition of the State's inherent right to regulate traffic, it pointed out with convincing clearness the injustice of depriving transportation companies of an opportunity to enter the courts to seek a judicial review of any rate which they thought unfair, a right which seems wholly elemental. Wall Street cares nothing for political parties as political parties, but it cares much for the policies for which political parties stand, and this, of course, explains the satisfaction with which it greeted the declaration of the powerful Democratic organization in this city against many of the favorite doctrines of the so-called Socialists, including that of municipal ownership. This declaration was of course accepted as indicating that the influence which this organization possesses will be thrown against the candidate for the Gubernatorial nomination whose entire creed is an aggravated Socialism. The chances for a successful issue of this campaign for the capture of the political machinery of a great political party were, in Wall Street's opinion, materially diminished, and inasmuch as Wall Street had regarded the prospect of its success as a menace to business, it is readily understood with what relief this development was welcomed.

TOLD ROUND THE TICKER.

JOHN S. STANTON some time ago had an experience with a company promoter which his friends were repeating this past week. Mr. Stanton was approached by a man who wanted to build an independent telegraph line between two large cities. The man proposed that Mr. Stanton sell $5,000 of the company's stock to commence the construction of the line. Mr. Stanton asked the promoter what assurance he could give that after the $5,000 had been spent money would be forthcoming to pay for the completion of the line.

"What greater assurance," the promoter asked, "could anybody want than that implied in the character of the men who are the Directors of this company? Do you not know, Mr. Stanton, that we have on our board Deacon Smith, Elder Jones, and a number of other church men?"

"That is all very well, Sir," Mr. Stanton replied, "but you must realize, Sir, that in Wall Street we do not build telegraph lines on piety."

Mr. Stanton was glad afterward that he let the scheme alone. The promoter, backed by so many church people, it appears, went to jail six months after he made his proposition to Mr. Stanton.

⁂

LYMAN J. GAGE'S retirement from the financial world next month will be something of an anomaly. Instead of taking himself to the strenuous tranquillity of a modern country retreat after the example of contemporaries too numerous to mention, Mr. Gage elects the city and restful travel. "I'm going to do just as I please," he says. "I'll spend some time in New York, some time in Chicago, and some time abroad. I've got a place in the country, but I shall not let it tie me up."

The ex-Secretary of the Treasury is known to most New Yorkers as a Chicagoan; it was there that most of the years of his business life were spent, but as a matter of fact he is a New Yorker, and was born in Madison County in 1836.

⁂

ALFRED H. CURTIS, President of the National Bank of North America, conducted personally the gruelling examination of his pilfering note teller that wrung a confession from him before he left the bank building in charge of the police. It might seem that Mr. Curtis ran something of a risk in shutting himself up alone in his private office with a younger man, who might well have taken desperate chances to escape the practical certainty of Sing Sing. It was long after closing hours, and the deserted street outside offered liberty to the thief at the price of a quick blow or perhaps a revolver shot. To those who remember Mr. Curtis's old prowess in athletics, however, the danger lay the other way about. It was the note teller who had reason to fear an encounter. His chief, as a comfortable majority of Wall Street men remember, was for long one of the best all-around amateur athletes in the city, and held more than one championship. Even after his own active days were past he kept up a keen interest in all athletic events, and it used to be that no New York Athletic Club event was complete without Mr. Curtis on the committee.

⁂

GOERGE CROCKER, who has just been admitted to special partnership in T. Suffern Tailer's new firm of Tailer & Co., is one of the Crocker family of San Francisco, from which he inherited his share of the Crocker millions. He has been a member of the Stock Exchange since 1897, and was once a partner of Theodore H. Price in the firm of Price, McCormack & Co. Mr. Crocker was traveling abroad when he was surprised with the tidings of his firm's failure for something like $13,000,000.

⁂

EDWARD D. JONES, one of the new partners in S. L. Blood & Co., is the second financial writer to become a member of a Stock Exchange house within the past few months. The first was Thomas F. Woodlock, who, like Mr. Jones, wielded his pen for The Wall Street Journal. Mr. Jones has been an active trader for a number of years, and is credited with having made and lost several comfortable fortunes in the market.

SOME BRITISH TRADES NOT SO PROSPEROUS

Condition Mainly Attributed to the Close of the Quarter.

ORIENT BUYS MUCH COTTON

Good Business in Woolens—Iron and Steel Industries Active—Pig Iron Warrants Weaker.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

LONDON, April 1.—The Times's financial supplement will say to-morrow:

"Industrial and trade reports for the last week are generally satisfactory, but in some cases the tone is less favorable, a condition mainly attributable to circumstances attending the close of the quarter.

"Wheat has turned in buyers' favor. Maize and oats are dearer. Oils and oilseeds show an upward tendency.

"The cotton trade has ruled quiet but firm for raw material. Spinners have done a fair business in yarns. Manufacturers have booked large orders for the Eastern markets.

"Native wool continues very strong. Colonial is firmly held at auction rates. Woolens had good business all round at prices occasionally better.

"Business in finished iron and steel continues active in most districts. In the Sheffield district further reductions are announced in forge and foundry iron. Pig iron warrants have weakened. Copper and tin had another active week, fresh high records being made in each case. Lead is quiet, while spelter is firmer."

ON THE PARIS BOURSE.

Lower Prices Despite Algeciras Settlement—Plan for Russian Loan.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

PARIS, April 1.—Business on the Bourse last week was very quiet. The coal strike in the north of France caused uneasiness, and alarming rumors of the health of the Emperor of Austria disturbed the market for a while, although prompt denials contradicted the report.

The news from Algeciras of an agreement practically reached afforded reassurance to the Bourse on Wednesday, and a firm disposition was displayed at the opening. Later, however, in the absence of active dealings, prices were not fully maintained, the desire to realize being manifest.

In many quarters the monthly settlement is in preparation, and while there is a large amount of unemployed capital, most bankers are curtailing their facilities for carrying stocks, with a view to reserving funds for many projected issues. As a consequence, many operators are realizing profits and reducing commitments. It cannot be said, however, that the market is positively weak, as a firm undertone is perceptible.

French rentes declined about three-eighths of 1 per cent.; Spanish, Brazilians, and Turks ½; Argentines unchanged; Russians a fraction lower; bank stocks well supported; Spanish railways lost more than a point on profit taking.

The complementary dividend of 50s. per share on Rio Tinto, although larger than heretofore, proved to be a disappointment. There were many holders who expected more.

Moreover, the fact that the output of copper for the year decreased 3,000 tons created a bad impression, and shares fell about 20f. South Africans were steady, although no dealings of importance took place. With the improvement of the situation here large amounts of French capital have been withdrawn lately from the foreign markets in order to provide for impending issues.

Many rumors are afloat in regard to a coming Russian loan, but it would be premature to fix the amount or rate. It is undoubted, however, that active negotiations are being held between French bankers and the Russian Government.

BIG RUSSIAN LOAN SOON.

Likely to be Over $250,000,000—Part May Be Issued in London.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

LONDON, April 1.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"All through the later stages of the Algeciras Conference preparations have been proceeding for the issue of a big loan for Russia. Now that the conference has practically concluded its labors, the preparations have been quickened, and the issue is expected immediately after Easter.

"It is probable that the rumors current in regard to the size of the issue will be found to have understated it, and that £50,000,000 will be the minimum instead of the maximum.

"The arrangements in Paris are said to cover £40,000,000. It remains to be seen to what extent other centres will participate in the issue. The possibility of raising subscriptions in London is being canvassed, and it is considered that the offer of bonds here might meet with a fairly favorable reception. There is no reason to doubt that if the new issue came out at near the terms suggested by rumor, 5 per cent. at a little above 90, it would attract a fair number of subscriptions."

MONEY VERY TIGHT IN BERLIN.

Commerce and Industry and the Banking Business All Suffering.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

BERLIN, April 1.—The tone of the Boerse last week underwent no appreciable alteration, the reluctance of speculators and the general public to interest themselves in Boerse transactions being noticeable.

Money was in strong demand in consequence of the payment of dividends and coupons and preparations for the approaching quarterly settlements.

The uncertainty of the political situation also contributed to reserve on the part of discounters. German commerce and industry and the banking business are all suffering acutely under the high official discount rate, 5 per cent. It is hoped that a reduction will be found possible in April, now that the Morocco question has been settled.

The tightness of money had a disquieting effect last week both in financial and in industrial circles, to counteract which the intervention of the Seehandlung appears to be contemplated. This institution has offered money for settlement purposes under the market rate to private banks of moderate size.

The action of the Seehandlung has given rise to the belief that the prolonged apathy of the Boerse is regarded by the Government as undesirable. This view is confirmed by the fact that the new loans of the German Imperial Bank and the Prussian State Bank, which were counted upon for the end of March, will hardly be available before May. Private discount is steady at 4⅛ per cent.

A further consignment of 15,000,000 rubles in gold is expected from St. Petersburg, and the fact that 60,000,000 rubles in Russian Treasury bills have been taken over by Russian banks is not without significance. It is rumored that these banks, being unable to dispose of Treasury bills to the public, transferred them to the keeping of Mendelssohn & Co., with a relatively large margin.

THE HOUSE OF MENDELSSOHN.

Something About the Big Berlin Banking House Now Sending Us Gold.

The fact that the National City Bank has been able to secure from Berlin a substantial amount of gold received in that market from Russia is attributed by bankers here to the fact that in addition to the advantages which it possesses as a National bank it has particularly close relations with the Mendelssohns of Berlin, the German bankers for the Russian Government. That firm has occupied a particularly prominent place in recent financial discussions owing to the proposals for a new Russian loan, in which that house will in all probability be an important factor. The position of the Mendelssohns in the German banking world is generally regarded as an exceptional one, a fact to which the customs of the firm serve greatly to contribute. A New York banker who has personal acquaintance with the banking community in Germany had this to say last week about the firm of Mendelssohns:

"The Mendelssohns are one of the most exclusive firms in the German banking world. Acceptances are secured from that house only under exceptional conditions. In themselves the commissions charged by the firm for acceptances is a bar to their use by most houses. One of the reasons for the success of the firm, I believe, is the exceptionally high character of their clerks and the manner in which these are treated. No firm in Germany requires harder work of its clerks and none treats them more liberally. It is the custom of the firm to credit to each clerk at the beginning of the year the full amount of his salary, and interest is allowed on such portions of the amount as are left on deposit with the firm. At New Year's every clerk receives a gratuity of 50 per cent. of his yearly salary. Meals are supplied to all the employes of the bankers during the time of their work, something which is entirely exceptional in Germany. If any of the men live out of the city and have to travel on the railroads to and from their work, they are supplied by the firm with railroad transportation for the whole year. Any employe of the firm who marries is presented with 10,000 marks as a wedding present. It is not surprising under these conditions that the firm has built up a force of assistants which is of an exceptionally high character."

THE STEEL TRADE POSITION.

Pittsburg Reports Continued Dullness Owing to Strike Outlook—Rail Purchases.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, March 31.—There has been no change for the better in the iron and steel market during the week now closing. The market continues stagnant and from the appearance of things there will not be much doing in the way of new contracts for some time. That the Indianapolis coal miners' convention had the iron and steel trade much worried and that the final decision there bore out their worst fears, is a well-established fact. It looks at this writing as if Monday would see the biggest strike in the history of the country on. In the face of this it was not to be expected that there would be any heavy buying movement in iron and steel or, indeed, in any other line of work, and it has not been so.

There was fair buying of heavy rails during the week, but this was the only line in which any activity at all was shown and even this was not up to the standard set for this time in Spring each year. The railroads as a general thing seemed waiting not only for the strike talk to blow over, but for the adjournment of some Legislatures which have been discussing the advisability of passing legislation not wanted or liked by the roads. However, there has been some buying, especially in the heavy rails, and prices continued stiff. For standard sections fifty pounds or heavier $28 was asked and gotten, for carlots, and for less than 500-ton lots there was a price of $30. Light rails of about 16 pounds brought $30, while 20-pound rails brought $28.50, and from 25 to 45 pound rails brought $28.

It had been expected that there would be fair demand for plates and other finished lines during the week, but there was absolutely no market, and when this part of the market fails matters look bad indeed, and the plate market, such as there was, went on the $1.60 basis, which is low. There has not been any great amount of billets put on the market, in fact, it may almost be said that there is a scarcity of billets. While no large sales are reported there is some inquiry for billets, and the Bessemer billets are going at $27 and $27.50. A small demand for structural shapes and bars was seen during the week, but prices remained firm, beams and channels at 15 inches or under, $1.70, over 15 inches, $1.80; zees, $1.70, and angles from 3 to 6 inches, $1.80.

The pig iron market remains nominal. There has hardly been enough movement in the week to call it a market, and the stock piles have swelled a trifle in consequence of the big tonnage being run, but not sold daily. The week's production was by far in excess of the demand, and the books are rapidly being cleared off. Bessemer Valley pig is quoted at $17.60 and $17.75, while Bessemer Pittsburg is quoted at $18.45 and $18.60. No. 1 foundry is quoted at $18 and $18.95, No. 2 foundry at $18.25 and $18.45, gray forge at $17.10 and $17.60. Basic pig is quoted $18.45 and $18.50 Pittsburg.

There was but little doing in the scrap market, prices remaining the same as last week, with few and small buyers. Iron bars continue quoted at $1.80, while wire nails are marked at $1.90 for carload lots, but the even $2 is asked of those who want less than the carload lots. Other prices along the line remain about the same as last week.

ATLANTIC SHIPPING TRADE.

Outlook Considered Encouraging—Profits of Holland-America Line.

The recent dissolution of the International Mercantile Marine syndicate and the distribution to its members of the full amount of the securities to which they were entitled under the underwriting agreement, none of them having been sold, has led to much discussion in regard to the prospects for the securities. Admittedly, the only thing that can give substantial value to the much over-capitalized shipping combination is sustained prosperity in the Atlantic shipping trade. A period of depression such as that which followed almost immediately upon the consolidation of the several lines which were merged in the International Mercantile Marine Company would be a very serious blow to the hopes of those who recently received their share of the company's securities after the syndicate managers had been unable during a period of three years to dispose of them to advantage.

Present indications, however, are that improvement rather than a return to depression is to be expected in the Atlantic shipping trade. The costly rate wars were brought to a close last year, and the companies included in the Mercantile Marine combination, as well as those outside of it, are admittedly in a much better position than they were two years ago. The earnings of the Cunard Line, announced last week for the year 1905, were sufficient to meet all depreciation charges, to set aside $250,000 for reserve, and to pay 4 per cent. on the company's capital stock. The Holland-America Line also did very well last year. A circular just issued by a well-known banking house gives the record of this company for 1905. It shows that the net profits for the year amounted, in round numbers, to $1,520,000, which was sufficient to provide for reserves and depreciation and to leave $880,000 available for dividends. After this available surplus, the company declared a dividend of 15 per cent. on its capital stock of $4,800,000.

The circular states that the company has been managed conservatively, as is indicated by the fact that during 1905 one of the company's steamers, the Amsterdam, was sold at a price $36,000 above the figure at which it was carried on the company's books. A new ship of the same name, the building of which was begun in 1903, is about to make its maiden trip. This new boat has a tonnage of 17,250. Exclusive of this and other tonnage under construction, the Holland-America Line owns a total tonnage of 78,440, which is carried on the books of the company at $3,570,000, equivalent to $45.51 per ton.

INFANT COTTON MONOPOLY.

Sea Island Seed Withheld from the World to Stop Competition.

The Sea Island cotton crop this year is likely to be considerably reduced through a combination of the South Carolina planters, who have agreed not to sell any seed out of the State. The best grade of this long staple cotton—the standard grade, in fact—comes from South Carolina. Georgia and Florida raise an inferior grade, dependent to a large extent for its quality on plantings of fresh seed from South Carolina. Last season and the year before were poor years for the Sea Island planters. The market for their high-priced crop is somewhat limited, and the output of Florida and Georgia makes an oversupply, with a consequent weakening of the price. Labor in the islands of South Carolina is scarce, high priced, and inefficient, and it is practically impossible for the planters to find a profit in the prevailing prices. The only salvation that the planters could see before them lay in cutting down the supply of long staple cotton. The Sea Island product furnishes a fibre from 1½ inches long to 2½ inches long, and it is essential to the manufacture of imitation silks and other high-priced cotton fabrics. The planters hold that the manufacturers should and would pay more money for the South Carolina staple if the more plentiful Georgia and Florida cotton was reduced in quality. And this they hope to accomplish by shutting off their competitors' supply of the all-important fresh seed. The combination of South Carolina planters to keep their seed to themselves will be regretfully heard of by the Egyptian Government. Egyptian cotton has been steadily deteriorating, and a Government commission which has been studying the causes recommended, among other things, the purchase of seed from the Sea Island planters of America.

WEATHER IN COTTON STATES.

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Copper Stocks Fairly Firm—Lake Mines in Request.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, March 31.—Despite the general market's variableness, there have been some exhibitions of strength by the coppers this week which go to prove the underlying confidence and assurance that this list is altogether too low and that we are on the eve of an uplift which will exceed any previous "boom." There has been very little profit-taking on the strong days, and very little selling pressure on the weak days. Holders are bullish and producers are firm believers in higher prices for the metal, and wonder is expressed that the selling agents do not increase their quotations. Greene Consolidated was restored to the Exchange this week and became active at once. Two more firms have put in wires from this curb to that in New York, and are doing a rushing business. Everything is in readiness for stirring times.

The old established Lake mines are in prime request. Activity is reported from almost every part of the camp. In Ontanagon County there is a deal of exploration going on, while diamond drilling is in progress in Keweenaw County by half a dozen companies. The new compressor of the Baltic will be ready early in May for production from No. 2 Shaft, which has been waiting some time. Official information regarding the developments in the Kearsarge lode at the Rhode Island property are lacking, but it is said that a fairly mineralized core has been extracted. This site is north of the Franklin Junior.

Mohawk's report shows a mining profit of $543,860 for 1905. The property of the Washington Mining Company has passed to the Keweenaw Mining Company, which is actively boring for the Montreal River and the Kearsarge lodes.

A letter published here from Houghton estimates, and purports to demonstrate, that the Baltic lode carries as much copper per running foot as the Calumet and Hecla conglomerate, and that it can be mined nearly as cheaply. This writer looks for rich developments by the Atlantic on this lode, and also says that Trimountain is "on its feet" again.

Greene Consolidated reports an output of about 5,000,000 this month. Col. Greene has, it is announced, made a coalition with the Federal smelting interests, which own a smelter at El Paso, to which it has for several years been shipping ore valuable for fluxing.

Next week is expected to see the new Clark concentrator at Butte in commission. Its daily capacity will be 800 tons.

The third furnace of the Mammoth smelter of the United States Smelting, Refining and Mining Company at Kennet, Cal., with a capacity of 150 tons of copper-silver-gold matt, has been fired up for a preliminary test, and works very smoothly. It will soon be in full operation.

Here are four annual balance sheets, showing excess of assets over liabilities: Calumet and Pittsburg, $36,335; Lake Superior and Pittsburg, $201,936; Pittsburg and Duluth, $270,667; Junction, $405,519.

GREAT BANK THEFTS

Bank of North America's Loss Recalls Other Defalcations.

ALVORD'S THEFT OF $690,000

Marine National and Second National Each Looted of $2,000,000 in 1884 —Additional Checks Upon Dishonesty Lead to New Devices.

The theft of $34,000 from the National Bank of North America by the bank's note teller, discovered on Thursday last, supplies another proof of the difficulty that exists in the way of guarding against loss through the dishonest operations of trusted employes. The bank's officers have already satisfied themselves that the loss sustained represented a long series of peculations which the teller covered up so successfully that no trace of the stealings was discovered despite numerous examinations of the bank's accounts. Though insignificant in amount compared with the loss suffered by the First National Bank six years ago, the cases in many respects are strikingly similar. In both cases it was the note teller that committed the theft, and in each instance the stealings were covered up from day to day over a long period.

It has been asserted that no way existed by which the peculations by the note teller of the National Bank of North America could have been prevented. The same assertion was made in October, 1900, after the First National Bank's note teller had succeeded in stealing the enormous sum of $690,000. It is now generally believed in banking circles, however, that the First National Bank has devised a system of accounting which makes impossible a repetition of the fraud which was perpetrated upon it by Cornelius J. Alvord, Jr. Probably the National Bank of North America, profiting by its own experience, will be able to put a check upon its future note tellers that will likewise render impossible further losses by the methods followed by Joseph A, Turney.

Bankers generally admit the difficulty of guarding against fraud on the part of the employes of banks. Naturally each experience such as that of the First National Bank and last week's loss by the National Bank of North America lead to the adoption of checking systems which in all probability serve to frustrate any effort on the part of others to follow precisely the same methods adopted by those who have defrauded banks in the past. At the same time there remains the possibility of other methods being adopted by dishonest employes who, through the familiarity with a bank's accounting, derived from long experience, may perhaps devise means other than those exposed in the past.

Some bankers difefr from this view, which has been expressed in many quarters whenever the question has been brought prominently forward by some bank's discovery that it has been robbed by one of its employes. Some claim that it is possible to check the entries in all departments of a bank so thoroughly that no one man could possibly defraud the bank over a long period as was done both in the National Bank of North America and in the First National Bank, as well as in the case of the earlier robbery of the National Shoe and Leather Bank. Probably it is safe to assume that various checking systems adopted from time to time render such thefts more difficult from one year to another. That they are not impossible is proved conclusively by the experience of the bank which last week discovered peculations which admittedly extended over a series of years.

Both Alvord's and Turney's irregularities were discovered by accident, and in each case by a clerk in the man's department. Turney's method was to defer the entry upon the bank's books of remittances received from out-of-town banks. Checks received from such banks passed through his hands, and it was his duty to see that they were properly entered. In addition to checks, he handled vast sums of money, often $100,000 to $200,000 in a day, much of this representing deposits which other banks in this city made with the National Bank of North America. By withholding for a day the entry of checks from out of town equivalent to the ambunt of his peculations he was able to cover up the amount he had taken, increasing the amount of the checks withheld in this way as his peculations increased.

Alvord adopted a more or less similar method. In his case the amounts abstracted from the bank's funds were covered by adding the amount to the item "exchanges for the Clearing House." By this means the note teller made his books balance and was able to conceal his thefts for many years. Each day the actual amount of the shortage was made good out of fresh funds received from out-of-town banks.

In the case of the National Shoe and Leather Bank, which in November, 1894, discovered the loss of $354,000, the dishonest employe had an accomplice who was a depositor of the bank. One of the bank's bookkeepers who handled the depositors' ledgers as well as the handbooks for a large number of the bank's depositors, was able to defraud the bank by crediting to his accomplice sums which he had never deposited. The bank's books were made to balance by subtracting these amounts from inactive accounts of other depositors. Of course, the bank's ledgers containing these manipulated accounts did not correspond with the handbooks held by the depositors, but as Samuel C. Seely, the defaulting bookkeeper, handled both the handbooks and the ledger, he was able by memoranda kept by himself to keep the handbooks straight so that the depositors were unaware of the fact that on the bank's books they had a smaller balance than their handbooks showed. Frederick R. Baker, the depositor of the bank who was Seely's accomplice, by means of the false entries made by Seely was enabled to withdraw the stolen funds in cash.

The loss of 690,000 by the First National Bank was the most startling bank defalcation announced in recent years. It is the largest, so far as is recorded, that any bank of this city ever lost by reason of the dishonesty of a clerk. Still heavier losses have been incurred by banks through dishonesty, but such losses for the most part have been the result of fraud on the part of high officers of the bank and sometimes of collusion between officers and one or more Directors.

in May, 1884, was looted by two or more The Marine National Bank, which failed of its officers and Directors of $2,000,000. One of the Directors concerned in the bank's loss, Ferdinand Ward, was sent to Sing Sing. The Second National Bank in the same year, through the speculations of its President, suffered a loss of nearly $2,000,000. The Chemical National Bank in 1898 suffered a loss of $393,000, but this was ascribed by the bank's officers to mistakes of judgment on the part of the bank's cashier in the matter of making loans.

In July, 1899, George M. Valentine, cashier of the Middlesex County Bank and Treasurer of the Perth Amboy Savings Institution, confessed to thefts from those institutions amounting to $125,000. In September, 1873, the New York Warehouse and Security Company, which did a banking business, failed, with liabilities of $2,500,000. The immediate cause of the failure was loans which were made to various corporations which were unable to meet the loans when they matured. Some of these transactions reflected on some of the officers of the institution, one of whom was accused of defrauding the institution of $500,000. Two leading sugar merchants who had secured loans from the bank failed at the same time. These merchants were Directors in the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway, which was then under construction. The men secured loans from the New York Warehouse and Security Company and pledged bonds of this road as collateral. It was asserted at the time, however, that the road itself had nothing to do with the loans made by these two Directors.
